Mr. HAUGEN. They may be stored if they are offered for storage.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For instance, dairy products, milk and cream, butter, eggs, fruits, meats, and things like that?

Mr. HAUGEN. If they prefer to take out a Federal license, that is their privilege.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is an enlargement of Federal jurisdiction over warehousing.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no question about that, provided they come in under the law.

Mr. ASWELL. May I say this is voluntary? You do not have to come in unless you want to. It is optional as to the coming in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the second amendment of the gentleman from Iowa to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I asked a question awhile ago which brought out some information which I think it is important to consider for a moment. It appears that this warehouse act, providing for storage warehouses, originally provided only for the storing of what might be called grain and like products. To be exact, the law that now exists provides that the products within the purview of the act shall mean "cotton, wool, grain, tobacco, flaxseed, or any of them." These are articles which ordinarily or usually come into interstate commerce. By striking out that definition of the word "agricultural products" it is going to be possible for these Federal warehouses to go into the general warehouse business and store all kinds of products of the farm; and I call the particular attention of the members of the committee to the fact that it would permit the warehousing and storing of dairy products, eggs, butter, milk, cream, fresh fruits, and fresh meats, and everything that is now stored in local warehouses in the States. I think that is too large a change in the existing law without any further consideration.

Mr. ASWELL. It is clear, however, that no warehouse or warehouse system need come into this system except by voluntary action.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I know that. That is the way all these things begin. They are always voluntary; it is always a matter of choice in the beginning. But it is an entering wedge toward the storage and warehousing of all these perishable products under the Department of Agriculture of the United States.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to ask the gentleman what could be the possible objection to the storing of these different farm products in Federal warehouses?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have the same objection to it that I have to the Federal Government encroaching everywhere on the activities of the States. Wherever these activities are necessary for the promotion of interstate commerce I will favor such legislation, but it does not appear that this is merely for interstate commerce. You are going now into the general storage and warehouse business of all kinds of farm products. The law as originally passed was restricted to that class of agricultural products that pass freely and usually in interstate commerce.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Can the gentleman name any agricultural products that do not enter into interstate commerce?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is in my district a large territory producing dairy products, milk and butter and cheese, and they do not send their products out of the State. Those products go to Chicago.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman will realize, however, that those products do not stop at Chicago. They are shipped from Chicago to other States. The gentleman has spoken of milk and cream in these warehouses?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. What can be the objection to it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. None except this, that we have plenty of warehouses and storage houses now established in the cities.

Mr. ASWELL. Are they not under Federal control now by the cold-storage regulations?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is this to be something in addition to that control?

Mr. ASWELL. It does not have anything to do with that at all. It does not deal with the same products.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But you are enlarging this legislation so that there will now be an additional law passed by the Congress of the United States with reference to that same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Committee on Agriculture, which submitted this bill, submitted with it a report. In this report there is no statement by the committee itself as to the effect of the Senate bill. All that the committee did was to include in this report a memorandum sent to the Senate by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. And a very comprehensive one.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It may be, but the gentleman has not yet stated whether this memorandum covers all the changes that were actually made by the Senate. Now, we find that by the elimination of the term "agricultural product," you are putting the Department of Agriculture in a position where it is going to control all kinds of warehousing and storing of agricultural products of every sort, including the perishable products to which I have referred. Now, I say in all deference that a subject of so large importance and so wide effect should have received more attention in the report of the committee, so that the Members of the House might have known just what this legislation was intended to do.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asked for information with reference to section 2, and he seemed to be satisfied with the explanation given.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What about the other sections?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman did not ask any more questions. I was prepared to go on and explain every amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What changes are made in section 5?

Mr. HAUGEN. Let me ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] says he has large dairy interests represented in his district. Does he not think the dairy interests are as much entitled to protection as the wheat growers? Why should we exclude the dairy products? One who has dairy products to store is entitled to the same consideration and the same protection as is extended to the wheat growers or the cotton growers or the tobacco growers. If the gentleman wishes to discriminate, that is for the gentleman to say.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no question of discrimination.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the only question involved in section 2 of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in view of the criticism which has been leveled at the committee and at the chairman's report, I want to say a word. From the discussion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] one would think these were Federal warehouses. They are simply privately owned warehouses that may be engaged in any line of business they desire, but have the privilege of coming under the Federal system.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In just a moment. I want to cover one more phase.

On line 8 of page 1, in reference to the scope covered by this bill, you will find that it only covers agricultural products that are stored for interstate or foreign commerce. It does not cover products that are not to be used for that purpose. If a man is running a warehouse he can come in if he wishes to and have the privilege of this warehousing system.

Now, it seems to me that the only controversy, as all the members of the committee know, is with reference to sections 6 and 18. Those were the only amendments offered by the House committee, and those were thoroughly explained by the chairman in the report. The only other changes were, for the most part, unimportant ones, except broadening the definition of agricultural products so as to make the bill more liberal, and that appears by the terms of the bill and of the previous bill, so I do not see any use in taking up a lot of time and trouble in explaining that in a long report.

Practically the only changes in the other sections are the insertion of the word "sample," so that instead of reading "inspect or classify" it reads "inspect, sample, or classify," because some goods are sold by sample.

The other change with reference to penalties has already been brought out by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. I do not see why the committee should spend a great deal of time in writing a great, long report, when they cover the very things about which there was any controversy. The other changes were of no consequence.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman says there is no controversy. Are there any printed hearings on this bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There were hearings.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am told by the clerk of the committee that there are no printed hearings.

Mr. ASWELL. There were hearings held.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand that they have not been printed.

Mr. HILL. I asked for the hearings, because I wanted to inform myself on this bill, and I could not get the hearings.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There were considerable hearings held on the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. We had no reporter present and they were not taken down.

Mr. HILL. Then there are no available hearings. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question, because he is conversant with the bill. It seems to me this bill really puts the mantle of Federal protection and Federal guaranty behind certain warehouses, thus giving them an advantage over State or private warehouses. I will ask the gentleman to look at page 9 and invite his attention to these words, beginning in line 2—and the owner of the agricultural products so converted, used, or removed may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be reimbursed for the value thereof out of any fine collected hereunder, by check drawn on the Treasury at the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture for the value of such products to the extent that such owner has not otherwise been reimbursed.

Now I would like to ask the gentleman if that does not create a class of Federal warehouses with direct guaranty from the United States Government behind it, such warehouses coming into competition with the State or private warehouses? It is a change of existing law.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is a change of law, but it is safeguarding the operation of the warehouse that is licensed by the Federal Government. The gentleman would not want the Government to license warehouses and not safeguard them in relation to goods wrongfully taken.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman says that this is throwing safeguards around the warehouses by the Federal Government, and that would mean almost the Federal Government going into the warehouse business. Is not that the case?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Of course, the Federal Congress has the right to regulate interstate commerce, and this applies only to warehouses engaged in interstate commerce. If the Federal Government is going to supervise and license warehouses it must assuredly, as a matter perfectly proper for the Government to do, throw safeguards around any warehouse licensed by the Federal authority.

Mr. HILL. I thank the gentleman.

Gentlemen of the committee, I think this is a very important question. This House yesterday, with the leadership on both sides of the House concurring, struck out the enacting clause in the so-called migratory bird bill because that bill was further Federal encroaching on the police powers of the States. With great reluctance I voted to strike out the enacting clause of that bill.

Now here we have a bill more far reaching, in my judgment. The gentleman from Texas has given a clear statement of this matter. It is quite true, as he says, that the Federal guaranty is put behind these warehouses. Here is a provision by which the Secretary of Agriculture shall reimburse anybody whose property is stolen, because they patronize this particular form of warehouse instead of going to the State or private warehouse.

There are no hearings available. I think we ought not to pass a measure of this sort, with such drastic changes in the law, without further consideration. On page 3, the report of the committee says:

> The amendments suggested to section 30 first enlarge the scope of offenses which a warehouseman might commit and for which he might be punished under this act; second, they increase the severity of the penalty which may be imposed; and third, provision is made for imposing penalties on persons who draw, with intent to deceive, a false sample of a product or who willfully mutilate or falsely represent a sample drawn under the act or who fraudulently grade or weigh agricultural products stored or to be stored under the provisions of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, report the bill back to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL) there were 21 ayes and 2 noes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Abernethy	Chandler, N. Y.	Garner	Kleczka
Almon	Chandler, Okla.	Gilbert	Knight
Ansorge	Christopherson	Glynn	Kraus
Anthony	Clark, Fla.	Goodykoontz	Kunz
Atkeson	Classon	Gould	Langley
Barkley	Codd	Graham, Pa.	Lawrence
Benham	Connolly, Pa.	Griffin	Layton
Blakeney	Crowther	Hawes	Linthicum
Bland, Ind.	Cullen	Hayden	London
Bland, Va.	Dale	Hays	Luhring
Bond	Davis, Minn.	Himes	McArthur
Bowers	Dominick	Hogan	McClintic
Braud	Drane	Huck	McCormick
Brennan	Dunn	Hutchinson	McDuffie
Britten	Dyer	Jefferis, Nebr.	McLaughlin, Nebr.
Brooks, Ill.	Echols	Kahn	McLaughlin, Pa.
Brooks, Pa.	Elliott	Keller	McSwain
Brown, Tenn.	Fenn	Kelley, Mich.	MacLafferty
Browne, Wis.	Fish	Kendall	Mead
Burdick	Focht	Kennedy	Michaelson
Burke	Frear	Ketcham	Mills
Burtness	Free	Kiess	Montague
Burton	Freeman	Kindred	Moore, Ill.
Cantrill	French	King	Morgan
Carew	Frothingham	Kirkpatrick	Morin
Carter	Gallivan	Kitchin	Mott
Mudd	Ransley	Slemp	Tillman
Murphy	Reber	Smith, Mich.	Tilson
Nelson, Me.	Reed, N. Y.	Snell	Tucker
Nolan	Riddick	Snyder	Turner
O'Brien	Rodenburg	Sproul	Vestal
O'Connor	Rogers	Stiness	Vinson
Overstreet	Rose	Stoll	Volk
Park, Ga.	Rosenbloom	Strong, Pa.	Walters
Patterson, Mo.	Rossdale	Sullivan	Wheeler
Paul	Rucker	Tague	Williams, Tex.
Perkins	Ryan	Taylor, Ark.	Wilson
Petersen	Schall	Taylor, Colo.	Winslow
Rainey, Ala.	Scott, Mich.	Taylor, N. J.	Wise
Rainey, Ill.	Scott, Tenn.	Thomas	Yates
Ramseyer	Shaw	Thompson	Zihlman
Rankin	Shelton	Thorpe

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3220, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 260 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of absentees for printing in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3220 and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill. I would like one moment to make a statement of my reason for this.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 253. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

UNITED STATES COTTON STANDARDS.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 14302, to establish and promote the use of the official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent deception therein and provide for the proper application of such standards, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14302, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to print in connection therewith certain letters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to print in connection therewith certain letters. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in connection with the bill that I now present to the House, if gentlemen will read the title of the bill they will see exactly what we propose to do, and that is to establish and promote the official standards of cotton now in use by the Department of Agriculture.

A brief summary of the sections of the bill is as follows:

Section 2 prohibits the use of any other standards than the official cotton standards of the United States in (a) any interstate or foreign shipment or transaction, (b) any publication or price quotation based on such a shipment, or (c) in the classification of cotton involved in such a shipment or transaction. Permission is given, however, for the employment of actual samples or private types or marks used in good faith when no standard is specified.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to examine classifiers of cotton for their competency and to issue licenses to grade or classify cotton and to certify its grade or classification in accordance with the official standard. Authority is also given to suspend or revoke such licenses in the event of their misuse.

Section 4 provides that cotton or samples may be submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for a determination of the true classification thereof, and that his findings shall be accepted by the courts as prima facie evidence of the true classification of the cotton or of its comparison with types or other samples.

Section 5 authorizes the Secretary to fix and collect charges for the services performed under sections 3 and 4.

Section 6 authorizes the establishment by the Secretary of Agriculture of official standards for cotton and prescribes that the standards now established under the United States cotton futures act, effective August 1, 1923, shall be the official standards for the purposes of this act. Provision is made for revising these standards as need may arise and for the distribution of copies to the public.

Section 7 permits the inspection and sampling of cotton by the Secretary of Agriculture which may be necessary in the administration of the act. The purpose of this section is to give authority to the Secretary for the proper enforcement of section 2, as well as to enable him to secure samples when necessary, to be used as the basis of his determinations under section 4.

Section 8 is intended to safeguard the standards by making it unlawful to counterfeit or alter any copy of the official standards, or to use any official copy which may have been condemned.

Section 9 prescribes suitable penalties for the violation of sections 2 and 8, and safeguards the integrity of classification of certificates issued under the act.

Section 10 authorizes the Secretary to conduct any necessary demonstrations, tests, or investigations, and to put forth necessary publications for the purpose of the enforcement of the act and for the improvement of methods of sampling and classifying. It authorizes also cooperation with any other department or agency of the National or State Governments.

Section 11 defines the words "person," "commerce," and "cotton," and makes principals responsible for the acts of their agents or employees.

Section 12 authorizes the appropriation of necessary moneys for the enforcement of the act and enables the Secretary of Agriculture to make necessary expenditures from such appropriations.

Section 13 contains the usual provision with reference to the constitutionality of the act.

Section 14 makes August 1, 1923, the date on which the measure becomes effective.

If we pass this bill it will extend the same privileges in all spot transactions that we now have in delivering spot cotton on future contracts. Several years ago Congress authorized the appropriation of the sum of $50,000 to be used by the Agricultural Department to buy and have manufactured several grades of cotton into yarns, so as to ascertain the length, strength, and the waste in connection with the various grades of cotton. They now have an official standard in cotton, but it is only used in delivering spot cotton on future contracts. Someone will say that the various exchanges of the country have adopted the official standard, and they have, but as I said a moment ago, it applies only in delivering spot cotton on future contracts. The buyer, for instance, buys from the producer in a small town, altogether on Liverpool grades or private grades, and because of the confusion thereof the buyer takes advantage of the producer in a great many cases, and not only fails to give him the Liverpool grade but gives him one or two grades under the actual grade. I speak to you now as a farmer producing cotton, one who has bought and sold thousands of bales of cotton. I have bought direct from the producer and sold to the man higher up, and that man then sells to the mill or exports to Liverpool. I had to buy this cotton from the producer, so as to deliver it to the man to whom I sold it. I knew at the time that the producer was being robbed of his product, but I had to buy so as to deliver to the man to whom I sold. Then, as a rule, this cotton, after it passes into the hands of the larger buyer, would be graded, not only as to color but as to length, for delivery to the mill or for export to Liverpool. Here I have a sample of cotton, and, by the way, this very bale of cotton was brought to the city of Columbia, S. C., by a farmer and sold as what the buyer calls "dog tails," while this very bale graded as strict good ordinary by the State grader. The difference or loss to the farmer would be about $5 per bale.

As a matter of fact, if the grader who is standing by between the seller and the buyer could have had the protection that my bill will give, in delivering this cotton on official standards, that farmer would have received a grade of "strict good ordinary" for the cotton. The difference between "strict good ordinary" and "ordinary" is $2.50 a bale, and below that it is $5 a bale, and sometimes a larger difference. In the meantime, not a single bale sold by the producer to the buyer is sold on the length of the cotton, but only on the color. When it passes in and through the hands of several buyers, when the last man sells to the mill, then the cotton is graded as to color and as to length and as to strength as stated a few minutes ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. In the State of Texas there are perhaps 20,000 different places where cotton is bought from the producer. Just how would this bill protect the farmer in those 20,000 different places in the sale of his cotton to the buyer at the particular local market?

Mr. FULMER. I can answer that very easily. In the State of Texas, and in South Carolina, and in many other cotton States there are now cotton-marketing associations. The farmers are rapidly joining these associations.

In my judgment the cooperative associations will mean the salvation of the farmer in the Southern States. They handle thousands of bales of cotton. They have their classifiers, but they are absolutely unable to sell and deliver to the buyer only on Liverpool grade and private grade. You are now thinking of the one-horse farmer who comes to town with his one and two bales. You want to know about his cotton. We have in South Carolina, under the Smith-Hughes Act, classifiers of cotton sent out by the State from the agricultural colleges. They are working at the county seats and State warehouses and the cooperative market association warehouses. Farmers can go with their samples, from 1 bale to 50 bales or 100 bales, to the county seat or warehouse near by and have their cotton properly graded by the State classifier. Then he comes back to his home town, and when the buyer will say to the farmer that this is strictly low middling cotton, he can say to the buyer I have had this classified by the State classifier and he has certified it to be middling cotton. This will serve as a notice and will tend to check the dishonest buyer. The honest buyer will be glad to accept, because under my bill he will have a comeback, whereas now he has to take the decision of the buyer at the other end or the decision of the exchange, and the buyers higher up compose the exchange.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The testimony shows there are about 829 counties of the South producing cotton, I will say, in connection with what the gentleman from Texas says. The only objection I have to this bill is section 7, which gives to the Secretary of Agriculture, if he wants to use it, the right to put a horde of Federal inspectors at these different places down there.

Mr. FULMER. I will say in answer to the gentleman that to-day the Federal Government has expert graders at New Orleans and New York, and under this bill we only propose to locate others, for instance, at Atlanta, Ga., Dallas, Tex., and at the large cotton centers or exporting points, and then they will work in connection with the States. The buyer as well as the seller of cotton will have the right to appeal for expert service, and the decision of the Secretary will be final.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The fact remains, I think the gentleman will agree, that under section 7 the Secretary of Agriculture might do that if he wants to do so.

Mr. FULMER. I think the gentleman knows that the Secretary, especially Mr. Wallace——

Mr. KINCHELOE. I have as high regard for him as anybody, but under this section of this law this gives him the power to do that.

Mr. FULMER. It is not the idea that the Secretary will do that. His experts will work in connection with the States from the larger center. A great many of the States have adopted by State legislation the official standards and now have their graders.

Mr. KINCHELOE. We have the declaration of, I think, Mr. Meadows, of the Department of Agriculture, that they could administer this law by striking out section 7, and I do not see why we do not do so.

Mr. FULMER. If you strike it out, you take away the connecting feature with sections 2 and 4, which is very important. If you are going to have an official standard, so as to do away with various other standards, and if you are really interested in the cotton farmer you will not strike out section 7. I do not see how any Member from the South can object to this legislation or any part of it, and I do hope that you will not.

I appeal to my friends who represent the West or grain States who some years ago passed this identical legislation for the grain growers or farmers of the West. At that time your people were being robbed out of millions of dollars by undergrading of wheat. Now the people of the South are being robbed out of millions of dollars. Gentlemen, here is a crate of cotton, the stalks with the cotton unpicked just like you will find it in the cotton fields of the South before the cotton had been picked. Any of you who have not seen these fields of cotton, if you will come down South during the months of October and November you will see the beautiful bloom and cotton like this. I want to say to you that the sad story connected with my speech that should appeal to you in favor of my bill is the fact that cotton has to be picked, every lock of it, by human hands, and poor white women and children have to go with sacks strapped upon their backs and pick it. The farmer who makes that crop has to work 12 months in the year. First he prepares his land, has to haul fertilizer, which is very hard work, and the fertilizer is very expensive. In 1920 the records will show that we bought $52,000,000 worth of fertilizer in South Carolina. He then puts out his fertilizer, plants, and by the first of August he will have finished the cultivation of his cotton. The picking, ginning, and marketing of his cotton crop will take up the balance of the year, and as a rule he winds up at Christmas time still in debt and without cash to buy the things that the family really needs. I can see the farmer now as he comes to his little country town with his sample in his hand begging, as it were, for a reasonable price for his cotton, only to be robbed in a great many cases. I do not mean to say that all cotton buyers who buy from the producers are dishonest, but they have to buy so as to deliver to the other fellow who can then deliver to the mills on official standards. There is no comeback. There is no one to stand between him and the man to whom he desires to sell. I know in many instances the buyers will get together and form a combination and thereby rob the uninformed and unprotected producer, not only on grades but as to price. One buyer will make a bid and the others will not beat it, and the next day the other buyer will operate. I know this will tend to help them out on their grades, and they are getting well informed daily as to the price on the various grades. Therefore if we are as interested now since we have been elected as we seemed to be during the campaign when we promised, if elected, we would fight, bleed, and die on the floor of the House, let us pass this splendid piece of constructive legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the chairman will yield more time to the gentleman.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This is a rather important subject to the people in our country and I hope the gentleman will be given opportunity to explain the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand it, under existing law a number of grades of cotton have been reduced considerably from what they were formerly?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There were quite a number of different grades?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under the law as it now exists, is there any penalty laid upon the buyer of cotton from the producer if he misrepresents the quality of the cotton or the grade which he purchased?

Mr. FULMER. None whatever.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does this bill undertake to include any penalty for a violation of the department rules under the classification we are seeking to establish?

Mr. FULMER. Absolutely.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Explain that, if you please, so that we may understand it.

Mr. FULMER (reading from the bill):

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful (a) in or in connection with any transaction or shipment in commerce made after this act shall become effective, or (b) in any publication of a price or quotation determined in or in connection with any transaction or shipment in commerce after this act shall become effective, or (c) in any classification for the purposes of or in connection with a transaction or shipment in commerce after this act shall become effective, for any person to indicate for any cotton a grade or other class which is of or within the official cotton standards of the United States then in effect under this act by a name, description, or designation, or any system of names, description, or designation not used in said standards: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent a transaction otherwise lawful by actual sample or on the basis of a private type which is used in good faith and not in evasion of or substitution for said standards.

If he does he is subject to the penalties of so many dollars fine or so many months in jail.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Do you have any further provision which would penalize a fraudulent determination of the standard of quality?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Where is that; in a case where a grader of this cotton fraudulently grades it?

Mr. FULMER. Yes; absolutely. If the gentleman will read section 2 I believe he will be satisfied on that point.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is in the bill?

Mr. FULMER. Yes; that is in the bill. If he would accept money as a bribe or in any manner try to defraud, as a licensed grader, he could be handled by the Federal Government under sections 2 and 8.

Mr. STEENERSON. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. How many grades are there under the statute?

Mr. FULMER. I believe there are 10 grades.

Mr. STEENERSON. These standards prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture are satisfactory?

Mr. FULMER. Yes; and are acceptable in delivery of cotton to the mills. But in buying from the farmer, as I stated a few moments ago, they will buy on any old grade except the official grade and then get the benefit of the official grades at the mill.

Mr. STEENERSON. The grievance is that the standard prescribed by the Secretary is unfair?

Mr. FULMER. No; the buyers from the producer will not recognize the official standards and as stated a while ago, as much as they would like to do so in a great many cases they can deliver on the official grades.

Mr. STEENERSON. And you are trying to prevent the sale in grades that are not official?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the gentleman, and I know that at times farmers have to sell their cotton at a lower grade than it really is. The practical result sought to be brought about by this bill is to let the farmer know the actual grade of his cotton before he sells it?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. He can not make anyone buy it at that grade, but this measure simply lets the farmer know what that cotton really grades, and if he is not willing to take the price for it, he is not forced or induced to sell it under a lower grade than it really is?

Mr. FULMER. Yes. We should not worry about the sale of the cotton, because there is a demand for it. There is always to be found plenty of honest cotton buyers anxious to help the farmer, absolutely willing to give as to grade just what he can deliver.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is possible now for a farmer to have grain graded at a local market where it is subject to grading, and he will receive the price for the actual grade in the market.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Oh, on the question of wheat or corn you have a way of weighing it by a little scale there that will give you No. 1 or No. 2 or No. 3 wheat. The wheat farmer does not need a special protection there. But in the case of the cotton farmer one county may have 20 different grades of cotton, and the farmers have no way of knowing what that grade is. Now, suppose the classification of the local markets should be different from the classification made by the Federal agent. Which classification would control?

Mr. HAUGEN. The Secretary would finally determine it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. But the farmer who brings his load of cotton to town on Saturday afternoon has no time to be appealing to anybody. He must sell his cotton by sample. The wheat grower, however, knows what the grade is.

Mr. HAUGEN. He makes a contract; and if there is any dispute about it, on appeal the grade is settled.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Wheat is not graded altogether on weight. There are a number of grades of wheat.

Mr. HAUGEN. It may be true that there is more difficulty about the classification of cotton than of wheat, but the Department of Agriculture has already standardized cotton. It has now given about 20 or 30 years' consideration to the subject, and I think the department has gotten as near perfection as possible. If it can be improved, the department will improve upon it from time to time.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The proviso says:

Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent a transaction otherwise lawful by actual sample or on the basis of a private type which is used in good faith and not in evasion of or substitution for said standards.

Does not that take out everybody under this law that tries to sell by private sample?

Mr. HAUGEN. You can sell by sample, but if you sell by grade specified it must be the Government sample.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is it not usually graded by type, which involves a number of things?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Would it be necessary for the farmer to join the Farmers' Cooperative Association in order to get the benefit of this legislation?

Mr. FULMER. In South Carolina in many counties graders are taking care of the farmers who go to them. But they are now joining the association, and they will get the direct benefit.

Mr. LAZARO. I understand they are joining the associations all over the country, and if they do they will sell by large lots instead of by small lots?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Is the Cotton Operative Association back of this bill?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. And is the committee unanimous in its report?

Mr. FULMER. Yes. And I want to say, gentlemen, that this bill will tend to wipe out the dishonest buyer who has robbed the producer in the confusion between the Liverpool grades and the private grades. Somebody between the producer and the mills—according to the figures I am going to quote—is mopping up millions of dollars. I want to call your attention to Circular No. 56 of the Department of Agriculture of 1919, which will give you this information—the price received by the producer and the price paid by the mills during that year.

The difference amounted to $220,600,000, and I believe, gentlemen, by the passage of this bill you will wipe out a good big slice of that difference between those prices paid to the producers and as paid by the mill. According to these figures, the farmers of my State—South Carolina—sold their 1919 crop of 1,462,277 bales of cotton for $39,245,540 less than the mills paid for it.

Now, I have back of this proposition letters from the American Cotton Association, the Cooperative Association, and from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace.

I also have letters from presidents of nearly every agricultural college in the cotton States and the agricultural commissioners of the cotton States. Gentlemen, they are interested in this proposition. They know that the producers are being robbed, and they want this legislation. I hope the House will pass the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to be recognized for the purpose of yielding time. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] desire any more time?

Mr. FULMER. There is one other point that I would like to cover.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina five minutes.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, as I explained a few minutes ago, the purchaser from the producer will sell to the buyer higher up; for instance, I will sell to a cotton factor in Augusta, Ga., or Savannah. He mails returns for my cotton. I see that I am being robbed on the grade. I immediately ask him to hold up the delivery and will go over to see the grading of it myself, as I did just a few weeks ago on a lot of cotton that I delivered myself in Columbia, S. C. If after looking it over I am dissatisfied, I am referred to the cotton exchange for an arbitration. The buyers compose the exchange, and I am just where I started. If it is a good thing to have the Secretary of Agriculture to superintend the delivery of spot cotton on future contracts, why not pass this bill and give the producer and the buyer from the producer the same rights and privileges? Now, under this bill I would have a right to appeal to the experts located in Augusta or Atlanta or some other large city, and they would pass on it.

As to the cotton exporters, this bill will mean millions to them, and that will mean millions handed back down to the producer. They export cotton to-day. Later they get returns with a big claim. They have to pay that claim or they can not do any more business with the party in Liverpool. If they ask for an arbitration they are referred to the Liverpool board or exchange, and they are in the same fix that I would be, as stated just now. Under my bill the Department of Agriculture passes upon it and they have to come into the courts of the United States here, and they would have a proper settlement in connection with the various claims. As a matter of fact, they have to buy from the producer and the cotton seller, squeezing him, and knowing it at the time, but they want to be on the safe side, believing and knowing that they will be squeezed in Liverpool or somewhere else. There is in the hearings a letter from Marshall Field & Co., who own 25 cotton mills in North Carolina and Virginia. They say they buy every pound of their cotton on Government classification or standards. If this bill is passed, do not worry about the Federal Government loading up the States with classifiers or inspectors. The States, in connection with the Federal Government, will take care of that proposition, and will have men there to look after the interests of the producer, and then they can appeal to the experts that the Federal Government will have in the various other centers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman has still a little time left. I would like to ask him a question with reference to section 3, the licensing feature of the bill.

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that under the Federal law there is no Federal license required from the local buyer of cotton?

Mr. FULMER. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Section 3 provides that a license may be issued on application to the Secretary of Agriculture. What value is there in this section by way of protection to the producer of that cotton? In other words, suppose a man does get a license under this section from the Secretary of Agriculture; what additional integrity does that fact give to his action when he comes to buy cotton from the actual producer on the street?

Mr. FULMER. I am sure that the Secretary would not issue a license to a buyer of cotton; but if he did, he would be under the supervision of the Federal authorities, and he would be subject to the fines as listed in this bill according to or in violation of sections 2 and 8. A cotton firm or a cotton buyer can have their own grader, but he will be working in a private capacity, looking after the interests of his employer. In the meantime the grader working under Federal and State supervision or license will be impartial, looking after no special interest, but grading as to true grade by the official types.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman think a man will voluntarily take out a license that will subject him to a penalty unless it is made mandatory that he shall take out the license?

Mr. FULMER. I would not think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this bill would be seriously crippled by striking out the licensing feature?

Mr. FULMER. The Secretary, in his letter, stated that while he would like to see section 3 remain in the bill—and I think it is a good section—still he did not seriously object to that section going out. The only difference will be that it will put the licensing of graders into the hands of the States and out of the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture of the Federal Government. I will say to the gentleman that I had a letter from a gentleman in North Carolina asking me to amend my bill so as to eliminate section 3 and leave the licensing of graders with the States.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not really think that as this is confined to a few States, the people in the localities might be better acquainted with the situation than a Secretary of Agriculture who might come from Iowa or Minnesota or some other noncotton-growing State, and that it would be better to strike out section 3 and leave that matter of a license to the local authorities of the States? I hope the gentleman will permit me to say that I have talked to a number of Members who are favorable to the bill but who object to section 3.

Mr. FULMER. I stated to the committee in the hearing, in answer to a question, that I would not seriously object to striking out section 3, but it would not leave the bill in as good shape as it is now.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I am anxious to know what benefit this bill will be to the farmer who grows the cotton. I have not had an opportunity to investigate the provisions of the bill carefully, but I want to know if it will take care of a situation like this: A farmer goes in to sell cotton to a cotton buyer. The buyer gives him a receipt. Does the bill provide that he is to enter on the receipt or on the statement the grade or class of cotton that he is purchasing so that he may have recourse himself against the farmer who grows the cotton or the farmer have recourse against the buyer as the case may be?

Mr. FULMER. You will find the Federal authorities as well as the State law will regulate the various ways of selling the cotton. It gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to formulate regulations in the way of administering the act.

Mr. RANKIN. It turns that particular duty over to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. And does not provide the relief in the law itself.

Mr. FULMER. I do not think the gentleman should worry about that. You take the agricultural interests in the States, and they are anxious to function, and in a great many States they have adopted the official standard of grades.

Mr. RANKIN. If it was left to the Secretary of Agriculture in the various States that would be the case, but as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] suggests, the Secretary of Agriculture may come from a State where they do not grow cotton, where they are unacquainted with cotton. Cotton is a thing you have to grow up with to understand it. I do not view with much enthusiasm this proposition of leaving it to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may come from a State that does not grow cotton.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentlemen on the Democratic side that this bill has been carefully considered. I have talked with the cotton people and the agricultural interests, as a whole, and they are very anxious for the bill to pass. I am satisfied that my friends on the Republican side will give us their hearty support. I am sorry to see the Members on the Democratic side wrangle and squabble over such an important matter. I have had several Republican Members say to me that if my bill did not pass, it would be on account of Members on my side of the aisle. When we offer to pass legislation in the interest of the cotton farmer, I can not see why it is so hard to get our Members from the South to agree and get together and pass legislation that will stop this highway robbery of the producer. You talk about the Strong bill and other bills that would create new financial institutions that are supposed to be in the interest of agriculture—while I will stand behind any good bill along these lines, I want to say that the Federal reserve bank can not be improved upon, if you will pass some amendments to the present law.

I would restrict the rediscount rate not to exceed 5 per cent, as provided for in my resolution introduced some time ago in this House. I would take away the power now in the hands of seven men, composing the Federal Reserve Board, which allows them to make or break any section of this great country overnight. I would have them accept any class of agricultural paper or warehouse receipt for a period of not less than 12 months for rediscount just in the same manner and in a just proportion to any other industry. In other words, the Congress should govern the Federal reserve banks by proper legislation in the interest of all the people and not Wall Street.

As I started to say a few moments ago, the great task before this Congress is to pass constructive legislation that will eliminate thousands of parasites that are operating between the producer and the consumer—to create a market for the farmer's products; to see to it that he is not robbed out of his weights, grades, and a living price for his produce. Sweet potatoes are selling in South Carolina to-day at about 50 cents per bushel, and in Washington for about $3 a bushel.

After you create these various financial institutions as outlined by various bills introduced by Members, the farmer still has to go to his home bank. His credit and his collateral are still in statu quo. He needs reduced freight rates, legitimate prices for his farm products; he needs to get nearer the price paid by the consumer and the consumer needs to get nearer the price received by the producer.

This bill will tend to wipe out a great many middlemen and put the seller on an equal footing with the buyer.

Mr. William M. Steuart, Director of the Census, approves of this kind of legislation when he says:

There is considerable demand for statistical information as to the quantities of the several grades of cotton held in stock in the United States. Obviously, under present conditions, it is impossible to secure reliable information of this character since much of the cotton is not accurately graded until it reaches the more important concentration points. Since practically all the cotton produced in the United States enters either into interstate or foreign commerce, it is within the power of Congress to enact legislation requiring such cotton to be graded and stapled under Government regulations at central-grading stations. With uniform grading thus provided for throughout the cotton-growing region, it would be possible to obtain from the grading stations the number of bales of the several classes graded, and from consumer and exporters the number of bales of the several classes consumed and exported.

The Bureau of Markets has succeeded in arousing such interest in some of the States, for instance in South Carolina and Texas, that the farmers as well as the cooperative associations have begun in a limited way the study of grading their cotton. Mr. ASWELL of Louisiana in a speech some time ago in commenting on this subject says:

The Department of Agriculture estimates that the farmers of Texas have already profited $1,000,000 by reason of taking up this study. It is clear that each farmer, if he is to follow business usage and hold his own as a business man, should know the various standard classes and the value and quality of his cotton before he offers it for sale. Having this information, he will strive to produce such grades as will be most remunerative. He will grow interested in improving his cottonseed. Why should he select his seed unless he knows the different classes of cotton? He will more carefully handle his cotton and see to it that it is properly ginned and baled to avoid the usual output of low-grade grades. In this way he will rapidly raise the standard and value of his product.

I agree with the gentleman from Louisiana and contend that the passage of this bill will do just the things that he advocates. As mentioned before, the farmers are now looking into the grades and values of their cotton. The States have graders to assist them; but what is the use when, after they have gotten this assistance and information, they can not deliver the goods?

In conclusion, I want to thank my friends for the interest they have displayed in assisting me with this bill, especially the chairman and members of the Agricultural Committee for their very careful consideration and for their unanimous report given my bill. [Applause.]

Mr. W. R. Meadows, cotton technologist of the Department of Agriculture, in a speech before the world conference at Liverpool, England, on July 14, 1921, said:

The importance of having only a single set of standards for American cotton that shall be universally recognized and applied in the cotton trade has long been acknowledged, and efforts to secure the consummation of that end have almost succeeded on at least two occasions, but still the common desire in this direction remains to be realized. That the adoption of uniform standards would greatly simplify the merchandising of cotton is admitted by all. Cotton known as middling in one place, for instance, should be known as middling throughout the world, and cotton of 1-inch staple should not mean one thing in one place and something different in another market of equal importance. These are specific instances which point to the great desirability of a common language in the cotton trade of the world.

Universal standards would not only simplify methods of handling cotton but would tend to higher standards of ethics in the cotton business. Knowing definitely what is expected of him, a shipper would be more likely to make serious effort to meet his obligations on shipments by supplying the grade and staple stipulated in the contract.

A most important advantage of universal standards would be the reduced number of arbitrations that are necessarily held in the cotton business each season. Having the same well-established standards in the hands of both European buyer and American seller would facilitate shipments in compliance with contracts, and therefore it would not be necessary for the purchaser of cotton to arbitrate shipments continually in order to collect claims for failure to ship according to specifications.

By establishing and using universal standards for American cotton certain advantages will accrue to the producers of superior varieties of cotton. The world needs cotton of good staple, and spinners are anxious to encourage the production of superior varieties. With a single set of standards for classification established it is natural that the higher prices which spinners pay for cotton of superior character and staple should be reflected back to the producer more readily than under the present methods, when both grade and staple standards are questions of uncertainty and controversy.

By the adoption of uniform standards throughout the world trading on the future exchanges in both Europe and America will be more nearly on the same basis, future quotations would be more readily comparable, and better hedging facilities would result than when material discrepancies exist in the terms of the future contracts.

Practically all of the American cotton exchanges have passed resolutions indorsing the idea of uniform standards. Many of the leading American cotton firms have expressed similar views. Associations representing producers have likewise favored the establishment of a single set of standards. It may be stated, therefore, that the American cotton trade almost solidly favors the establishment of uniform standards.

The importance of uniform standards for American cotton can perhaps be no better demonstrated than by the citation of a few statistical facts. A reference to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, an official publication, discloses that during the calendar year ending December 31, 1920, exports of American cotton were valued at $1,136,408,916 and for the calendar year ending December 31, 1919, $1,137,371,252. Such figures establish cotton as the leading export commodity of the United States, and certainly the entire American people are concerned with the handling and marketing of a product which means so much to the economic welfare of their country.

Indeed, an examination of the statistics for the 50-year period from 1865 to the close of 1914—that is, for the 50-year period of peace, when marketing was normal—discloses that the total exports of cotton from the United States in round figures were $13,610,000,000. During the same period the actual net balance of American exports over imports was, in round figures, $10,343,000,000. In other words, the one article, cotton, exported from the United States exceeded by $3,267,000,000 the total net favorable balance of trade for the 50 years preceding the outbreak of the war in Europe. It should be borne in mind that nearly all of this $13,500,000,000 worth of cotton was exported on contracts which called for arbitrations before a board of arbitrators, on which Americans did not have and still do not have a representative, and even the standard of classification itself is not well known by many American exporters. Certainly, as a matter of justice for those Americans engaged in the export cotton trade, an agreement on cotton standards should be reached in order to facilitate the handling on fair and equitable terms of the leading export crop of the United States.

I take it, therefore, that the importance and desirability of universal standards having been recognized in past conferences and by similar meetings of the cotton trade, it will not be disputed in the present conference, and that this representative body will lend its active support to the movement to secure universal standards and will take the initiative in finding a way for the accomplishment of that end.

The letter of the Secretary of Agriculture is, in full, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 17, 1923.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HAUGEN: In reply to your request for a report on the bill (H. R. 6753) introduced by Mr. FULMER and known as the cotton standards act I will say that with one or two minor changes in its phraseology the bill has the general approval of this department. It has been suggested that the word "final" be inserted in line 10 of page 3 before the word "certificate"; and that in line 11 of the same page, after the word "determination," there should be inserted the words "shall be binding on all officers of the United States and."

The department is particularly interested in the sections which establish the official cotton standards of the United States as the legal basis of spot-cotton transactions in interstate and foreign commerce and which provide also for the classification of any cotton of which samples may be submitted to officers of the department for the purpose. These two sections, if enacted into law, should effectively increase the use of the official cotton standards established under the cotton futures act. It is believed that the cotton producers will benefit very largely both directly and indirectly by the enactment of these provisions into law.

The department receives requests repeatedly from cotton merchants and others for the classification of spot cotton according to the official standards of the United States. There is no authority at present, however, for such activities, except for the limited purpose of legalizing delivery on future contracts at New York and New Orleans. This inability on the part of the department to determine the classification of spot cotton other than that intended for delivery on future contracts operates to deter cotton merchants and shippers from making full use of the existing standards.

It is believed that the cotton trade is thoroughly in sympathy with the bill, with the possible exception of section 3, which provides for the examination and licensing of classifiers. If, however, on further inquiry by your committee there should develop any serious objection to this section, the department would agree to its omission. In such case a few modifications of the wording of subsequent paragraphs which refer to section 3 might be necessary.

With proper direction, it is thought that the administration of the act should be financially self-sustaining. An initial appropriation, however, will be needed to start the work. Section 12 of the bill as drawn authorizes the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary for administering the act, but if $50,000 were provided at the outset it is thought that no further appropriation would be necessary. The experience of the department in establishing standards and classifying cotton for delivery on future contracts under authority of the United States cotton futures act should be of much practical use in the administration of this bill in the event of its enactment into law.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

JANUARY 27, 1923.

Submitted to the Bureau of the Budget and returned to the Department of Agriculture with the advice that the foregoing is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Austin, Tex., June 4, 1921.

Mr. J. S. WANNAMAKER,
St. Matthews, S. C.

DEAR SIR: In receiving the reports of the jubilee convention of the American Cotton Association held May 31, in New York, I note that Mr. W. R. Meadows, technologist of the United States Department of Agriculture, advocated the idea of the adoption of uniform standards for cotton for American and foreign trade.

I presume you are familiar with the fact that through the efforts of the United States Department of Agriculture a few years ago standards for our cotton were made practically the same as those obtaining for Liverpool; that is to say, the standards made for the United States were adopted by the Liverpool Cotton Association, popularly known as the Liverpool Cotton Exchange, at a conference of Cotton Exchange representatives held in Liverpool in June, 1913.

The standards there and then agreed upon were for white cotton only, but since that date the United States standards have been revised, eliminating the grades strict good ordinary and good ordinary white cotton, substituting therefor three colored cottons, namely, strict middling, yellow tinged, and good middling yellow stained, making in all 10 grades of the Government's tenderable list, said grades being the official types governing delivery of spot cotton on future contracts on both New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges.

The cotton exchanges at New York, New Orleans, Montgomery, Selma, Little Rock, Mobile, Augusta, Savannah, St. Louis, Vicksburg, Charleston, Memphis, Norfolk, Galveston, Waco, Houston, Paris (Tex.), Dallas, San Antonio, Fort Worth, and Oklahoma City, also the Cotton Buyers' Associations of Fall River, New England, and Texas, and the Cotton Manufacturers' Associations of North and South Carolina have adopted the United States Government standards. One would draw the conclusion that after the cotton exchanges all over the country had adopted these standards that differences arising over cotton classification between buyers and sellers would be practically at an end, but regrettable to say the opposite obtains now in the entire Cotton Belt, more especially in Texas and Oklahoma, as these two States have grown in late years a character of cotton popularly recognized as "bollies," because of its color, weather exposure, foreign substances, etc.; the trade in these States ignoring gradation of low grades where any color is shown, taking them as "bollies," paying anywhere from 3½ to 5 cents a pound for them when buying.

To illustrate, let us say a grower offers a bale of cotton for sale, classing strict low middling tinge, taking a discount of 400 points off middling, that middling is quoted at 11½ cents, then the cotton offered would be worth, on correct classification, 7½ cents a pound. The trade here takes it as a "bolly," offering 4 cents for it, unless the cotton is good style strict low middling, when possibly it might go for 5 cents a pound.

I believe it is no exaggeration to say that 75 to 90 per cent of our cotton containing yellow, red, or blue color goes into the channels of trade as "bolly" cotton. It goes on the market at whatever price the buyer and grower may agree upon, classification ignored.

I see but little use in a Federal or State standard for cotton, established for trade guides, if the trade can not be made to conform to accept it.

The more I see of the trade practices resorted to in Texas, the more I am convinced of the necessity for a national law making it mandatory for the cotton trade to use the United States standards in all spot-cotton transactions. The Government has made their usage mandatory for delivery of spot cotton on future contracts on both the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges, why not for the trade everywhere?

I am writing this letter for your consideration and asking at the same time that you use your influence and that of the American Cotton Association toward the southern Members of Congress urging passage of a law making the universal usage of the cotton standard types obligatory in all spot-cotton transactions, if you are in agreement with me on this question.

Should such a law be enacted, it must be conceded no one can be hurt in any cotton transaction financially, as both buyer and seller will have the same official guides.

If Liverpool does not establish standards coinciding with ours it will be an easy matter for the American cotton trade to translate our types to those of that market as the trade has done for more than 50 years.

Believing I am right in the premises, I ask your consideration, your influence, and your help in getting a law passed as suggested above.

Awaiting a reply at your convenience, I am,

Yours very truly,

T. S. MILLER.

STATE WAREHOUSE COMMISSIONER,
Columbia, S. C., February 9, 1922.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
Member House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 6th noted. I am heartily in favor of this bill and will send the samples just as soon as my cotton grader returns to the office, which will be in the next day or two. Will try to get these off promptly to you at that time. Sincerely hope this will go through, and it will be a godsend to the farmer of the cotton-producing States.

Yours truly,

J. CLIFTON RIVERS,
State Warehouse Commissioner.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY,
Baton Rouge, La., July 11, 1921.

Hon. H. P. FULMER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Those of us here who have read your bill (H. R. 6753), and who are more directly interested in what it calls for, are agreed that its passage would be of immense benefit to all departments of the cotton industry. It is to be sincerely hoped, therefore, that you may succeed in your endeavor to have this bill become law.

Very respectfully yours,

W. H. DALRYMPLE,
Dean and Director.

COOPERATIVE EXTENSION WORK IN AGRICULTURE AND HOME ECONOMICS,
University Station, Baton Rouge, La., June 23, 1921.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: A copy of your bill (H. R. 6753) is received, and I wish to express to you my interest in such legislation and to say that the farmers all over the South are needing it now, and have needed it for many years. It has been a well-recognized fact for a long time that cotton buyers made a great deal of their profit by undergrading the staple, and I believe that this law as written should pass. Its enforcement will undoubtedly be of great service in the grading and marketing of the cotton crop.

I trust that you will not meet with any difficulties in getting it through.

Very truly yours.

W. R. PERKINS,
Director of Extension.

—

STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE,
Oklahoma City, January 29, 1923.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have read your cotton grading bill with a great deal of interest and take this opportunity of indorsing its provisions. Probably no greater injustice has been done the ordinary producer than that of grading his cotton.

I am wondering if you had placed a cooperative clause, cooperating with State graders, who carry Federal license, if it would not have helped promote the bill better?

Assuring you of my confidence in the plan and believing it a great forward step in cotton grading and marketing, I am,

Very truly yours,

J. A. WHITEHURST, President.

—

[Telegram.]

ST. MATTHEWS, S. C., January 30, 1923.

H. P. FULMER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Heavy work here prevents my going to Washington. Deeply regret inability to comply with your request as your bill is of greatest importance to cotton industry and trust same will pass without objection.

HARVIE JORDAN,
Secretary American Cotton Association.

—

OKLAHOMA AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGE,
Stillwater, January 31, 1923.

Representative H. P. FULMER,
Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am writing to record my indorsement of H. R. 6753, on official cotton standards, a copy of which you recently sent me.

Very truly yours,

J. K. ESKRIDGE, President.

—

THE STATE OF FLORIDA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Tallahassee, June 22, 1921.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I write to add my indorsement of the effort to establish uniform cotton grades throughout the United States. Equitable transactions in cotton are impossible by the old arbitrary methods of grading, and standardization that is not compulsory is of little service.

We can not undo the evil that has been done in the past in this respect, but we are responsible for delay in thoroughly establishing these relative grades and forcing definite compliance therewith.

I can see absolutely no reason for honest opposition to universally established accurate and uniform grading.

Yours very truly,

W. A. MCRAE,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

—

C. M. BARNES,
Marston, Mo., June 25, 1921.

Hon. H. P. FULMER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FULMER: Our Missouri commissioner of agriculture has referred to me a copy of H. R. 6753, a bill to establish United States cotton standards act.

I have been pleased to reread this proposed act several times that I might not fail to understand its purpose thoroughly and will say at the outset that I heartily indorse the proposed law in its entirety.

Only those persons whose business activities bring them into constant touch with the handling of lint cotton do fully appreciate the value of establishing uniform standards for grading this greatest of American commercial crops. There surely can not be any serious opposition to the establishment of such uniform standards for all commercial transactions in America, whether spot or future, except from interests which either do now or expect to take advantage by substitution of grade of cotton lint to fill future contracts. I appreciate the fact the Department of Agriculture has long ago established standards for grading, and I believe does authorize licensed graders, but an act requiring the use of such standards in all transactions involving cotton grades is now very desirable and, in fact, necessary to bring the system into universal use in America. I am sure foreign markets will cheerfully conform.

I am sir, yours very respectfully,

C. M. BARNES,
Former Member Missouri Board of Agriculture.

—

STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND MECHANIC ARTS, UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA,
Athens, Ga., January 31, 1923.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 24th instant inclosing copy of H. R. 6753 has been received. I have read the same with interest, and believe it should be passed in the interest of the cotton producers of the country.

With best wishes, I am, very respectfully,

ANDREW M. SOULE, President.

THE CAROLINA COTTON & WOOLEN MILLS CO.,
Spray, N. C., January 5, 1922.

Congressman H. P. FULMER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of December 19, addressed to Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, regarding cotton purchases on Government standard classifications, has been referred to me for reply.

You are correct in your understanding that our cotton purchases are based on Government standard classifications.

Yours very truly,

W. G. MCCOLLUM,
Manager Cotton Purchasing Department.

—

ALABAMA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE,
Auburn, Ala., July 9, 1921.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In pressing the passage of H. R. 6753—your bill to establish the use of official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce—you are working along lines in which we in Alabama are very much interested. So strong is the sentiment among Alabama farmers for the passage of such legislation that a corresponding bill was passed by the last session of the Alabama Legislature providing the exclusive use within Alabama of the official cotton standards of the United States. Other Southern States have the same matter under consideration and in some cases have passed the necessary legislation which will serve to make effective in interstate transactions in cotton the same procedure that your bill provides in regard to cotton entering interstate and foreign commerce.

In my opinion, there is sufficient argument for the passage of your bill in the fact that it will remove the present confusion brought about through the use by many firms of cotton buyers of arbitrary numbers or other private designations for cotton that the farmer offers for sale under the terms provided by the United States standards. It is well known that whenever there is confusion in market transactions through the use of different standards, the seller, especially when he is a farmer, is the loser.

It should certainly tend to simplify foreign commerce for all American cotton to be sold on the basis of the American standards. I have no doubt that the European trade will readily adapt itself to the procedure provided in your bill, and will find this a means of facilitating foreign commerce and of reducing the clerical work in connection with foreign transactions. The reasons for the passage of your bill seems to me so obvious, and the objections to it so trivial, that I think further arguments are not called for in this letter.

Southern farmers and southern business men (with possibly few exceptions among those engaged in the cotton trade) are with you in the desire to see the adoption of the United States official cotton standards as the sole measure of the grades of cotton, whether the transactions be interstate or foreign.

Yours very truly,

SPRIGHT DOWELL, President.

—

AMERICAN COTTON ASSOCIATION,
St. Matthews, S. C., February 7, 1923.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FULMER: I am inclosing you herewith a letter just received from Mr. William Ray, of New York, a man of many years' experience in the cotton trade and a strong defender of the cotton-growing interests. He fully indorses your bill for standardizing the grades of cotton, and I very sincerely trust the bill will be speedily passed and become a law. In whatever way we can assist, let me know.

With highest personal regards, sincerely,

J. S. WANNAMAKER,
President American Cotton Association.

—

THE FIRST CAROLINAS JOINT-STOCK LAND BANK,
Columbia, S. C., February 6, 1923.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR HAMP: I have just reached your letter of January 29, inclosing me a copy of the bill introduced by you, and while I have not had an opportunity to examine it carefully, and will hardly have an opportunity to do so for some time, yet a hurried glance through it discloses what you are undertaking to do, and I feel sure that the passage of the bill would be of great service to the cotton trade in general.

You may recall when I introduced the cotton futures act many years ago I at the same time introduced a bill very similar to yours and which had the same general purpose in view. My recollection is that I did not go quite as far perhaps as you have gone in your bill, but I was dealing with a new thing at the time and the standards had not been so well established as they are now. I think you are fully justified, and if I were in Congress I would support the movement to compel the use of the standard for cotton shipped through interstate commerce.

I am sorry I could not get this letter to you in time for use before the committee, but I have just this moment reached it in my large accumulation of mail. Let me warn you that you are going to have a man's job to put this through, but keep on moving.

With personal regards and best wishes, I am your friend,

A. F. LEVER.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] was asked in the committee—how does the bill give protection to the individual farmer who brings his cotton to market and sells it?

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. Did not they ask the same thing when the grading bill was before the committee—how it was going to benefit the farmer?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not know.

Mr. FULMER. They asked the very same question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not see what that has to do with this. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that there is no way by which the individual cotton grower who comes to the market and sells his cotton can be protected if he does not take some steps to protect himself. Congress can pass no law to forbid a farmer making a contract with the buyer or such contract as those individuals wish to make. The Congress can not pass a law providing for an agent to stand at the elbow of every farmer who has a bale of cotton to sell and see that he does the necessary and ordinary thing to protect himself. If the grower comes to market with his cotton and it is bought without any representation as to what it is, without any contract as to grade, and the producer puts his money in his pocket and goes home, that transaction is closed. I am told, however, there is a contract which the buyer and the seller can enter into at the time of the original sale, which provides that the sale is made on a basis of grade and a statement as to that grade can be put into the memorandum setting forth the terms of the purchase and sale. Then, if it is sold later and found to be of a higher grade, the original seller can follow the matter up and be reimbursed by the buyer who underpaid or deceived him. I do not know how such a transaction is carried out, but am told it can be done and is sometimes done.

Mr. RANKIN. That is the proposition I am driving at. I want to know if there is anything in the bill that provides for that contingency.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; that is a matter the buyer and the seller will have to take care of themselves. The Government of the United States can not forbid the making of a contract which the individuals wish to make, nor can it provide a Federal agent to stand there and protect every man who sells a bale of cotton if he does not know enough to do what he is easily able to do to protect himself. I have been in favor of the general proposition involved in this bill, as I have told the author of it. I, however, pointed out some matters in it that I think are objectionable, and I understood they were to be eliminated. I was not present at the meeting when the bill was reported out. Because of my understanding that these features were to be eliminated, I am greatly surprised to find that they are still in the bill. This bill and every feature of it ought to be so drafted that it will relate only to cotton in interstate commerce. It is concerning interstate transactions only that Congress has a right to legislate.

In section 11 of the bill there is a definition of commerce, and it is a definition of interstate commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is a definition of interstate commerce, a definition which the Supreme Court of the United States upheld. This same definition of interstate commerce in another bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture and having been passed by Congress has been upheld. We find in section 4 that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to take part in transactions relating to any cotton anywhere, regardless of the fact that the transaction may have been intrastate—that is, entirely local in its nature and not at all in interstate commerce. If this bill is to be passed, there should be inserted in line 4, page 3, after the word "cotton," the words "in commerce," as those words appear in other sections. Without those words the bill is so broadened as to be seriously objectionable in my mind.

Section 7, in my judgment, is not only unnecessary but improper. There is a former section in the bill, section 4, which if properly amended as I have suggested would cover the matter, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to receive samples of cotton, to grade them, and to issue a certificate respecting them. That section is entirely proper and necessary and as broad as the law ought to be. Section 7 as it now reads would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to send his agents to the smallest or most distant place in the cotton-growing area, to any place, to every place, to look over cotton involved in any transaction, no matter how small it might be. In my judgment that is improper and unnecessary. That is a length to which we ought not to direct or permit the Secretary of Agriculture to go.

It was said in justification of this that in case of a controversy between the buyer and the seller of cotton in interstate commerce, in a distant part of the country, they might not be able to agree on a sample to be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture to be graded, and, therefore, that it is necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture or somebody in his employ to go from Washington away to the limits of the country to mix in a matter where those interested can not agree in order to get a sample and bring it back to Washington, investigate it, and grade it. It seems to me that if a buyer and a seller have an honest difference of opinion in regard to cotton—to the grading of it, if it be cotton in interstate commerce—and if the transaction is of importance enough to ask the intervention of the Federal Government there ought to be some way for them to agree upon a sample and send it to the Secretary or to some place where he is maintaining an office and has employees to take care of that kind of business. If they can not go that far to reach the Federal Government when it is reaching out to assist them, employing men and spending money to help their business, in my judgment they are not entitled to the intervention of the department at all.

Yesterday we had under consideration a bill which was opposed and defeated because it would provide for the employment of a great many agents of the Federal Government to go into localities all over the country, interfering with the homely pastime of shooting game by men and boys, requiring a license of every boy who wanted to take a shotgun and go out and hunt birds. There was strong opposition to that bill. We all sympathize with that kind of opposition. That is a Government activity which ought to be limited and restricted. We ought to be very careful how we permit and direct the Government to go into little, trifling, local, personal matters. Section 7, if it remains in the bill, will permit and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to have agents in every community over the entire cotton-growing area of the country.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, if this bill will help the men who produce cotton to get a fair price for it in a constitutional and proper way, I think there will be no opposition to it in this House. In such event there will certainly be none on this side of the House. If I understand the bill, on a hurried reading, it applies to all transactions in cotton within and between the States. It authorizes licensing those who classify. I do not know how exclusive that is. The obtaining of a Federal license by men who classify cotton should not be required of all who want to classify and buy much or little. It authorizes the employment of a certain number of men to enforce it—to make those provisions effective. In order to justify that line of Federal activity, if it can be justified at all, it ought to produce a very substantial result in the way of benefit to the growers of cotton and the public. I make this statement more by way of inquiry than otherwise. What does this bill do more than advise the farmer about how his cotton ought to be graded or place him in the position where he can get proper advice to that effect? What else is there that is substantial in the bill, and if that is all there is in it, does that justify us in passing it, with the Federal activity and interference it carries? I ask these questions not in hostility to the bill, because I want to support it if it is sound and will help, but I do not want to do a foolish and a vain thing and, for the sake of doing so, violate a principle for which all should stand, that of having the Federal Government keep its hands out of local affairs as much as possible.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, there are two or three points in the bill that appear to me to need explanation. The bill as written has two potential advantages to the cotton grower. Undoubtedly it will aid the exporter to adjust his settlements with foreign markets. There is no question about that. It will help in that regard by establishing American grades throughout this country. It will certainly have a powerful moral effect in adjusting settlements in foreign countries. Second, it will enable the producer—the small grower of cotton—to know what grade he is selling. As to whether it will increase his price by having this knowledge is, of course, problematical, but the seller will be able through this bill to ascertain the grades he is actually selling.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If that be true, how will 100,000 sellers of cotton in Texas on one day know of the provisions of this bill, and who will be there at the market to tell them the grade of the cotton that they are selling?

Mr. ASWELL. Section 3 is practically the same provision as is contained in the grain standards act.

If these 100,000 sellers, the cotton farmers, want to have information as to the grade they are to sell on a certain day there will be Federal agents available for that 100,000 men to have their cotton graded for the day they are to sell. Now, as to the objection made a moment ago as to the possibility of having so many agents, let me say this, that that is only a possibility and will never be done, in my judgment. If it were necessary, these agents are to be paid from the license fees, at no cost to the Government except the initial appropriation of $50,000 to start the operation of the bill. In the grain standard act $500,000 was appropriated and every dollar of that has been returned to the Treasury, and the evidence at the hearing revealed fairly conclusively that this $50,000 would be speedily returned and this act would be self-sustaining. If it did not require for a while an agent of the Department of Agriculture to go to every county seat in the South to grade the farmers' cotton, I wonder if it would not be worth while to establish a custom and a habit by the cotton farmer of selling cotton on the grade that he actually has? On these two points I think the bill will be a great relief to the cotton grower and seller. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will say to the gentleman I am not at all hostile to the bill, but, like my colleague from Texas, I am simply now having in mind the producer. I realize fully the force of the gentleman's argument with reference to sales between factors and exporters and large dealers in cotton, but I am thinking only now for the moment of the 250,000 tenant farmers alone, you may say, in the State of Texas who grow cotton. Now for this bill to be effective to him it would at least require an agent to go there—and some of these counties grow 100,000 bales and some grow more—and so on, now, it would require, at least, for the State of Texas to be of any benefit to the producer directly to have an agent at least in each county seat, otherwise they will be selling cotton as they sold it before.

Mr. ASWELL. It is not at all impractical to have an agent in each county seat. Your farm demonstrator in a short time can become an expert grader in the county.

Mr. FULMER. I will say to my friend that a great many States have their classifiers at the county seat, and the gentleman should not worry about that because they can work together nicely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there are two primary purposes in this bill that I think will be good. I do not think the bill can possibly have any harm, and I believe it will be of some assistance in the operation of the cotton business. There is no question that there are two phases in the handling of cotton where there is considerable loss to the people of this country, and I may add in this connection that any time there is a loss along the line the producer stands the loss. There is no question about that. If there is a waste somewhere between production and consumption, the producer stands the loss; and any time you can eliminate that waste you have aided the producer or the consumer, or both, and both of those objects are desirable. This bill simply makes the present United States cotton standard universal throughout this country. At present they are not so. Now, when cotton goes to the mill, the man who finally manufactures it into cloth, the real grade of the cotton is used, so before it gets to the factory the consumer is paying actually for the cotton on the basis of the actual grade of the cotton, whereas the purchaser or perhaps the local buyer may have undergraded it. There is no machinery in the control of this Government under the present method of handling cotton to which there is an appeal when one gets into a dispute as to the grade and where the dispute may be officially settled. Thus the buyer or combination of buyers may do just what they please in reference to grading it down, and there is no appeal. Now, it might not be practical to have an agent in every town, but we may do as was done with wheat——

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. BOX. Suppose that the purchaser does not agree upon a grade by which the producer or seller contends? Can you by any machinery that you set up here force the purchaser to buy if he does not want to buy or if he does not want to accept the fellow's grade?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Of course you can not make the purchaser buy if he does not want to buy, but you can say if he does buy he must buy on the identical official grade and standard, and they will do it, too. If the law forbids buying on a false grade or a fake standard—when you set up machinery like we have in the wheat business, which has worked admirably—the buyer is not going out of business; he will buy.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does not the proviso in section 2 of this bill, where they are allowed to sell by sample, interfere with that?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will say that is put in for the protection of long-staple cotton, which is not usually sold by grades but by types.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I know; but it does not say "long-staple cotton." Suppose the purchaser at, say, Hempstead, Tex., or Richmond, should go down Saturday afternoon and say "I am buying cotton only from sample."

Mr. JONES of Texas. If you want to sell on sample you can sell wheat on sample to-day, and it does not interfere with wheat grading. If you do it with cotton by sample, of course you know what the cotton is. There is no absolute necessity for grading where you sell by actual sample. In that case you can look at the actual sample and see it. Wheat is sometimes sold that way, but not ordinarily, because you can not carry on big transactions on that basis. In other words, the big commercial transactions are carried on on the basis of grades and standards.

This bill, under section 4, provides that any person who has custody of, or a financial interest in, any cotton may submit the same or samples thereof, drawn in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, to the district man that has charge of these matters. That is the way the wheat business is handled, and it has proved eminently satisfactory.

And right in that connection I want to say a word about the language suggested, "in commerce." I am a little afraid about eliminating that. There may be owners or farm organizations who want cotton graded long before it goes into interstate commerce. It may be concentrated in warehouses or near the production point, and the farmers' organizations may want it graded before it has gotten into commerce. I am afraid if you insert the words "in commerce" you might keep the farm organizations or even individual owners from having their cotton graded in local warehouses.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the gentleman. There does not seem to me to be any reason for the amendment that the gentleman from Michigan has suggested. In reading the grain grading act I see that before grain can be shipped in interstate commerce it must be graded in accordance with the act; but under the wording of this bill there is nothing compelling the cotton to be graded before it is put into interstate commerce. We are providing merely for standard grades.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; and are making those universal in this country.

Mr. BLACK. And it shall be unlawful for any buyer to have any other standard. But, as I understand, there is no provision that there shall be a certificate to the effect that it has been so graded.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This measure will make these grades and standards universal in this country without changing them at all.

But I think the main advantage to be gained by this bill is with reference to shipment of cotton to foreign countries. At the present time England has different names for her cotton standards from those prevailing in this country. Those standards also vary just a little from the American standards. A shipment of cotton goes from this country to Liverpool, and it goes in what you might term C. O. D. fashion; that is, before the cotton is delivered in London they must pay the money. However, when it gets into that country they grade it themselves by their standards. If they dispute—and they frequently do, or sometimes do, to say the least—with the shippers in this country, the matter is submitted to arbitration in England, in Liverpool, in their own country. Of course, to get their money back they must come over to America, unless the American settles the claim voluntarily. They come over to America and get into our courts. They have the official standards of their own country, and the contestant in Liverpool is bulwarked and ballasted with the official grades of his country. Our man has not that advantage at the present time. Our standards have not the official stamp of approval. And so those people by raising a dispute may get an advantage over our American shipper even in our own courts; and, of course, again the producer pays that loss. I understand some London parties have profited in disputes with American shippers over the standards of cotton. At any rate, if you make these standards universal in this country, both sides to the controversy will have an even chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. JONES of Texas. When the Liverpool man comes over here to sue—and he must come in order to sue in our court, because the custom is for all cotton to be paid for before delivery—a man in this country against whom a claim is pending can introduce these official grades and standards which are made prima facie evidence, and he will get his rights in that way and will have an equal chance in the dispute with the London or Liverpool man. The Department of Agriculture seems to think, and a great many of those who are interested seem to think, that if that is done, the matter will work out much more fairly. I will say that the representatives of this country went to Europe to endeavor to agree to a universal standard. Many of the other countries were willing to adopt a universal standard, but the project failed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under the licensing provision in section 3 of this bill when a man secures a license from the grader his determination of grades will be absolutely final, even in a court of justice?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the value of his certificate if the matter reaches the point of a dispute?

Mr. JONES of Texas. As a matter of fact, there is considerable disagreement as to the actual value of section 3.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the purpose of putting it in the bill? I am asking merely for information. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Section 3 went into and out of the bill a time or two before final determination. The entire matter is left in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I take it that the purpose of it is to enable the Secretary, if he sees fit, to use a licensing system.

As I understand, the official grading will not be final and binding. At any rate, there will still be an appeal from that licensed grader to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman think it would hurt the bill if that section went out of it?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Personally, I would rather not express an opinion in regard to that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Section 4 provides that this classification and grading shall be accepted in the courts of the United States as prima facie evidence. Therefore it is subject to rebuttal. It is merely prima facie evidence.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is merely prima facie. Besides that it is subject to appeal to the Secretary of Agriculture as provided in another section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

Mr. ASWELL. I want to say a word with reference to section 3. In my opinion if you strike out section 3 you destroy your bill as far as benefits to the grower are concerned. For example, good middling cotton is graded on color, but it may be seven-eighths staple or it may be nine-tenths staple or it may be 1 1/16 staple. This bill authorizes the Department of Agriculture to send an agent to give a description of the cotton, not only the color but the staple; and in foreign countries the price is fixed by the staple and not so much by the color. France buys the longest staple cotton we have, because of its connection with silk. Germany buys the lowest grade of cotton, the shortest staple. The New England mills buy the best cotton they can get. This section 3 makes it practicable and possible for the Department of Agriculture to have an agent in the county seat to help the farmer fix not only the color of his cotton but the staple. In my opinion if you strike out section 3 you had better strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this bill because I think it is a very desirable matter always to have uniform standards in the sale of any product. Now, if I understand this bill correctly, the benefits that will come from it to the producer will be on account of better market conditions which should naturally result from a more uniform standardization of grades. In the section of country where I live the producer in the past has not sold very much on grade specification by contract. The custom has been: The buyer bids so much a pound for the cotton, and a trade is finally made independent of any contract as to the grade. But the buyer who purchases the cotton knows that he must sell nearly all of it either in interstate or in foreign commerce. He either sells it to a cotton broker or to a cotton factor or to a cotton factory, and he knows that it is going to be graded at the place to which it is shipped. It sometimes happens that there is a dispute about grades, and the seller feels that he has been unjustly dealt with. For example, in the town where I live I have a friend who is a cotton buyer, and he shipped a large list of cotton to a point in Massachusetts at a price that he thought would yield him a good profit. An account sales was sent back giving a very different grading from his own, and therefore a very different result of the sale from what he expected. An unfavorable grading of that kind naturally has a tendency to depress the price. Now, what will happen in a case of that kind under this bill? Where is the remedy? As I understand the bill, the remedy is this: The seller of cotton in a case of that kind will have the right to forward his sample to the Department of Agriculture, and the department, after a careful examination, will fix the grades, and those grades so fixed will be prima facie evidence of the correctness of the grades in any proceeding in the United States courts. Therefore in a dispute that arises upon the correctness of an account sales the grading of the department will be the grading determined by the court.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. And very soon the States will all make those grades prima facie evidence in their courts by State legislation?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I was coming to that next. Congress would not have any right to say to a State court that it shall accept this evidence as prima facie, but I dare say our Texas Legislature will pass a law of that kind if this bill becomes a law, and then I think by that method we are getting down to the real benefits of the bill, because if the cotton buyer in my town, for example, speaking personally, because I happen to know marketing conditions in my own section—if he knows he is going to get a fair grading of his product, will buy from the producer with more assurance that his grading will hold up at the other end of the line. Also cooperative marketing among farmers in the cotton-growing industry is, I am glad to say, coming more and more into use, and a definite, understandable standard of grades is bound to be very helpful to the success of this cooperative marketing. We as lawmakers should encourage it in every feasible and proper way that we can.

Mr. FULMER. I would like to say that about 10 cotton States have already passed laws adopting the official standard, and they want the passage of this bill to make it effective.

Mr. BLACK. Yes. I do not think section 3, the permissive licensing section, is necessary to the success of the bill, and it is my impression that the bill would be improved by striking that section out. However, the matter is in the hands of the committee, and I shall vote for the bill even if section 3 remains.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hesitate to have anything to say on a bill which has been so thoroughly discussed as has this. There are a few points, however, that occur to me ought to be emphasized. In the first place, it is very difficult to ascertain what is the proper grade in which a given bale of cotton belongs. Under practical marketing operations price depends upon the grade of course. The grade is generally determined by the buyer. Since the price depends largely upon what the grade is determined to be, and the buyer, who professes to be an expert, determines the grade, he has an unfair advantage over the seller. This bill, as I understand it, is intended to help remove that advantage. In the third place, it is highly essential for the orderly marketing of agricultural commodities that they be properly standardized and the grade be determined as early in the commercial transaction with reference to them as possible, in order that they may be bought and sold thereafter on paper; that thereafter that which represents the commodity may be traded in and the commodity moved under the prior sale from the point of concentration to the point of use. That would save a great deal on freight rates and create the possibility of a less total intervening profit.

There are some provisions in this bill that I do not agree with, but in the main I believe it will work good to those engaged in the cotton industry. I am one of those who believe that we ought not to legislate primarily for the producer or primarily for anybody. I think that legislation of this character ought to be in favor of honest commerce and of giving everybody a square deal with regard to the commodity being dealt in. An honest, impartial ascertainment by a disinterested judge when necessary of the actual grade of a commodity being sold on grade can do no injustice to anybody. The method of grading cotton has been changed a good deal, as has been explained. Under the old system, the grading of cotton, or rather the certificating of cotton, did not amount to much, because too little consideration was given to staple. I am in favor of the provision in the bill under which the Secretary of Agriculture, or somebody, will be able to designate additional grades, to cover the staple of the cotton, and so forth—in fact, to cover every important feature which is determinative of the use to which best adapted. This bill tends in that direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have no further requests for time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of "United States cotton standards act."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been waiting until we got through with the Texas delegation so that I could display more ignorance than some of them have, but there was not sufficient time to go around and I had to take my time under the five-minute rule. This is a technical subject and the provisions of the bill are technical. Even among the experts who testify here at length this afternoon they seem to differ as to the relative merits and the relative objections as to whether one thing is necessary or unnecessary, so that an ordinary nonexpert like myself has to rely upon the committee that has studied the bill. My experience with reference to cotton bills in the few years I have been in the House makes me a little bit cautious. So I want to get the record straight that I am taking the judgment of the committee on this bill. I think I have got enough ordinary intelligence, after having listened to the Texas statesmen, to discover that if the farmer ever gets any benefit from this bill it is going to be an indirect benefit. I think he will still have to bring his cotton to the market, and he will find the cotton buyer sitting on the curb saying, "Jim, I guess as this is your bale." Jim will get up, cut a hole in the side of the bale, pull out a couple of pounds of the cotton, and say, "Well, the market is a little off to-day—some little trash in this, a little bit stained, and the staple is a little short; I can't give you but 15 cents." And yet the morning papers may be quoting the ideal grade of cotton upon which market quotations are made 25, or at least 18. The poor farmer looks discouraged, but another cotton buyer steps up from the curb, looks at the cotton, and he will grab out 2 or 3 pounds, shake his head, and say, "Well, I will raise it an eighth. That's the best I can do for you, John." By the time he gets through the poor farmer has had no say about it; is glad to get through with the transaction with his wagon and team safe. [Laughter.] Do you think the bill is going to help him? The gentleman from Michigan says you can not have a Federal agent standing at the elbow of every farmer.

That is true; but if you really want to you could have some sort of provision by which the producer of cotton would have just as much protection and as much machinery for grading and classification and marketing and get the benefits of it as the cotton factors who now gobble up his distressed cotton. Read all of these farmer bills that you are introducing here. It is a sin in the eyes of the men who are the authors of these bills and who are putting them through for the wheat grower or the cotton farmer to hold his crop on the farm and feed it into the market in a steady way. The thing that the ultimate consumer is really interested in—the most economic way of marketing—is to allow it to be gradually fed into the market from the point of production and not dam up along the line in an expensive marketing system. All these bills for relief have to do with taking it away from the farmer and shoving it onto the market, whether the farmer wants it to go out at the price or not. That is the principal complaint that I have.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman thinks that I can get a little more time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman made a very interesting statement. He gave a particular instance, with all of the particulars of the transaction between the farmer and the buyer, and there he stopped. He says that the matter can be taken care of, and then he generalizes and flies off in the air. Get down to brass tacks and tell us how the gentleman would meet the very transaction that he is talking about.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I have read with some profit that passage in the Scriptures which says, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet and turn again and rend you."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, get down to brass tacks.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman would not know them if I got down to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. If you undertake to even discuss in a practical way the problem of the cotton farmer you have one of two classes jump on you in this House, those who would not know a stalk of cotton from a jimson weed, or else some one in the cotton-growing States who really thinks more of the cotton miller and the cotton spinner and the cotton factor in his State, or the cotton exchange, than he does of the cotton farmer.

The real object I had in taking the floor this afternoon was to get the record straight on another question. Farmers' organizations meet and they resolve and then ask us why we do not abolish this gambling in cotton. I am going to tell you what I tell them when I speak to them. I tell them that the reason why you do not do it is that a majority of the Members of the House do not know a thing on earth about the cotton question, and a majority of those from the cotton States sincerely and honestly believe that it would be a detriment if we did abolish gambling in cotton. I remember the last meeting of the cotton Members which we had. My good friend from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS] came here and felt as I did when I came here. He was going to do it; he was going to get down to brass tacks; he was going to give you a concrete proposition. So he introduced a bill to stop it. Then they had a meeting of those from the cotton-growing States held over in the majority room in the House Office Building. The object of the meeting was how to abolish and not how to regulate, but the men who believed in regulating captured the meeting, and over a point of order of mine they appointed a committee to consider what legislation might be enacted to regulate gambling in cotton futures, not abolish, and that committee has been as silent as the tomb of the Cæsars from that time to this, and has never reported to the full conference. So I say to my cotton growers and to the cotton growers of other States, when I talk to them, "You have nobody to blame but those of your representatives who do not believe it is to your interest to abolish that evil." They believe in regulating it. I know the experts say that I am a crank and that I am crazy, that it would mean the absolute ruination of the cotton grower if we stopped gambling; that it would never do.

They assume that supercilious air which generally goes with ignorance or arrogance. I am still unconvinced; I think it is just as much an evil to gamble in cotton as it is to gamble in anything else. If I had my way about it, I would stop it. I can not have my way about it. We had one chance here one night, and I put up the best fight I could, and that is one reason why I am a little impatient with some gentlemen who undertake to discuss this question, because I remember how they voted that night. We had a chance, and I put up the best fight I could, and it was the nearest chance we have ever had to doing something for the cotton farmer on that question, and if any cotton producer wants to know who believed in abolishing instead of regulating gambling in cotton let him go and get the roll call of that night and he will find where the sheep were separated from the goats. He will know who was trying to help the cotton farmer by destroying this cotton gambling, because it was admitted by the opponents of that proposal which was pending that night, in which I moved to concur—a Senate amendment—that it would do the business, but they were scared. There were so many cotton gamblers swarming around the hotels of this city that night that they could have opened a cotton exchange if they had the paraphernalia here. That is the nearest that we have ever gotten to abolishing that evil.

Mr. RANKIN. What bill is it that the gentleman is talking about?

Mr. WINGO. I am talking about the Clarke amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. When was that bill brought to the House?

Mr. WINGO. I do not remember the date. It was before the gentleman was a Member of the House; but I shall dig it up and give it to the gentleman if he would like to see it.

Mr. RANKIN. What was the principal provision that was voted down?

Mr. WINGO. The principal provision was something that would stop gambling in cotton futures, and it would actually do it, and that was the reason that my motion to accept it was voted down.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I do not feel it absolutely incumbent upon me to defend the Texas delegation or to apologize for members of that delegation speaking briefly to this measure. We come from a State that produces about one-third of the cotton. We come from a State that adjoins the State of my colleague [Mr. WINGO], who has just addressed you, and who rose with the declared ambition of trying to display as much ignorance as all of the delegation from Texas had displayed. I shall not pass judgment on the success of that effort.

Now, he told you about Old Reuben, when he comes up to sell a bale of cotton, his difficulties, and we agree thoroughly with him in reference to those difficulties. The gentleman from South Carolina looks to me like a fairly honest sort of man. You could hardly think he is guilty of any deep, dark design against the people of his own State. I do not believe he has a perfect bill, but I believe that he has honestly tried to do something here to benefit his cotton producers and cotton merchants and cotton associations of the State from which he comes. [Applause.] And when I look into the faces of my colleagues on the Committee on Agriculture who come from the section of the country where I live, and those who come from the other sections, I can not believe that when they bring a bill before this House they have made other than an honest effort to benefit the people of this country. It is true I did not consult with the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas as to whether I should support this bill before I declared my attitude toward it. [Laughter.] He lives next door to me and is a good friend of mine; and the next time when I feel myself in great uncertainty, not having time to visit the oracles of Mount Olympus—I believe that is where they operate—I will call on my friend next door and consult with him.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. WINGO. Having read the gentleman's report as a member of the Joint Agricultural Commission, in which the gentleman seems to have consulted the gods of Olympus and said the only complaint was that they deflated the farmer a year too late, I am inclined to think the gentleman might have consulted even an humble Member like myself on a bill instead of accepting apparently the theory of Governor Strong, of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman believes I should come to his office at any time on any subject on earth, but I sometimes prefer to exercise my own independent will and judgment as the representative of a lot of sovereign people. But I go for information where I think the information will be worth something after I get it. [Laughter.] Sometimes I go next door to my friend from Arkansas and sometimes I do not. I hope he will not compel me to come every time, because he is sometimes out, and he would not want me to roam around, not knowing what to do, until he could get back. [Laughter.] Sometimes you have to act and you have to act hurriedly up here, and a fellow has to do the best he can. You have to go to the best sources of information available. I sometimes have to go, for instance, to MARVIN JONES, who happens to come from my State and who is on this committee. I might ask him as to what I should do in reference to matters coming from his committee. I might sometimes ask him what he thinks about a bill which comes from his committee. That is what I did in this matter. Now, seriously—I am not very serious—I do not know why my friend wants to take a fall out of the Texas delegation and preface his remarks in discussing the bill here by saying he was ambitious to try to display as much ignorance as his friends who have the good fortune to come from Texas, and whom I believe are honestly trying to help this country. We are feeble and limited in our ability, but you can not expect our districts to measure up from the standpoint of representation to some districts represented in this House. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, some of you may have noticed that I went around looking at these samples of cotton. I do not think that these stalks are a fair sample of the cotton usually grown any more than if you should go into a huckleberry patch and pick out the very best cluster-filled bushes; there are not so many bolls on the usual type. As I look at all this it makes me ask, "Do you know the martyrdom of those who grow cotton?" You hear much about the little children in the slums. But do you know about the little children who pick cotton? Those fragments of leaves in the low-grade samples here are what brings down the price of cotton. They come often from the cotton picked by little children too young to be careful always, and from cotton that has been injured in storms. Then I think of those little bare feet in the cold as the children go out in the chill mornings of late autumn. The district of the gentleman from Arkansas is next to mine. The cotton fields run down to the Arkansas River, on the Oklahoma side in my district, and down to the Arkansas River on the Arkansas side in his district. He gave you a wonderfully graphic picture of the men who buy cotton, as they beat down the cotton farmers' prices; but he did not put in that picture as he drew it the buyers with their note books getting together in the morning before the wagons come, with the question, "What is the lowest we can give them to-day? What excuse can we make for not giving any more?"

Oklahoma is the fourth State in the Union in the production of cotton. I said just now, "Do you know the martyrdom of those who grow cotton, the endless toil of it—not machine toil, like planting and harvesting of grain? Cotton must be hoed by hand; it must be picked by hand. Peeping from the glossy leaves, the creamy cotton blossoms seek the sunshine, blushing to rosy crimson ere they fade and are followed by the boll. The cotton blossoms and blossoms till frost kills the plant, and the bolls ripen and burst unevenly, so that there must be more than one picking. Women and little children too often pick it, and the country school too often is deserted. In our county and community work we are trying to introduce more intelligent growing of cotton with an improved variety—a longer staple—that grows quicker and ripens more rapidly. Do you know about the boll weevil, that little imp of destruction, and what desolation and ruin it brings to the poor cotton farmer? A tenant farmer in whose family I am much interested came to see me to say, "Miss ALICE, can not you do anything for me"? The whole family—father, mother, children—had worked in the fields. After three years of crop failure they had been compelled, in order to buy seed and feed, to mortgage everything they had—teams, implements, even their milk cows. Thirty-five acres of "the prettiest cotton you ever saw," he said, "and prices good." Then just as it was almost ready for the bolls to begin opening the weevil took it all. Three years of unceasing toil, and everything must be swept away by unredeemable mortgages.

Now, I am not a lawyer. I do not know the technicalities of this bill. I only know this, that you say it will help our cotton people. If this be true, then pass this bill for the sake of the little children who have a right to live happier lives. You do not know what they go through under present conditions of cotton production and marketing. I can not put it in words. I will only say that I am next neighbor to Arkansas; and there were enough people who came over from Arkansas and enough people who came up from Texas to prevent my being reelected, because they vote the other way. [Laughter.] But it makes no difference whether they voted for me or not. They are American citizens, who ought to be helped, and helped by this bill if it will help. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful (a) in or in connection with any transaction or shipment in commerce made after this act shall become effective, or (b) in any publication of a price or quotation determined in or in connection with any transaction or shipment in commerce after this act shall become effective, or (c) in any classification for the purposes of or in connection with a transaction or shipment in commerce after this act shall become effective, for any person to indicate for any cotton a grade or other class which is of or within the official cotton standards of the United States then in effect under this act by a name, description, or designation, or any system of names, description, or designation not used in said standards: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent a transaction otherwise lawful by actual sample or on the basis of a private type which is used in good faith and not in evasion of or substitution for said standards.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, at the risk of displaying more ignorance, I will ask my friend from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], who possesses so much wisdom——

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. I have just notified all gentlemen that hereafter under the five-minute rule I shall insist upon Members discussing the bill only.

Mr. WINGO. I did not yield for a stump speech from the gentleman. I am discussing the bill. The gentleman can make his point of order at any time he wants to. I am not interested in the Louisiana cotton viewpoint at all. I have always fought the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, and I always intend to, and have no apologies to make.

I will ask the gentleman how does that proviso, that exception, affect the farmer? No answer. We might as well adjourn, because all wisdom has fled. [Laughter.]

Mr. FULMER. I will say to the gentleman that the cotton farmer would have the right to submit to the Department of Agriculture samples such as they usually use, and perhaps they can submit those provided by——

Mr. WINGO. Oh, what would happen to the farmer's team while he was waiting for the report from the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. FULMER. Liverpool——

Mr. WINGO. I am not talking about Liverpool. I am asking the gentleman what effect that would have on the sale of the farmer's cotton when he walked up to the local market and the cotton buyers agreed, as Miss ALICE has suggested, about what price they would pay for the farmer's cotton? That fact or that condition that Miss ALICE and I referred to is excepted from the provisions of the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Not at present, because I have had notice served on me that——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman asked a question for information. God knows he needs it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Let the gentleman answer, if he can. Let the gentleman give me the information.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This is a section to prevent the improper use of grades, and so on, not to prescribe courses of procedure where grades are referred to. But when people want to go entirely outside of this law and not sell on grades they can sell by type and samples if they please, and they will not violate the law.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman give me information in answer to my question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is the meaning of the proviso.

Mr. WINGO. My question was specific: How would that affect the farmer when he came to the local market place with 8 bales of cotton on his wagon and was dealing with the cotton buyers that Miss ALICE and I were talking about? If the gentleman can not give me information on that, very well.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. He can submit the grades and appeal to them if he wishes to do so. They may be found in some of the States. They may not be in the State represented by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the people in Arkansas have just as much intelligence as the people of Michigan. There are a good many people from Michigan down in Arkansas. They will not accept the view that the gentleman has expressed. Gentlemen, you can not get around the explanation for it. I prefaced my remarks a little while ago, when I made some facetious remarks, with the statement that I could not get time on a question that was technical; that I would have to rely upon the statements of the proponents of the bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman that I offered the gentleman 10 minutes and he would not take it.

Mr. WINGO. You did not give it to me.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; I offered the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, it is too little a matter to quibble about. I know what happened under the cotton futures act. My farmers lost a lot of money on account of a provision in it, and I am going to scrutinize carefully every cotton act that comes up before this House.

Why? For the reason I told you awhile ago. You may sneer if you want to and feel offended because I differ with your honest judgment. I said the reason why you did not stop the cotton-gambling evil of which the farmers complain was because the majority of you honestly felt it would be an injury to the farmer if you did. The only thing I am complaining about is that you ought to quit telling him by inference that you are going to do it when your judgment is against it. Some of you Members who have not been here very long do not know why certain gentlemen get red and white and are very indignant whenever I get to discussing the question of cotton gambling. I do not ask the gentleman from Texas to agree with me. He takes the Dallas viewpoint and I take the Buckhorn township viewpoint. He honestly believes what is set forth in a report which he signed, which, it is common knowledge, was inspired, so far as its views on credit are concerned, not so much by the friends of the American farmer but by a man whose point of view was that the most that could be said was that they deflated the American farmer just a year too late, that they ought to have trimmed him about a year before. That is something to which I can never agree. The gentleman is honest about it. I respect him, but he must not complain if I differ with him in my views on the subject of the cotton farmer and his credits.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I always yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman has given his own conclusion as to the sources from which I got my information and from which I drew my conclusions.

Mr. WINGO. I did not say the source. I said it was very evident where the inspiration came from for the whole idea, and the gentleman I suspect was fooled the same as I have been fooled sometimes from the same source.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to be offensive to the gentleman, and I do not think the gentleman wants to be offensive to me; but I respectfully challenge the statement just made as not being the fact in so far as it would impute to me going to Governor Strong or any other human being on earth.

Mr. WINGO. I did not impute anything to the gentleman. I was careful to say that he was sincerely honest. He has the conservative viewpoint. He has the Dallas viewpoint, and his view is honest and sincere in agreeing with the views of Governor Strong, of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. Of course, I do not mean to impute any bad faith to the gentleman. I do not like his views, and certainly that ought not to be offensive to the gentleman. I do not agree that it would have been all right if you had simply put your deflation policy into effect the year before, as your reports say. I say it was damnable to put it into effect at any time, and that it plundered the wheat grower and corn grower and cotton grower out of millions.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That any person who has custody of or a financial interest in any cotton may submit the same or samples thereof, drawn in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, to such officer or officers of the Department of Agriculture as may be designated for the purpose pursuant to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture for a determination of the true classification of such cotton or samples, including the comparison thereof, if requested, with types or other samples submitted for the purpose. The final certificate of the Department of Agriculture showing such determination shall be binding on officers of the United States and shall be accepted in the courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the true classification or comparison of such cotton or samples when involved in any transaction or shipment in commerce.

Mr. STEAGALL and Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not know that the gentleman from Michigan desired to offer an amendment. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 3, at the end of section 4, add the following: "The Secretary of Agriculture shall fix the rules and regulations for submitting samples of cotton for classification, providing that all samples shall be numbered so that no one interested in the transaction involved shall be known by any classifier engaged in the classification of such cotton or samples."

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman that that is all covered in the cotton futures act, and this is made a part of that act.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, upon the assurance of gentlemen of the committee that the amendment which I have offered is existing law, incorporated in the cotton futures act, I do not care to press the amendment if we can be sure of the fact.

Mr. ASWELL. This is in the regulations of the department under the cotton futures act.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think that removes the necessity for the amendment. It is certain that the adoption of this amendment can do no harm. I have not had an opportunity to compare the bill before us with the cotton futures act, and I am not prepared to say whether there is such a provision as this in the cotton futures act; or, if regulations under the cotton futures act have been adopted embodying provisions of the amendment which I have just offered, that they would relate to the bill before us. But if such be true, there can be no harm in the adoption of this amendment, and if not true, I think it wise to adopt the amendment. It simply seeks to preserve the secrecy of the transaction from any classifier who attempts to classify any cotton the grade or grades of which are in dispute between parties in interest. It would be very easy for the Secretary of Agriculture to fix rules and regulations by which the samples could be submitted to the department by number, so that no man acting as a classifier would know anybody connected with any transaction with which he was dealing.

As the cotton business is carried on the farmer goes to town and sells his bale or five bales of cotton, or whatever number of bales he has to offer, to the local buyers. The local buyer ships to the export town in 100-bale lots or 500-bale lots or larger lots, which shipments are subject to reclassification and reweight at the export center. All controversies or disputes over grades or classifications are left to be arbitrated at points of export. I think anything that will protect the cotton shipper who deals directly with the farmer will be reflected to some extent, at least, in a higher price and better market facilities for the farmer who deals with the cotton shipper. For that reason I am for the bill and expect to vote for it, but I think the amendment offered is a wise safeguard, and I hope it will be adopted. It will protect all parties to any controversy and protect them in the right to a fair decision, and protect the classifier from any suspicion or charge of unfairness.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 4, after the word "cotton," insert the words "in commerce."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, that is a matter I spoke about during general debate. I think it is proper and necessary to have those words inserted. It is only cotton in interstate commerce that the Government has any jurisdiction over.

If you refer to the title of the bill you will find that it is "to establish and promote the use of official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce." Section 2, line 6, has these words, "any transaction or shipment in commerce." It seems to me that these words "in commerce" were inadvertently omitted when the draft was made. They ought to appear in section 4. The rest of the act, or the act with which this will be connected, establishes a definition of commerce, and it is very broad. It includes cotton that is intended to be shipped out of the State and to a foreign country, or if it be naturally in the course of trade that will carry it outside. I do not remember the words, but it is very broad. It has been deemed entirely satisfactory as a definition not only in bills relating to cotton, but the packers' bill and other bills the titles of which I have not now in mind. Each law has a definition of interstate commerce, and the definition relating to cotton is the same—shipment in commerce. It seems to me that we ought not to try to go beyond our real authority in these matters and have the act apply to local transactions or to cotton that can not be brought within the definition of interstate commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan) there were 18 ayes and 25 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause the inspection, including the sampling, of any cotton involved in any transaction or shipment in commerce, wherever such cotton may be found, or of any cotton with respect to which a determination of the true classification is requested under section 4 of this act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 3, strike out all of section 7.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that I referred to in general debate. It seems to me that this carries authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to make inspection at any place and every place in the country where cotton is found or where cotton is sold. It would lead to the employment of a large number of men and the expenditure of large sums of money in order that the cotton might be inspected and graded for men who refuse even to try to do anything for themselves. It seems to me we are going too far in doing business in that manner or on that scale. If we do not wish it to be so done, we ought not to authorize it. If we do not wish to permit it, we ought not to leave words in the law that will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to do it.

One answer to my objection is that the Secretary of Agriculture does not intend to carry on business in that way. That, in my judgment, is not a good answer. I have always insisted that it is a very slothful and a highly improper method of legislating to write into a statute in broad, general terms authorization or permission to do many things, a part of which the Congress does not wish to have done, simply because somebody rises and tells us that the law is not to be carried out in the way it is written or to its limit; that the one who is given authority to execute it intends to do only so and so. If Congress knows what it wants done, it ought to write it into the law. If it knows what it does not want done, it ought to use the proper words to express its determination. It is unjustifiable to frame a statute in this way by which an official is authorized or even permitted to do what Congress knows it does not wish to have done.

I referred in my remarks a few moments ago to a debate yesterday over the migratory bird bill. The bill was defeated because of the unusual activities that would be permitted and required by a department of the Government and its agents. There was very good foundation for objection to that bill. It would send out a swarm of Federal employees, require licenses, make every boy who wished to use a gun take out a Federal license, and make it possible, perhaps, to flood the country with Federal agents to enforce the law. The bill before us now is open to the same objection.

There is another section of the bill which, it seems to me, covers this matter properly and as far as it ought to be covered. In case there is a controversy between a buyer and a seller a sample of the cotton about which there is a question can be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture or to one of his agents or employees at some point, and the inspection and grading can be done there. It seems to me that that is as far as the Government of the United States ought to go in meddling in a controversy—offering its aid to the people, spending its money in an effort to improve business and conditions. When the Government has gone as far as this bill properly provides it shall go, if those who are involved in a controversy, those whose property interests are involved, can not agree on a sample of cotton and send it to a suitable place to be investigated by the Secretary of Agriculture, it seems to me they are not entitled to any aid whatever by the Government.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that section 7 gives to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to examine and inspect. It will also be noted that section 2 has to do with unlawful transactions, and the Secretary is charged with the responsibility of preventing them. Section 4 has to do with the standard grades, and so forth. It must be clear that if the Secretary is to prevent unlawful transactions to establish grades, he ought to have authority to inspect the samples. He would be helpless without section 7. The sections are inseparable; they are tied together. Sections 2 and 4 would be valueless without section 7. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he return to line 22 on page 2 for the purpose of offering an amendment to change the word "of" to "or."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 2 for the purpose of offering the amendment suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to section 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, line 22, I move to strike out the word "of" and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "act," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14302, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendments? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STIMULATING CROP PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 265, to stimulate crop production in the United States.

The Clerk reported the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the joint resolution and against the whole of it. It carries with it not an authorization for an appropriation, but it carries with it an appropriation of $10,000,000. The particular phrase will be found in lines 9 and 10, on page 1, and under the rules of the House no such appropriation can be carried except after it has been considered and reported out by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the resolution is reported as it was passed by the Senate. It is true that under the rules of the House it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no interest in seeing the point of order overruled. In fact, I am opposed to the legislation and shall vote against it if the bill is considered. I do not recall that this point has been decided by the Chair. If this specific point has been decided as to lodging a point of order against an entire bill, I do not care to argue it. If it has not, I should like to present this thought to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The Chair will recall that the first ruling made by the Speaker on this question was made by the present Speaker, on a point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in which he directed the point of order to the entire bill, not quite in this manner, but he objected to its being on the calendar. He stated that he made the point of order in order that it might be ruled upon by the Speaker rather than a chairman, and he stated that he thought it ought to be overruled; that the rule was ambiguous in that the first part of the rule says:

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction.

Indicating that the bill should not be reported by the committee if it had an appropriation and by reporting the bill was subject to the point of order. However, the Chair held that reading the first part of the sentence of the rule with the second sentence of the rule the appropriation was subject to the point of order. The second part of the rule says:

A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

Now note the language of the rule, Mr. Speaker:

A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

Indicating that the question of order is directed to the appropriation. I have noticed this joint resolution, and wondered what would happen if the point of order was raised against the one paragraph, and I have concluded that if the point of order is sustained and the appropriation goes out, that the committee then has authority to go ahead and deal with the bill—making an amendment, for instance, for an authorization.

Now let me emphasize the necessity of that construction. Here we have a Senate bill. We did not draft it, our committee did not control it; it comes over here containing a great deal of legislative matter and also contains an appropriation. It goes to the committee having legislative jurisdiction. That committee has jurisdiction of a considerable part of that bill. If there had been an authorization, it would have had all the jurisdiction. If this point of order is sustained the House can not act upon the measure at all, because we can not report it with an amendment, because a bill reported with an amendment, under the first ruling of the Chair, is just as much subject to the point of order as the bill reported without any amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think there is a subsequent ruling of the Chair which holds that it is in order to report an authorization in lieu of an appropriation. I think the present Speaker has held that.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is, to amend the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I did not know about that ruling. You are dealing with a bill which the committee proposes and which may or may not be adopted by the House, but if the gentleman from Tennessee says there is a ruling to that effect I take it for granted there is. I do not care for the Chair to overrule that precedent; it is not necessary in the consideration of this case for him to do it.

The SPEAKER. It is simply a question of memory as to the decision formerly made. It seems to the Chair unless he should depart from the former decision he should sustain the point made by the gentleman from Indiana; the point of order must be made not against the whole bill but against the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, two weeks ago——

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to finish what I have in mind? I want to say it is an extremely important thing that the ruling be made that way, because otherwise we are in a hopeless confusion in reference to bills which will be referred to different committees, because sometimes there may be nine-tenths legislation and the other tenth appropriation, or nine-tenths appropriation and some part legislation. I think it is extremely important where a point of order is to be made, and yet a ruling might possibly be made against the bill or a part of it, that we ought to resolve any doubt in favor of addressing the point to a part of the bill in order to give freedom to the House to act upon the bill in a proper way.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Minnesota simply makes the point of order against the appropriation and not against the bill, but against the provision making appropriation. The provision making appropriation is clearly subject to the point of order, but the bill is not subject to a point of order. As I recall the ruling of the Chair, it was a protection of a bill so as to make it in order by adding the words "authorized to be made."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Minnesota made the point of order against the legislation itself because of the appropriation that is made in the legislation. The point of order went beyond the mere phraseology and was directed against the entire legislation.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the point of order is directed against the bill I can not concede the point of order, but if it is against that particular provision it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago when the House was considering legislation reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries a bill was presented for consideration providing for the utilization of some funds under the control of the Shipping Board for the purchase of some land on the Virgin Islands. The Chair, after the discussion, sustained the point of order. We recommitted the bill back to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The record will show, as was the fact, the committee did nothing further; that when the point of order had been sustained the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries immediately called up another bill. There was no order recommitting the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was no order entered recommitting the bill, but the bill was recommitted as of course.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The bill is still on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. It should not be on the calendar, because under the regular order of precedence when a bill is held by the Chair to be violative of the rule that the committee has not the authority to report a bill in such form, why it of course goes back to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Was there anything in that bill except an appropriation?

Mr. STAFFORD. It provided for the acquisition of a fuel station.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. There was nothing except that section?

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

The SPEAKER. If there was nothing else than that, then the point of order against the appropriation would in that case lie against the whole bill. That is the Chair's recollection of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have sent for a copy of the bill. It is Senate bill 1771. I wish to direct the special attention of the Speaker to the fact that in this case the committee reporting the bill does not report this bill with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. In this particular case?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; in this case before the Speaker at the present time. The committee does not report an amendment authorizing this appropriation, but they report it just in its present form. I might be inclined to agree that if the committee having this bill in charge had reported this bill with an amendment—which was within their power—authorizing an appropriation, then perhaps the question of order would not lie, even if that question were raised. But here the committee go beyond their authority and report an appropriation without regard to an authorization and recommend it with the full power of providing funds. It is a Senate bill and it came over to this House, and under those circumstances it would be violative of the rule, because the committee are reporting a bill with an appropriation. They are not reporting a bill with a mere authorization.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not quite catch the point of the gentleman from Wisconsin. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin arguing that if the point of order is good against the appropriation it lies against the whole bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the committee in its report had made an amendment that the appropriating power be superseded by an amendment of an authorization, the point of order would not lie. But the committee does not do that. The committee reports it entirely without any amendment, and under the circumstances it seems to me it is violative of the rule. If the committee reporting this bill had stricken out the appropriation and made an authorization, then it might not be violative of the rule.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, I have the Senate bill, as to which the Speaker said it was subject to a point of order. It is the bill S. 1771. It provides "That to provide a site for a fuel and fuel-oil station and fresh-water reservoir for Shipping Board and other merchant vessels, as well as United States naval vessels, and for other purposes, the United States, through the United States Shipping Board, is hereby empowered to acquire the land on Hazzell Island," and so forth, for so much, and in settlement of any accrued rentals therefor a sum of money, not exceeding $50,000, shall be paid out of its funds.

The SPEAKER. In that case the point was not raised whether it was against the whole bill or merely against the appropriation. The only discussion there, as the Chair finds in looking over the record, was that, coming from the Shipping Board, it was really an appropriation from the Treasury. That was the only question presented.

Mr. STAFFORD. The identical question was involved.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the distinction was not raised there.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] raised the point of order that it was in violation of clause 5 of Rule XXI. It had only one paragraph, as the present bill has only one paragraph.

The SPEAKER. But the distinction was not raised there by anybody as to whether the point of order lay against the whole bill or only against the appropriation.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin what would occur if the Chair should sustain a point of order against this bill, and how it would ever get on the floor of the House?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would say it would be recommitted immediately to the Committee on Agriculture and be reported back with an authorization. That would make it in order.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in the first ruling on this subject the Chair ruled that the committee had stricken out the appropriation and recommended an authorization, and did not change the condition under the rule because the House might not agree with the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is disposed in the light of the first ruling to hold that the point of order lies against the appropriation only. But the Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman on that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on that.

Mr. BEGG rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, the only remark I wish to make on this is that a careful reading of the bill clearly shows to me that there is a very small portion of the bill that is really legislative that can be separated from an appropriation by the peculiar wording of the whole business.

The SPEAKER. What the gentleman states is directly in line with what the Chair stated.

Mr. BEGG. I did not hear what the Chair said.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said he would be disposed to rule only against the appropriation, and that the point did not lie against the whole bill.

Mr. BEGG. I believe the Chair misunderstood, which does not speak very highly of the gentleman's presentation. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. Only a minor point of the bill can be separated from the immediate legislation and make any sense. And it seems to me that a point of order against the principal part of the whole bill nullifies the whole bill. Every instance that has been cited to the Chair prior to this time has been an instance where to subtract the appropriation did not kill the rest of the bill. Now, if you take the appropriation out, there is nothing left in this bill; merely an authorization to the President to set up machinery to do a certain thing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the point of order ought to go to the fact that when the Committee on Agriculture reported this bill they reported it in violation of the rule, and hence had no right whatever to report such a bill. So that the point of order ought to go to the whole bill. If it applies at all, it applies to everything in the bill. It applies to the right of the committee to report the bill at all. That is the contention I make.

The SPEAKER. The Chair covered that point pretty fully when he first ruled on the interpretation of this rule. Does anyone else wish to be heard on the other side of the question?

Mr. STEVENSON. I was only going to reply to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said, but the Speaker has done so very effectively.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the position taken by the Chair is well taken, then there is not very much effectiveness in the requirement that appropriations shall be considered only by the Committee on Appropriations. The Speaker will note that if this bill is allowed to go to the Committee of the Whole for consideration, all that will be necessary will be for the chairman of the committee to offer to amend and insert the word "authorize" instead of "appropriate." So that the rule that requires the consideration of these bills by the Committee on Appropriations will be of no avail.

The SPEAKER. Why, no; the bill would still after that have to go to the Committee on Appropriations before any appropriation could be made.

Mr. TOWNER. That is very true, but a bill carrying an authorization is not considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Why not? The Chair does not follow the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Because of the fact that if the House passes a bill authorizing the appropriation it virtually instructs the Appropriations Committee to make the appropriation.

The SPEAKER. But is not the reverse true, that the Appropriations Committee can not act unless the House has previously authorized it?

Mr. TOWNER. It is true that the Appropriations Committee can make no appropriation except under authority of existing law; but when a bill goes to another committee carrying an appropriation, can it be considered that they are considering the question of an appropriation? Certainly they must do so; and if that is the case, that is a violation of the rules of the House. The Chair will understand this proposition: Of course, if the objection is made, as it is made in this case by the gentleman from Minnesota, to the consideration of this bill, then the question must lie in the mind of the Speaker whether this is a proper bill for the consideration of the House as it is, without the opportunity of amendment. If it passes through these initial stages and goes before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and then the objection is made because it carries an appropriation, then all that is necessary is for somebody to move that the word "authorized" shall be inserted as an amendment. Therefore all the requirements of the rule that bills carrying appropriations shall go to the Committee on Appropriations will be made of no avail. It certainly seems to me that this is going to lead us very far away from the proper construction of the rule that requires appropriations to be considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Could not the Committee on Agriculture have reported a bill authorizing this appropriation, and would not that be the only way that it could have provided for an appropriation, by reporting this bill with the word "authorized"?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. And if now it puts in the word "authorized," has it done any more than it would have done in the first instance under those circumstances?

Mr. TOWNER. That would be very true, Mr. Speaker, but it nevertheless constitutes a violation of the rules. I think it would be very valuable if we understood that no committee should make a report on a bill carrying an absolute appropriation except the Committee on Appropriations, and that if another committee desired to obtain the right of consideration of a bill it should be an authorization and not an appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman bear in mind the fact that this is a Senate bill and that when it comes to the House it must be received by the House and it must go to some committee? It can not go to both the Agriculture and Appropriation Committees. It is more largely legislation than it is appropriation, and so the Speaker refers it to the Committee on Agriculture. Now, that committee certainly has jurisdiction of a part of that bill. It must go somewhere. It can not go to the Committee on Appropriations, because it is legislation. Now, when it goes to the Committee on Agriculture and is reported back with an appropriation, does not the point of order lie only to the appropriation? Is not that the purpose of the rule? Does not that construction strike out all that is necessary to be stricken? Would not any other construction withdraw from the Committee on Agriculture the power to consider the bill and to authorize? When the point of order is sustained as against the appropriating clause, that withdraws from the Agricultural Committee the power to appropriate, and that is all that is intended to be withdrawn from that committee. If you send it back to the Committee on Agriculture, and the committee has no jurisdiction of the bill because of an appropriation clause in a Senate bill, how are you going to get it out of the committee and how can it be properly referred to any other committee?

Mr. TOWNER. In what I said I had not considered the fact that this bill is a Senate bill. If that is the case, I am not so sure about the position which I have suggested. I would not like to venture an opinion upon that proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact is that in considering the point of order you must consider the report of the committee. That is what is before the House. They have reported a bill that is violative of this rule, and the bill is so intimately connected with the appropriation that the proposition which they have reported is, it seems to me, subject to the point of order. Speaker Clark ruled that in determining whether a bill was subject to a point of order he would have to take into consideration the amendments as recommended by the committee. But here the committee does not make any recommendation of an amendment which if adopted would bring it within the power of that committee to act.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I am always pleased to have the gentleman interrupt me.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Suppose the committee had brought in the bill with an amendment. The gentleman undertakes to make a distinction between the committee bringing in an appropriation bill without amendment and bringing it in with an amendment. Suppose it should bring in a bill containing an appropriation, but recommending an amendment that the appropriation be stricken out and the authorization substituted instead, and that when that amendment was proposed the House should vote it down and leave the appropriation. Then the bill itself would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the Chair allow me?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me the rule itself determines the matter. The last sentence in clause 5 of Rule XXI says:

A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

It is the appropriation upon which the point of order may be made.

The SPEAKER. When this matter first came up the Chair in his ruling discussed the matter quite thoroughly, and he sees no reason to change the view that he then stated, which was that while there is some contradiction in the rule itself, yet the last phrase which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has just quoted seemed then to the Chair and seems now to the Chair to be the controlling one, and that the point of order should be made on the appropriation itself. It seems to the Chair that the results of that ruling are really best for the control of the House over its business. The point made by the gentleman from Ohio, that if you take out the appropriation and it leaves nothing of any account, in that case the whole bill falls, is an argument which has weight in its practical effect, but, after all, that is a matter for the House to decide. If there is nothing left of any practical effect, the House would not care to act upon it. The Chair adheres to his original ruling, that the point of order must be made against the appropriation itself.

Mr. BEGG. Will the Chair permit me to make a statement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman, but will not change his ruling. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEGG. I want to say that the Chair, having made the statement he did make, that by withdrawing the appropriation it practically annihilates the bill, certainly ought to compel the Chair to go another step and say that the bill can not be considered, because the withdrawal of the appropriation in the average bill does not annihilate it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that it is for the Chair to decide in an individual case whether striking out the appropriation makes the bill useless; that is for the House and not for the Chair to determine. The Chair overrules the point of order against the bill as a whole.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the appropriation provision beginning on line 8, page 1.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that no quorum is present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Abernethy	Dunn	Kearns	Overstreet
Andrew, Mass.	Dyer	Keller	Park, Ga.
Ansorge	Echols	Kelley, Mich.	Parker, N. J.
Anthony	Edmonds	Kelly, Pa.	Parker, N. Y.
Atkeson	Faust	Kendall	Patterson, Mo.
Bacharach	Fenn	Kennedy	Perkins
Barkley	Focht	Kiess	Pou
Bell	Frear	Kindred	Rainey, Ala.
Blakeney	Free	King	Rankin
Bland, Ind.	French	Kitchin	Ransley
Bond	Frothingham	Kleczka	Rayburn
Bowers	Funk	Kline, N. Y.	Reber
Brand	Gallivan	Knight	Reed, N. Y.
Brennan	Garner	Kraus	Rhodes
Britten	Gifford	Langley	Riddick
Brooks, Ill.	Gilbert	Larson, Minn.	Riordan
Brooks, Pa.	Glynn	Lawrence	Roach
Buchanan	Goodykoontz	Layton	Robertson
Burdick	Gorman	Linthicum	Rodenberg
Burke	Gould	Little	Rogers
Butler	Graham, Pa.	Lowrey	Rose
Carew	Griffin	Luhring	Rosenbloom
Carter	Hardy, Tex.	McArthur	Rossdale
Chandler, N. Y.	Hawes	McClintic	Rucker
Chandler, Okla.	Hawley	McKenzie	Ryan
Clague	Hayden	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Schall
Classon	Hays	McLaughlin, Pa.	Scott, Mich.
Clouse	Henry	McSwain	Shelton
Cockran	Herrick	Mansfield	Slemp
Codd	Hersey	Martin	Smith, Mich.
Connolly, Pa.	Himes	Mead	Snell
Copley	Hogan	Michaelson	Sproul
Cramton	Huck	Mills	Steenerson
Crowther	Hukriede	Morin	Stiness
Cullen	Humphrey, Nebr.	Mudd	Stoll
Dale	Hutchinson	Murphy	Strong, Kans.
Davis, Minn.	James	Newton, Mo.	Strong, Pa.
Deal	Jeffries, Nebr.	Nolan	Sullivan
Denison	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Brien	Sweet
Drane	Jones, Pa.	Ogden	Tague
Dunbar	Kahn	Olpp	Taylor, Ark.

Taylor, Colo.	Timberlake	Vinson	Winslow
Taylor, N. J.	Tincher	Volk	Wood, Ind.
Ten Eyck	Treadway	Walters	Woodruff
Thomas	Tucker	Ward, N. Y.	Yates
Thompson	Underhill	Ward, N. C.	Zihlman
Thorpe	Upshaw	Wheeler
Tilson	Vestal	Williams, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and thirty-eight Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. MADDEN. I object to that, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, it is now 5 o'clock.

Mr. MADDEN. I will withdraw that demand for the present.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is it right for the Republican majority to engage in a filibuster?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I renew my motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, it is 5 o'clock, and it is plain that the bill can not be passed to-night. If it is agreeable to the author of the bill, I ask to withdraw the bill for the present with the purpose of getting a special rule later.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to say that the author of the bill happens to be a Senator of the United States from South Carolina. As far as I am concerned this House has the power to dispose of that bill and I shall not consent——

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The withdrawal of the bill does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were 114 ayes and 59 noes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 100, not voting 189, as follows:

YEAS—138.

Ackerman	Evans	Leatherwood	Sanders, Ind.
Andrews, Nebr.	Fairchild	Lee, N. Y.	Sanders, N. Y.
Appleby	Fairfield	Lehlbach	Schall
Arentz	Fess	Longworth	Scott, Tenn.
Barbour	Fish	Luce	Shaw
Beedy	Fitzgerald	McFadden	Shreve
Begg	Fordney	MacGregor	Sinnott
Bird	Frear	Madden	Slemp
Bixler	Freeman	Maloney	Smith, Idaho
Boies	Fuller	Mapes	Snyder
Brown, Tenn.	Gensman	Merritt	Speaks
Burtness	Gernerd	Michener	Stafford
Cable	Graham, Ill.	Miller	Stephens
Campbell, Kans.	Green, Iowa	Mondell	Strong, Kans.
Campbell, Pa.	Greene, Mass.	Moore, Ill.	Summers, Wash.
Cannon	Greene, Vt.	Moore, Ohio	Sweet
Chalmers	Hadley	Moores, Ind.	Swing
Chindblom	Hardy, Colo.	Morgan	Taylor, Tenn.
Christopherson	Hickey	Mott	Temple
Clarke, N. Y.	Hicks	Nelson, Me.	Thompson
Cole, Iowa	Hill	Nelson, A. P.	Tinkham
Cole, Ohio	Hoch	Newton, Minn.	Towner
Colton	Hull	Norton	Treadway
Cooper, Ohio	Humphrey, Nebr.	Patterson, N. J.	Vaile
Coughlin	Husted	Paul	Wason
Crago	Johnson, Wash.	Petersen	Watson
Cramton	Kelley, Mich.	Porter	Webster
Curry	Ketcham	Pringey	White, Kans.
Dallinger	Kirkpatrick	Purnell	White, Me.
Darrow	Kissel	Radcliffe	Williamson
Dempsey	Kline, Pa.	Ramseyer	Wood, Ind.
Denison	Knutson	Reece	Wyant
Dickinson	Kopp	Reed, W. Va.	Young
Elliott	Kraus	Ricketts
Ellis	Lea, Calif.	Robsion

NAYS—100.

Almon	Davis, Tenn.	Jeffers, Ala.	Quin
Aswell	Dominick	Johnson, Miss.	Rainey, Ill.
Bankhead	Doughton	Jones, Tex.	Raker
Beck	Drewry	Kincheloe	Rankin
Bell	Driver	Lanham	Rayburn
Black	Dupré	Lankford	Roach
Bland, Va.	Favrot	Larsen, Ga.	Rouse
Blanton	Fields	Lazaro	Sabath
Bowling	Fisher	Lee, Ga.	Sanders, Tex.
Box	Foster	Logan	Sandlin
Brand	Fulmer	London	Sinclair
Briggs	Garrett, Tenn.	Lowrey	Sisson
Browne, Wis.	Goldsborough	Lyon	Smithwick
Bulwinkle	Hammer	McCormick	Steagall
Byrnes, S. C.	Hardy, Tex.	McDuffie	Stedman
Byrns, Tenn.	Haugen	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stevenson
Cantrill	Hawes	Montague	Sumners, Tex.
Clark, Fla.	Henry	Moore, Va.	Swank
Collier	Hooker	Nelson, J. M.	Ten Eyck
Collins	Huddleston	O'Connor	Tillman
Connally, Tex.	Hudspeth	Oldfield	Turner
Cooper, Wis.	Humphreys, Miss.	Parks, Ark.	Tyson
Crisp	Jacoway	Perlman	Voigt
Volstead	Wilson	Wise	Wright
Weaver	Wingo	Woods, Va.	Wurzbach

NOT VOTING—189.

Abernethy	Free	Lampert	Rodenberg
Anderson	French	Langley	Rogers
Andrew, Mass.	Frothingham	Larson, Minn.	Rose
Ansorge	Funk	Lawrence	Rosenbloom
Anthony	Gahn	Layton	Rossdale
Atkeson	Gallivan	Lineberger	Rucker
Bacharach	Garner	Linthicum	Ryan
Barkley	Garrett, Tex.	Little	Scott, Mich.
Benham	Gifford	Luhring	Sears
Blakeney	Gilbert	McArthur	Shelton
Bland, Ind.	Glynn	McClintic	Siegel
Bond	Goodykoontz	McKenzie	Smith, Mich.
Bowers	Gorman	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Snell
Brennan	Gould	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sproul
Britten	Graham, Pa.	McPherson	Steenerson
Brooks, Ill.	Griest	McSwain	Stiness
Brooks, Pa.	Griffin	MacLafferty	Stoll
Buchanan	Hawley	Magee	Strong, Pa.
Burdick	Hayden	Mansfield	Sullivan
Burke	Hays	Martin	Tague
Burton	Herrick	Mead	Taylor, Ark.
Butler	Hersey	Michaelson	Taylor, Colo.
Carew	Himes	Mills	Taylor, N. J.
Carter	Hogan	Morin	Thomas
Chandler, N. Y.	Huck	Mudd	Thorpe
Chandler, Okla.	Hukriede	Murphy	Tilson
Clague	Hutchinson	Newton, Mo.	Timberlake
Classon	Ireland	Nolan	Tincher
Clouse	James	O'Brien	Tucker
Cockran	Jefferis, Nebr.	Ogden	Underhill
Codd	Johnson, Ky.	Oliver	Upshaw
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Olpp	Vestal
Copley	Jones, Pa.	Overstreet	Vinson
Crowther	Kahn	Paige	Volk
Cullen	Kearns	Park, Ga.	Walters
Dale	Keller	Parker, N. J.	Ward, N. Y.
Davis, Minn.	Kelly, Pa.	Parker, N. Y.	Ward, N. C.
Deal	Kendall	Patterson, Mo.	Wheeler
Dowell	Kennedy	Perkins	Williams, Ill.
Drane	Kiess	Pou	Williams, Tex.
Dunbar	Kindred	Rainey, Ala.	Winslow
Dunn	King	Ransley	Woodruff
Dyer	Kitchin	Reber	Woodyard
Echols	Kleczka	Reed, N. Y.	Yates
Edmonds	Kline, N. Y.	Rhodes	Zihlman
Faust	Knight	Riddick
Fenn	Kreider	Riordan
Focht	Kunz	Robertson

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. Dunn with Mr. Abernethy.

Mr. Newton of Missouri with Mr. Mansfield.

Mr. Burton with Mr. O'Brien.

Mr. Magee with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Lampert with Mr. Martin.

Mr. Hutchinson with Mr. Carter.

Mr. Anthony with Mr. Kunz.

Mr. Keller with Mr. Drane.

Mr. Free with Mr. Kitchin.

Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. McSwain.

Mr. Davis of Minnesota with Mr. Oliver.

Mr. Langley with Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania with Mr. Garrett of Texas.

Mr. Kahn with Mr. Overstreet.

Mr. Bacharach with Mr. Cullen.

Mr. Morin with Mr. Pou.

Mr. Faust with Mr. Griffin.

Mr. Rhodes with Mr. Linthicum.

Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Kindred.

Mr. Lineberger with Mr. Carew.

Mr. Frothingham with Mr. Park of Georgia.

Mr. Dowell with Mr. Rucker.

Mr. Kennedy with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

Mr. Paige with Mr. Sears.

Mr. Brennan with Mr. Tague.

Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Riordan.

Mr. Kiess with Mr. Sullivan.

Mr. Kline of New York with Mr. Barkley.

Mr. Griest with Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Crowther with Mr. Deal.

Mr. Britten with Mr. Hayden.

Mr. Kearns with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. Edmonds with Mr. Cockran.

Mr. Codd with Mr. McClintic.

Mr. Hawley with Mr. Gallivan.

Mr. Butler with Mr. Mead.

Mr. Kendall with Mr. Stoll.

Mr. Fenn with Mr. Thomas.

Mr. Snell with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.

Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.

Mr. Williams of Illinois with Mr. Upshaw.

Mr. Rogers with Mr. Turner.

Mr. Tincher with Mr. Vinson.
Mr. Winslow with Mr. Tucker.
Mr. Olpp with Mr. Ward of North Carolina.
Mr. Tilson with Mr. Williams of Texas.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ADJOURNMENT.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 15, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

988. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a schedule of papers and documents which are not needed in the transaction of public business and which, in the opinion of this department, have no permanent value or historical interest; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

989. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, amounting to $90,000 (H. Doc. No. 572); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

990. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a list of judgments rendered against the Government by the district courts of the United States which requires an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 573); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

991. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting schedules of claims amounting to $716,380.66 allowed by the various divisions of the General Accounting Office, as covered by certificates of settlement (H. Doc. No. 574); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

992. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, amounting to $72,811.41, which have been submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury and require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 575); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HUDSPETH: Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands. H. R. 13550. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Elephant Butte irrigation district of New Mexico and the El Paso County improvement district No. 1, of Texas, for the carrying out of the provisions of the convention between the United States and Mexico, proclaimed January 16, 1907, and providing for compensation therefor; with amendments (Rept. No. 1601). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GORMAN: Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. H. R. 8329. A bill to reduce night work in post offices; with amendments (Rept. No. 1602). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Committee on Foreign Affairs. S. 4522. An act authorizing the Secretary of State to convey certain land owned by the United States in Santiago, Chile, to the municipality of that city, and to acquire or receive in exchange therefor other land located in the said city; without amendment (Rept. No. 1604). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUDDLESTON: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 4387. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Tugaloo River between South Carolina and Georgia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1605). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FIELDS: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 3461. An act to amend the act of February 28, 1920, so as to authorize the acquisition of additional land and the disposition of certain lands already acquired at Camp Knox, Ky.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1607). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WRIGHT: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 4404. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to trustees to be named by the Chamber of Commerce of Columbia, S. C., certain lands at Camp Jackson, S. C.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1603). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. FISH: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. R. 14317. A bill granting permission to Capt. Norman Randolph, United States Army, to accept the decoration of the Spanish Order of Military Merit of Alfonso XIII; with amendment (Rept. No. 1606). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McCORMICK: Committee on the Public Lands. S. 2934. An act to provide for the issuance to John W. Stanton by the Secretary of the Interior of patent to certain land upon payment therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre; without amendment (Rept. No. 1608). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 14336) fixing the rank of the officer of the United States Army in charge of the inland and coastwise waterways service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FROTHINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 14337) to incorporate the Belleau Wood Memorial Association; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 14338) to authorize the sale of certain Government property and authorizing an appropriation for permanent buildings and improvements for use of the engineering division of the Air Service of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VOIGT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 444) protesting against the invasion of the Ruhr Valley by France, requesting the President to call an international economic conference, and requesting settlement of the French debt; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LARSEN of Georgia: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 445) providing for the appointment of a joint committee of the House and Senate to investigate conditions in the United States Veterans' Bureau; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. VOIGT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 446) directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the proposed merger of Armour & Co. and Morris & Co.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McKENZIE: Resolution (H. Res. 530) for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Military Affairs; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 14339) for the relief of Samuel T. Hubbard, jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 14340) granting an increase of pension to Malinda Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIEST: A bill (H. R. 14341) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Ann Eby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14342) granting an increase of pension to Edward D. Henderson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14343) granting a pension to Mary J. Light Lawrence; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14344) granting a pension to John Zellers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 14345) granting a pension to Eva R. Hunt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14346) granting a pension to Sarah Parker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHELTON: A bill (H. R. 14347) granting a pension to Angeline M. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14348) granting a pension to Lucy N. Yarbrough; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TREADWAY: A bill (H. R. 14349) granting an increase of pension to Margaret M. Luce; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IRELAND: Resolution (H. Res. 531) for the employment of additional help in the enrolling room; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7297. By Mr. BRENNAN: Petition signed by 487 citizens of the thirteenth congressional district of Michigan, favoring the recognition of Ireland by the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7298. Also, petition of 2,450 citizens of the thirteenth congressional district of Michigan, urging the United States to recognize the Irish Republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7299. By Mr. CURRY: Petition of the directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Sacramento, Calif., favoring a minimum Army strength of 150,000 enlisted men and 13,000 officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7300. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Rodgers & Hagerty (Inc.), New York City, N. Y., urging modification of the present immigration law; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

7301. By Mr. PORTER: Petition of 869 signers, residents of Pittsburgh, Pa., indorsing House Joint Resolution 412, for the relief of Austria and Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7302. By Mr. RIORDAN: Petition of sundry citizens of the eleventh and nineteenth congressional districts of New York, urging that aid be extended to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7303. By Mr. TREADWAY: Petition of the town of Hancock, Mass., making recommendations with reference to the existing coal situation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 15, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, February 13, 1923.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McKinley	Smith
Ball	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Bayard	Gooding	Moses	Spencer
Borah	Hale	Nelson	Sterling
Bursum	Harreld	New	Sutherland
Calder	Harrison	Nicholson	Swanson
Cameron	Heflin	Norris	Townsend
Capper	Hitchcock	Oddie	Trammell
Caraway	Johnson	Overman	Underwood
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Wadsworth
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Kellogg	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Keyes	Pittman	Warren
Dial	Ladd	Pomerene	Watson
Dillingham	La Follette	Ransdell	Weller
Ernst	Lenroot	Reed, Mo.	Williams
Fernald	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Fletcher	McCormick	Robinson
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Sheppard
George	McKellar	Shields

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, information relative to the number and cost of maintenance of privately owned passenger-carrying automobiles in use by the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its branches, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

SENATOR FROM OHIO.

Mr. WILLIS. I present the credentials of Hon. SIMEON D. FESS, Senator elect from the State of Ohio, which I ask may be read and placed on file.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

IN THE NAME AND BY THE AUTHORITY OF THE STATE OF OHIO.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that at a regular election held in the State of Ohio on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1922, SIMEON D. FESS was duly elected a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1923.

Witness his excellency our governor, Harry L. Davis, and our seal hereto affixed at Columbus, Ohio, this 8th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.]

HARRY L. DAVIS, Governor.

By the governor:

HARVEY C. SMITH,
Secretary of State.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3721) providing for the erection of additional suitable and necessary buildings for the National Leper Home.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3220) to amend sections 2, 5, 11, 12, 15, 19, 29, and 30 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 12053. An act to define butter and to provide a standard therefor; and

H. R. 14302. An act to establish and promote the use of the official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent deception therein, and provide for the proper application of such standards, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of the Akron (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce favoring the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LADD presented a memorial, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Mandan, N. Dak., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEYES presented communications in the nature of petitions of the congregations of the Atkinson Congregational Church of Atkinson, the Congregational and Baptist Churches of New Ipswich, the Congregational Church of Henniker, the Congregational Church of Gilsum, and the trustees of the New Hampshire Congregational conference, held at the South Congregational Church of Concord, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANSDELL presented a memorial, numerously signed, by sundry citizens of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the body of the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

PETITION TO CONGRESS.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Believing (1) in the separation of church and the State;

(2) That Congress is prohibited by the first amendment to the Constitution from enacting any law enforcing the observance of any religious institution, or looking toward a union of church and State, or of religion and civil government;

(3) That any such legislation is opposed to the best interests of both church and State; and

(4) That the first step in this direction is a dangerous step and should be opposed by every lover of liberty;

We, the undersigned adult residents of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, earnestly petition your honorable body not to pass the compulsory Sunday observance bill (S. 1948) which aims to regulate Sunday observance by civil force under penalty for the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to present and have embodied in the RECORD in 8-point type a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania regarding the installation of the modern mail-tube system, and I also request that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

No. 2.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
January 29, 1923.

Whereas the sentiment of Philadelphia, like that of the other cities of the country where the modern mail-tube system has been tested, is emphatically in favor of it, as indicated by the press and by public expression, by the great business organizations, by city councils, and by the public generally: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That this legislature associates itself with the public's progressive demand for the use and extension of such service as a necessity of the post office and a relief to the congestion of the already overcrowded thoroughfares of our larger cities; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Commonwealth be requested to forward a copy of this resolution to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the Federal House of Representatives for presentation to Congress.

THOMAS H. GARVIN,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The foregoing resolution was concurred in by the senate February 6, 1923.

WM. P. GALLAGHER.
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Approved the 7th day of February, A. D. 1923.

GIFFORD PINCHOT, Governor.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Harrisburg, February 14, 1923.

PENNSYLVANIA, ss:

I, Clyde L. King, Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, having the custody of the Great Seal of Pennsylvania, do hereby certify that the foregoing and annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of Concurrent Resolution No. 2 of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, approved the 7th day of February, A. D. 1923, as the same appears of record and on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed the day and year above written.

[SEAL.]

CLYDE L. KING,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. BORAH presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF IDAHO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, F. A. Jeter, secretary of state of the State of Idaho and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial No. 6 with the original thereof adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Idaho and filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Idaho February 8, 1923, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Idaho. Done at the capitol at Boise, Idaho, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1923.

[SEAL.] F. A. JETER, Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A joint memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas great distress obtains upon Government Federal reclamation projects in the State of Idaho; and

Whereas in the early history of the movement for the construction of Government reclamation project in the State of Idaho the Government of the United States on April 5, 1904, caused to be published Senate bill No. 247, and at page 20 thereof in said document discloses the representations made by the representatives of the Government of the United States as to the costs of reclamation per acre upon the Boise project, and Mr. Newell, who at the time was Director of the Reclamation Service, at a meeting of the citizens of Boise Valley among other things made the following representations:

"Replying to another question he said the cost could not possibly exceed $20 or $25 per acre."

The cost referred to by the director was the cost for a water right and completed project to be assessed against the lands of the Boise project; and

Whereas, when the first unit of the Boise project had been completed, and the only one that has been completed, the Secretary of the Interior announced an $80 charge per acre for each acre of land; and

Whereas Senate Document No. 247, published by the Government of the United States, was spread broadcast throughout the Middle West and State of Idaho and elsewhere as an inducement for settlers to take up Government land and to enter into contractual relations with the Government of the United States and assume to pay the burden of reclamation; and

Whereas hundreds of settlers went upon Government lands and located within the reclamation projects of the State of Idaho, with the understanding that they would be required to pay from $20 to $25 per acre for the reclamation of their lands, and many of whom waited from five to nine years after their location upon desert lands before any water was furnished to them whatsoever upon their lands from said reclamation project or any other source; and

Whereas hundreds of settlers upon Federal reclamation projects in the State of Idaho have exhausted all of their resources in an effort to meet their obligations to the Government of the United States and at this time are practically penniless; and

Whereas the Federal reclamation projects in the State of Idaho are confronted with one of two alternatives, first, an extension of time must be given and arrangements made for a reasonable distribution of the payments required to be made to the Government, or, second, hundreds of settlers who have spent from 10 to 15 years of the best part of their lives in an attempt to make homes upon Federal reclamation projects in the State of Idaho will be forced to abandon their said homes and seek a living elsewhere, and that, too, in the declining years of their lives; and

Whereas the conditions heretofore stated in this memorial have been greatly augmented, on account of excessive freight rates obtaining from the State of Idaho to eastern markets, being practically prohibitive, until the products grown upon Federal reclamation projects have rotted in the fields, for the reason that they would not bring sufficient sums to pay transportation charges; and

Whereas justice and a desire to show our appreciation to those who have struggled for years to subdue the desert and to improve our country and its citizenship impels us to ask that the Congress of the United States of America, by act of Congress, postpone all payments overdue upon reclamation projects and spread all of the remaining payments to fall due, together with said past due payments, over a period of 40 years, to the end that the Government may have returned to it by the citizens who have in most instances undertaken to reclaim desert lands on Federal reclamation projects: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we earnestly urge the Congress of the United States of America to immediately enact legislation in harmony with this resolution; and be it

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho is hereby instructed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and that copies of the same be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

This memorial passed the house on the 3d day of February, 1923.

M. A. KIGER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 5th day of February, 1923.

H. C. BALDRIDGE,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within House Joint Memorial No. 6 originated in the house of representatives during the seventeenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

DAVE BURRELL,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McNARY presented the following resolution of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

THIRTY-SECOND LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, REGULAR SESSION.

Senate Joint Resolution No. 7, introduced by committee on resolutions and read January 26, 1923.

Whereas by section 19a of the interstate commerce act providing for the valuation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the properties of common carriers it is provided that "such investigation shall show the value of its property in each of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, classified and in detail as herein required"; and

Whereas the commission in its valuation reports thus far made has shown the values of properties covered by such reports in each case as a whole only and has failed to show the values thereof "in each of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia"; and

Whereas the bureau of valuation of said commission has recommended to the commission that it request Congress to relieve it from showing the values of said properties by States; and

Whereas it is desirable for various uses and purposes that such valuation shall be shown separately by States as aforesaid: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives jointly concurring), That the thirty-second legislative assembly of the State of Oregon now in session expresses its view that the Interstate Commerce Commission should show as to each interstate carrier the value of its property in each of the several States in which said property exists, and that no change in the law to sanction failure to make such showing ought to be sought or made; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each United States Senator and each Member of Congress from Oregon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1847) to amend an act approved February 12, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Co., in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1145) thereon.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 4414) to amend the act of Congress approved September 6, 1922, relating to the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in alleys in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1146) thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6650) providing additional terminal facilities in square east of 710 and square 712 in the District of Columbia for freight traffic, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1147) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4192. An act to permit the correction of the general account of Charles B. Strecker, former Assistant Treasurer United States (Rept. No. 1148);

H. R. 7010. An act for the relief of Southern Transportation Co. (Rept. No. 1149);

S. 4179. An act for the relief of Charles W. Mugler (Rept. No. 1150); and

S. 4493. An act for the relief of the owners of the American schooner Mount Hope (Rept. No. 1151).

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4544) to authorize the extension of the period of restriction against alienation on surplus lands allotted to minor members of the Kansas or Kaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1152) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4557) providing for the disposal of certain lands on Crooked and Pickerel Lakes, Mich., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 4558) granting permission to Mrs. R. S. Abernethy, of Lincolnton, N. C., to accept the decoration of the Bust of Bolivar (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 4559) authorizing the President to declare an embargo on coal; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. McCORMICK:

A bill (S. 4560) granting a pension to John A Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 4561) granting a pension to Francisca Chavez de Pena; and

A bill (S. 4562) granting a pension to Josefa Uriaste de Lovato; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 4563) granting a pension to P. J. Langan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4564) granting a pension to Ella M. Sims (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4565) granting a pension to Margaret Donahue; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 4566) for the relief of Ruth Dixon Philbrick (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4567) to provide for the extension of Bancroft Place between Phelps Place and Twenty-third Street NW., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4568) granting a pension to Osborne G. Crosby; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 280) for the relief of the city of Astoria, Oreg.; to the Committee on Finance.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FLORAL WREATH FOR SILENT TRIBUTE TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 39), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to purchase a floral wreath to be placed at the base of the Washington Monument on Washington's Birthday, February 22, 1923, on the occasion of the ceremonies attending upon the silent tribute, the expense of such wreath to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I give notice that on Monday morning I shall ask the permission of the Senate to speak on the resolution for the assembling of a three months' world conference at Washington, D. C., to be called by the President of the United States.

STANDARDS FOR COTTON.

The bill (H. R. 14302) to establish and promote the use of the official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce; to prevent deception therein and provide for the proper application of such standards, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

STANDARD FOR BUTTER.

The bill (H. R. 12053)) to define butter and to provide a standard therefor was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). This bill being the same as Senate bill 3858, which has been reported favorably from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Chair, if there be no objection, will order that the bill go to the calendar.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the pending question before the Senate is the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. to-day (Thursday), February 15, 1923, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than five minutes upon the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, nor more than once nor longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that was the original request, and it was agreed yesterday to make it Friday instead of Thursday.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me interrupt the Senator from Utah. I do not want to be put in a false attitude. If the agreement is entered into, there will probably be a sort of gentleman's understanding that speeches shall be devoted to the bill. I gave notice several days ago that to-day, as soon as I could get recognition, I would address the Senate on a subject that is not particularly relevant to the pending bill. I do not want to have any misunderstanding about it. I want to carry out the notice that I have given.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to the Senator proceeding. I understand he wants to occupy the floor only for about 25 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that will be as much time as I shall want to take.

Mr. SMOOT. But even if it were longer than that, there is nothing in the unanimous-consent agreement to prevent it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand there is nothing technically to prohibit me from proceeding, but still if a time limit is placed on the discussion of the bill, I would not want to be one who would drift off and talk about something else, especially when I had premeditated it. I do not want any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there are a number of Senators who want to speak on the question, I ask the Senator from Utah if he will not make it Saturday at 2 o'clock, and modify the agreement to that extent.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if there are others who desire to speak at length after to-day the Senate can, if it wants, meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a very difficult hour to meet. Eleven o'clock is about as early as we can get here.

Mr. SMOOT. If other Senators want to speak, we can run right on through the evening. In other words, let the agreement stand as proposed, or we could make it 4 o'clock or 5 o'clock instead of 2 o'clock on Friday.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why not make it 1 o'clock on Saturday? That would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think it is fair that I should say that I can not consent to such an arrangement. I can not control the handling of the bill. I hope, unless we can reach an agreement to dispose of the bill to-morrow, that we may go on to-day and to-night and meet as early in the morning as the majority of the Senate will agree on, and run as late to-morrow night as the majority of the Senate will have us run. I feel that I am just about as liberal as I can be in consenting to the bill going over until to-morrow without attempting to bring it to a vote sooner. So I shall not give my consent to an agreement extending the time until Saturday.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the agreement was discussed at length yesterday. I believe that as it is now proposed it will afford ample time for all Senators who intend to discuss the bill to do so. I believe it is a fair arrangement. I doubt whether the additional time suggested by the Senator from Tennessee is required. If, however, he thinks it is, of course he is at liberty to object to this agreement. In view of what transpired yesterday, however, I hope that it may be entered into.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee if he desires to make the hour 4 o'clock or 5 o'clock, or even 6 o'clock, that will be perfectly satisfactory to me. I will remind the Senator that the request is merely that after that time speeches shall be limited to five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not believe that that should be done. I would not object to making the hour 3 o'clock, but I think a reasonable time should be accorded for the discussion of amendments which will be presented.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely made the suggestion, I will say to the Senator——

Mr. BORAH. We ought to be allowed more than five minutes. I suggest to the Senator to give us 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that modification of the request ought to be made.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Utah that I have not talked with other Senators and do not know as to their desires, but I wish to speak a short time on the bill, and I do not wish to be debarred from doing so. I would not want to be confined, however, to five minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. I said on yesterday that I was perfectly willing to extend the time to 10 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that 10 minutes should be allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to make the request for 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, unless the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] deems it necessary to extend the time for general debate. I think the proposal as now made will afford ample opportunity for discussion.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Nebraska has stated that he desires to make some remarks, and other Senators have stated that they also desired to discuss the bill. It is a matter of importance, as I think everybody will admit. The bill has been discussed fairly on both sides, and it ought to have reasonable discussion. I have sent to the Secretary of the Treasury for certain figures, which I have not yet received, and I should like to receive those figures. I do not know whether or not I shall receive them to-day or to-morrow. There has been some delay in sending them. I hope the Secretary will send them to-day, but I do not know whether or not he will do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question that the Senator from Tennessee will receive the figures to-day.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Does the Senator from Utah know anything about the request which I have made for those figures?

Mr. SMOOT. No; but I know that the Treasury Department responds promptly to such requests.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have asked the Secretary of the Treasury to have the actuary, Mr. McCoy, submit certain figures as I think are of importance, and I know Mr. McCoy is perfectly willing to do so if he gets the direction of the Secretary to that effect. It seems to me that a 10-minute limitation of debate on Saturday at any hour that may be fixed would be a very satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that we can not secure such an agreement extending the time to Saturday.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I do not wish to put anything in the way of an early vote on the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that with the opportunity to debate the bill without restriction between this time and to-morrow afternoon at 2 or 3 o'clock a limitation of 10 minutes on speeches thereafter on amendments and the bill would give ample opportunity to every Senator who desires to speak to do so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I think I can settle this controversy. For one, I shall object at this time to any unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this is not an agreement to vote on the bill, although it contemplates that a vote shall be taken some time after 2 o'clock on to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. The proposition is to limit the speeches on the bill and amendments to 10 minutes after that hour.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, this is the most tremendous contract that our country has ever been called upon to make. It proposes to tie the United States to the chariot wheels of British diplomacy and British finance for 62 years. The effort to rush this bill through Congress resembles nothing so much as the effort of a gentleman who has a gold brick to sell and who has to dispose of it quickly if he gets rid of it at all. Whenever one finds such indecent haste it is always well to look into the transaction itself.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yesterday afternoon the debate was practically exhausted; no Senator was present who was ready to go on. A request to vote some time to-day was presented to the Senate. I myself stated that I thought that was entirely too early, and asked that the request go over in order that all Senators who were interested in the subject matter—having in mind particularly the Senator from Missouri—might be present when the proposed unanimous-consent agreement was considered. There was no Senator in the Chamber yesterday who was ready to proceed with the debate, and, from the information that had reached me, the debate would have become exhausted before 2 o'clock on Friday; certainly by that time. I therefore expressed the hope that the agreement might be entered into in order that night sessions might be avoided.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, my remarks have nothing to do with the suggestion made by my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was the reason I made the statement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I discussed this bill at some length on yesterday, and then was obliged to meet a delegation at the War Department. So I left here after I concluded my remarks. What I particularly referred to was a settled propaganda carried on throughout this country not in discussion of this measure but in eulogy of it. Followed by the action of the House of Representatives in passing this bill with less than a day of debate—and I apprehend that is as much as I can say regarding a transaction in the House of Representatives—the measure was brought forward here. The discussion yesterday demonstrated that this bill is an entirely different proposition from the one which the American people have been given to understand it to be. I want the bill discussed. It may be that the influences which the international banker and the international financier control and direct will be sufficient to put this measure through regardless of its merits. The situation reminds me of another important measure which was before the Senate a few years ago when we were given to understand that any man who opposed it was at least a foolish person, if not disloyal to his country.

There is no reason for any great haste. Since the day that Great Britain borrowed this money her notes of hand have lain in the Treasury of the United States. She is not in the condition of an absconding debtor who must be settled with upon the instant if at all. She is a great country that has solemnly entered into obligations to the United States, but now desires a more favorable contract than the one to which she has already attached her signature. She must either obey the terms of the solemn contract entered into, or she must negotiate with us for a better contract. Therefore we have the right to take all the necessary time to consider the interest of the United States. Have we done it? How many Members of the Senate have really considered this matter outside of the question of mere interest payments that are to be made? I undertake to say that our British friends have driven a bargain here or have been offered a bargain—whichever way the Senators may want to put it—which places the United States at disadvantages under which we can not afford to rest.

To illustrate: First, it is not provided in this instrument that the bonds shall be negotiable bonds; that they shall be payable to bearer, so that the United States may dispose of them when she desires. On the contrary, the distinguished Senator in charge of this bill indicates that the bonds will be payable to the United States and not to bearer.

Second, she has provided that she can pay these obligations in the bonds of the United States to such an extent as she may see fit to tender such bonds. That immediately destroys the ability of the United States to sell the British bonds and to get the money, because there are but few private investors who would buy bonds under those conditions, and, indeed, I can not quite ascertain how a transaction could be carried out with the ordinary buyer who might purchase from our Government these British bonds.

Third, Great Britain has the right to defer the payment of one-half of the interest during the first five years; and that destroys the market for these bonds entirely for the first five years, because no man will buy a bond in the market and pay anything like its face value when he knows that one-half of the interest may be defaulted, or, rather, paid without default, by the giving of new obligations of the British Government.

Fourth, the bonds are rendered nonnegotiable by the clause which provides that the payments may be made not according to the schedule arranged, but that that schedule may be varied at the option of Great Britain, so that she may pay once in three years instead of once each year. That kind of bond, Senators, I am appealing to your business sense, is an absolutely nonmerchantable bond.

Fifth, Great Britain has the option to pay in bonds of the United States. Let us see how that can be easily worked out. For the first 10 years, which is the period of high interest if the world shall settle down as we hope it will, she pays but 3 per cent interest. We are paying approximately 4½ per cent interest; for there is not a single bond we have out, if we add the expense of its original negotiation, that is not costing us 4½ per cent, in my humble judgment. I have not the technical figures on it, but I think my assertion will scarcely be challenged. No man with any good sense can claim that we can now, at this time, refund our loans at 3 per cent or 3½ per cent and obtain par, because to-day only one of our issues, namely, the 3½ per cent Liberty bonds, is above par, and it is above par only 1.78 per cent. The fourth Liberty 4¼'s are at par and the Victory 4¼'s are at 100.20. All the rest of our bonds, bearing these high rates of interest, are to-day below par. So the man with common sense knows that we can not refund our loans to-day at 3 per cent.

What can Great Britain do? She has the option under this contract of postponing her payments for 62 years ultimately, and any time during the 62 years of paying in our bonds. Great Britain, therefore, can go into the bond market of the United States through private agents and can buy the bonds of the United States and collect 4½ per cent interest from us while she pays us 3 per cent. If you figure the difference in interest at 1½ per cent on the $4,600,000,000 of money that Great Britain owes us, you have an annual profit that can be made by that transaction of $69,000,000, or $690,000,000 in 10 years of time. Senators may refuse to consider these figures if they see fit.

If the difference is only 1 per cent instead of 1½ per cent, then by purchasing these bonds Great Britain can save in the first 10 years $460,000,000. If she takes advantage of a deferment of one-half of her interest during the first 5 years and adds that to the principal she can further increase her savings, because she is still getting 3 per cent on the money and paying us in our interest-bearing obligations on which we must pay her 4¼ per cent to 4½ per cent. Therefore, out of the transaction the financiers of Great Britain and the British Government, first and last, will save over a billion of money, in my judgment; and we sit here and talk about unanimous-consent agreements and cutting off debate in order that we may deliver the United States bound hand and foot to the British Government!

What are Senators thinking of? This thing has been sugar-coated.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, perhaps Senators are thinking of the way in which they also delivered the Panama Canal to Great Britain.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; that only makes it worse. We are the pitcher and England is the catcher, and she never muffs a ball.

I repeat, what are Senators thinking of when they will even consider a proposition of this kind? I have heard talk—and I had almost characterized it as maudlin talk—about our ability to fund our loan at 3 per cent. How does any man here know that we can fund our loan at 3 per cent? The contract we made with Great Britain was that she should give us bonds bearing the rate of interest we were paying, and that if we had to increase that rate of interest she would give us bonds bearing the higher rate that we were obliged to pay. Two or three gentlemen selected from one political party, tied to this administration, were put on a commission headed by one of the greatest bankers of the United States, one of the greatest in the world, a man against whom I would say nothing personally, but his interests are such that he has no business in the office of Secretary of the Treasury, and he is there in violation of the spirit if not the letter of a statute of the United States.

We are told that this will stabilize business. I deny it. It will stabilize the bond market for those gentlemen who hold the bonds of Great Britain in their vaults, or those gentlemen who have the 5½ per cent British bonds that are already at 115 in the market. It will stabilize the investment of every gentleman who has put his money in foreign securities. But will it in the long run stabilize the business interests of this country, aside from these bond speculators, these cormorants who would have put us into 40 leagues of nations, and made us underwrite their obligations in the blood of our boys? Every time the cock on the international weather vane turns his head toward war the credit of America will be jeopardized if Great Britain is our debtor to the extent of $10,000,000,000. For 62 long, weary years, every time world conditions are disturbed—and Great Britain will be in every disturbance of any importance, as she has been for a century—the credit of the United States will be impaired, because the credit of Great Britain, our debtor to the extent of $10,000,000,000, will be impaired.

Every time that credit is impaired the cry will go up that the United States must side with Great Britain because we must sustain the credit of our debtor. So this tie, this financial tie, may be used to drag us into future conflicts. I say now, I believe I would rather cancel this debt than unite our interests with the interests of the British Empire in this way for the next 62 years of time; and I am not in favor of any cancellation.

Sixty-two years! It amounts to a practical cancellation of the principal of this debt. If Great Britain were to give us her obligations to pay us 4½ per cent interest for 62 years, and we were then to cancel this debt, we would have more money than we will have if she pays us 3 per cent interest and pays the debt at the end of the transaction, more money in actual dollars.

Who is there, looking ahead as far as we can look with the eyes of our imagination—and that is all we have to guide us, except the light of history illuminating the future—who is there who can dare to say that, if we make this transaction, long before the period of 62 years has passed, we will not find ourselves in the most serious contest with the British Empire, and that we may even be at war, and if we are at war, we must know that the best weapon of defense and offense is credit. I would rather have the United States without an army and without a navy, or with a small army and navy, and with unimpaired credit and no debt, than to have her with a great army and a great navy, and her credit impaired and immense indebtedness owing by her. If we were to have this conflict which may come with Great Britain, as with any other country—and God knows we hope it will never come—if Great Britain owes us $5,000,000,000, the moment the war is declared that debt will be gone. We will still owe to our people the $10,000,000,000 we borrowed to loan to European countries. I have spoken often of $10,000,000,000. I am speaking of the whole European debt, but in this particular case, of course, the debt is now $4,600,000,000, in round numbers.

Who will say that such a controversy may not arise? We sit here now singing songs of brotherly love. I hope they may echo through the ages; but this much I know, that the international friend of to-day may be the international enemy of next year. We do not want the enmity of any nation. We will seek to avoid it, but I repeat what I said, who in 1913 would have dared prophesy a war between the United States and Germany? We had been habitually the friend of Germany, and she had been ours, and we had a treaty with Prussia—yes; and with the German Empire—which was the most advanced and most humane touching war conditions that had ever been written. Yet, at the single shot of a cannon, that treaty was dissolved in smoke and ceased to be.

Who would have dared prophesy, as the counsellors of the nations sat about the table at Versailles, that at this hour Great Britain and France would be contending for opposing policies, and that their relations would be strained almost to the breaking point?

Who, surveying the past of our own country, dare write a policy of insurance against any possible conflict with the British Empire? Do you find assurance in the fact that her ports were open during the rebellion to the fitting out of piratical craft to sweep the commerce of America from the seas?

Do you find it, again, when her minister declared, in the Venezuelan controversy, that the Monroe doctrine was not international law, and, in substance and effect, declared it to be a piece of American impudence?

Do you find it in the fact when we sought with our own money to build the Panama Canal that Great Britain exacted onerous conditions from us, burdensome conditions?

Do you find it in the fact that she made a secret treaty with France and with Japan relative to the disposition of the German possessions and concealed that from us at the time we entered the war and thereafter from the knowledge of the President of the United States until the war had been won? It was then disclosed, to his astonishment and, I imagine, to his disgust and dismay.

Do you find it in the fact that Great Britain and Japan cooperated so that Japan took from thirty to forty thousand islands in the North Pacific, under a pretended mandate, which means nothing but eternal occupancy so long as the Japanese Government shall exist and maintain its power? Do you find it in the fact, when the present officers of our Government sought to interpose some objections in regard to that Japanese mandate of eternal possession, that they were obliged to come here with the miserable plea that we could not help ourselves; the work had already been done; and even the little island of Yap, where we had established, or sought to establish, a telegraph station, must come under the banner of Japan?

Again, do you find it in the fact that to-day Great Britain is menacing the peace of the Orient simply because she insists that she will take and hold the most valuable part of Turkey, the oil lands, and that from those oil lands she has excluded American citizens?

Do you find it in the fact that she took under her flag, to hold as a mandate forever, where British law and British authority will be supreme, a territory greater than that over which the banners of the Cæsars floated in the flood tide of Rome's greatness?

Do you find it in the fact that she demanded Canada should establish a war fleet, to be maintained in Canadian waters, almost within gunshot of our coast? Do you find it in the fact that she made a similar demand upon Australia—or request, if you please?

Do you find it in the fact that she insistently demands to-day a dominance in the Dardanelles, the last lane and neck of the seven seas not controlled by British cannon, or in the further fact that already her fortresses command those waters?

Do you find it in the historic fact that never has there risen in the last 300 years a trade rival of Great Britain which has not been humbled at the mouths of British cannon?

I do not say these things out of animosity toward Great Britain. I do so as one of the custodians of American interests. However inefficient we may be to fill that high position, it is our solemn duty to bear in mind the lessons of history and the examples of international faith of the distant past and of the near present. Out of those lessons deduce the truth uttered by the great and favorite modern historian of England that the English are the great conquering race.

With that history before us I want no permanent tie with Great Britain except so far as the ties of good fellowship and friendship may go. I want this debt so liquidated that the bonds will not remain for a long time in the Treasury of the United States, that they shall be sold to private investors so that our Government and the British Government shall not be financially intertangled with each other.

Oh, I know that gentlemen just now are singing the praises of the British Empire, that it is fashionable just now to stand upon the housetops and the street corners and praise Great Britain and talk about ties of blood and ties of love. Mr. President, I have not a bit more love for Great Britain than I have for France. I have no more love for Great Britain than I have for Norway or Sweden, Holland, Denmark, or for any civilized country where white people live. I hope the time will soon come when we can feel toward the German people sentiments of kindliness, if they will do their duty. But I do not want any of these debts to be governmental debts 10 or 15 or 20 years from now. I want this Government to be discharged of the obligation of a creditor. I want this money as soon as possible gathered into our Treasury by the disposition of the securities and our own bonds to our own people canceled with the proceeds.

How can Great Britain give us that kind of a bond? Should she do it? She has agreed to do it. She has agreed in writing to do it. Her notes of hand are held in the Treasury at the present moment. They bear 5 per cent interest. I am willing to mitigate that interest to the point that will merely recompense us for the interest we must pay on the money which we borrowed to loan to them. Great Britain, as an honest nation, will meet those obligations in a fair way or she will stand before the world guilty of an act of national bankruptcy, and no government has ever stood that was guilty of an act of national bankruptcy. We are not getting favors from England by this deal. They are getting favors from us. We have the right to hold them to the letter of their written agreement, and in so far as we mitigate that letter it is an act of grace upon our part.

Some one has said Great Britain is the only country that has offered to pay, and therefore we should regard her with particular favor. If I have half a dozen debtors and one of them offers to pay he has conferred no favor; he has done simply what he ought to do. The honest man never pleads the dishonesty of another man as a reason why he should have special favor under such circumstances. It never happened in the history of the world and never will, for such a plea would be the essence of dishonesty itself.

But let us see about the other nations. France, we are told, has not offered to pay. France suffered the brunt of the war. Her finances are disorganized to a large extent. She is endeavoring to collect a huge indemnity. Under those circumstances she has not yet come in any formal way and said she is willing to carry out her agreement. But in what light will France stand before the tribunals of earth or heaven if she shall insist that Germany shall pay her a war indemnity and refuse to pay us the money we loaned her in the hour of her extremity? France can not afford to occupy such a position, and I venture to predict that she will not long occupy it.

Besides, the question arises, What has our own Government been doing to bring the French debt to an issue? I undertake to say that an American Government with a little of the spirit in it that animated our young men when they marched across the fields of France would get a settlement from the French Nation. When the time comes we may give extensions of time on the payments; we may give as low a rate of interest as we can afford to give. I abominate the argument that we should give England specially favorable terms because we have not yet settled with France. What I have said of France can be applied equally to Belgium.

As to the little countries which we helped to create, if they are worthy to stand as nations, if they are to stand as nations, they must meet their obligations in the fair and honest way. Are we to take the ground that we have set up governments of repudiationists? But even if we had, why should we therefore make an improvident bargain with a nation that holds one-quarter of the habitable globe in her grasp and relinquishes not one foot of that territory, a nation which holds that territory for trade purposes?

It is idle to deny the fact that this is the reason why England has extended her conquests so far. In every colony she establishes, in every land she conquers, British merchants enjoy an advantage over the American merchant or the merchant from any other country of earth. This policy has no parallel in history save that of ancient Rome if steadily pursued. We gaze upon it as something that is here, and it is not to be complained of. Then this nation, which boasts that her drumbeat follows the sun in its course around the world and whose armed forces are mustered from the North Pole to the Southern Cross, comes to make a bargain with us, and we deal with her as though she was a bankrupt brother unable to meet her just obligations.

Mr. President, it is perfectly evident to me from the temper of the Senate that this job is going to be put over. We named a commission and wrote the bounds of their authority. They should have submitted no other proposition to Great Britain than that which was contained in the law of Congress. They should have told the British delegates that these "gentlemen from the rural districts" had fixed the bounds and limits of their power. They should have given the British representatives the option of accepting or rejecting. Instead they bring this miserable contract here, and we are now led to believe that in some way we are committed, and all the power and influence of the administration is back of it, just as it was back of the four-power pact that gives to Japan an advantage in the north Pacific that may some day be fatal to our arms.

In the name of God—and I say it reverently—when are we to have an American policy? When are we to have statesmen who have regard for America, as Great Britain has statesmen who have regard for the British Empire, as France has statesmen who think only of la belle France, and as the other countries of the world have statesmen whose prayer at morning and at eventide is for their country? When are we to have statesmen of the George Washington type, who declare for peace and amity with all the world but for an America that prepares to defend her interests and strengthens her arm so that she shall be invincible in the contests of the world?

No nation that ever achieved world greatness has ever fallen save from one of two causes—corruption from within or a failure to keep alive the national spirit and preserve the national manhood. We have the sentiment of internationalism in our country, of "hands across the seas," of "brotherly love," and always when our hand is stretched across it must contain a benefaction. There are no hands reaching from the other side conferring favors and benefits on us.

I do not like to descend into mere slang, but I have heard of what are called "gimme girls," girls who always want something to be given them. They are not a very fine type, and are not representative of American womanhood, of course, but it seems to me we are playing the international "gimme" game, and we are the ones who are to do the giving.

England wanted the Dardanelles. She has been maneuvering in that direction for 150 years. She rescued Turkey "many a time and oft," because she preferred to have the weak Turk hold the Dardanelles, but when the hour came when she could seize them she has done so. No matter what pretext may be invoked at the end she will dominate the Straits of the Bosporus.

Who doubts to-day that England sent the Greek Army marching into Turkish territory? And why? Because Greece is Britain's pawn, her proxy in the international game. Who doubts that France, as a counter move, furnished the implements of war to Turkey to hold back the Greeks? Who doubts that plot and counterplot, with all the mazes and circumlocutions and trickery of European and oriental diplomacy, are now in full activity as much so as at any period of the world's history? And, of course, the stronger powers would like to have us come over and settle the difficulty in their favor.

I should like to see an American policy, a policy that proclaims to the world that owes us money, "You are our debtors; come and settle fairly and decently; we will accord you the best terms we have; but if you do not come, you stand as bankrupts in the international court of conscience." I should like to see a National Government that will say something more: "We intend to have our money."

Mr. OWEN. How would the Senator get it?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Oklahoma asks me how we would get it. One way we would get it would be by having nerve enough to demand it. I am not one of those who think the United States are an impotent aggregation of mere ciphers. No nation on this earth dare stand out and refuse to meet its obligations to us. If any nation did so, I would collect, sir, just as they have collected from weaker powers. I would not proceed with any haste; I would give time to the limits of reason and beyond. I have in mind some possessions not far from our coast which I think could be taken in about 24 hours. I am not talking of that, and ought not even to have mentioned it, because it is the farthest from my thoughts that such a thing would be necessary; but when the question is put to me, "How would you do it?" I answer, "I would do it the way it has been done by every great power through the flight of all the centuries"; I would insist upon and, if need be, enforce our rights. That will never have to be done, for just as we draw back from any such proposition as that they will draw back from the consequences. I prefer not to discuss that phase of the question, because I insist that our principal debtors are honorable debtors; that Italy will settle, that France will settle, that Belgium will settle, and that the proud British Nation, most puissant of them all, will meet its obligations. I blame no British statesman who can make a contract of this kind for making it. I shall blame, and in my humble judgment the people of this country will blame, this Government if we ever sign this arrangement.

We can do it. We did some things a few months back, and the people had something to say about it at the last election. Go to the people of the United States and say "We had a contract for 5 per cent. We had a contract that the interest on the bonds we take from Great Britain should never be less than the amount of interest we pay ourselves; but we voluntarily changed that contract. We made it one by which the United States may lose billions of money. We gave them a rate of 3 per cent interest and told them they could pay half of it in bonds for the first 10 years if they wanted to, and we are taxing you people to pay 4¼ per cent." Go and tell the American citizen that if you want to, Senators. What reason will you give the American citizen for making that kind of a contract? Go and tell him that our obligations mature in a few years and that we extended this one for a period of 62 years. Try to tell the American citizen that we got a bond of this kind from a solvent debtor. Having plead the solvency of that debtor, and the validity of this bond, answer him when he asks you "Why did you not get the same rate of interest we have to pay, when we had the solemn obligation of that country that it would pay that same rate of interest?"

To sum up in a few words what I have to say, you are obtaining a bond that must be held in the Federal Treasury and can not be negotiated, because it is not a merchantable thing. You are obtaining a bond that gives to the British Empire an advantage in the rate of interest of over 1¼ per cent, while we must pay that additional 1¼ per cent for the very money we handed over to them. You are tying the United States financially to the financial fortunes of the British Empire for a period nearly half as long as this Government has existed. You are giving the British Empire the opportunity, if the financial market ever swings toward very low rates of interest, to get out at once and to obtain her own money at that low rate and to pick up our higher interest-bearing securities, hold them in her treasury, and make money by that transaction.

Do you not remember that in the early days, before we got into the war, their agents came here, headed by Mr. Hoover, and rigged the markets of America—a fact that was afterwards admitted—in order that they might gain whatever commercial advantages they could? These Englishmen are entitled to admiration for their shrewdness, and they are making a deal now that I warrant you every leading financial mind in Great Britain has mulled over and figured out. If we shall be compelled to continue to pay 4¼ per cent interest, then this deal that they have made cancels their debt, because the difference between the rate of interest we pay and the rate they are to pay will in 62 years of time wipe out the principal of the debt.

Would it not be more consistent with British faith if they were to give us their bonds now, bearing interest at the rate we are paying, with an understanding that they could refund those bonds later if we got a lower rate of interest? That would insure us dollar for dollar, which we are entitled to. Would it not be more consistent with good sense if we should try first to see if we could sell our bonds at 3 per cent before we take their bonds at 3 per cent? If we fail to do that, it will be no answer to the Treasury, when the loss will appear, that distinguished Senators upon this floor said they rather guessed we would be able to sell 3 per cent bonds. We can not sell them now. As I have shown, the majority of our bonds are below par to-day, although they bear a rate of interest of 4¼ per cent.

This, sirs, is an improvident contract. It is a dangerous contract. I have therefore objected to unanimous-consent agreements that will cut off debate. Let the debate go on. If they want night sessions, we will have to sit up with them, and I think our bivouac will not be any more onerous or any more painful than was that of the sentinels who guarded the line over there. Why the haste? You have waited ever since this money was loaned, and a few hours now will break nobody's heart, unless it be the palpitating and sensitive organ in the breast of the British financier who hopes to make an exceedingly fortunate arrangement for his country. But the propaganda is on. The newspapers have all been one way. If there is anybody in the world that can get wrong with great regularity, it is a newspaper editor who is trying to write on every subject on earth and who is not really acquainted with any subject. Send that down to them, with my compliments. There never was a war fought yet but there was an editor back of every newspaper counter in the country who could tell the general of the army just when and how he ought to move his men. The most luminous book that has been written in half a century is How Private George W. Peck Put Down the Rebellion. It is not only humorous but it is luminous.

The truth is a sentiment was manufactured in this country that we were not going to get our money, and so, with that as a background, they have all rushed in and said, "Here is a chance to get something. For God's sake, let us grab it quick!"

The fact is that if there has ever been written an obligation that binds the faith and credit of a nation, that is based upon good conscience and value received, it is this obligation that was given to enable these countries that stood with the knife of the executioner at their hearts to escape the death stroke. If there was ever a debt that ought to be paid without whimpering and without equivocation, it is the debt that a man incurs for the means to defend his household and protect his home. If there ever was a debt that ought to be paid cheerfully, gladly, and thankfully, it is the international obligation that kept armies of defense in the field, that furnished them the cannon and the munitions of war, that sent them succor when their backs were at the wall, that reinspirited their falling hopes, and that gave to their hands the weapons that made it possible to resist and to strike back.

If it had not been for that money, French troops would not be in the Ruhr Valley to-day exacting indemnities. German troops, under the German Kaiser, would be camped in the capital of France, and French peasants would be working night and day to pay indemnities to Germany, instead of paying a debt to America. England's mighty fleet would not be plying the waters of the seven seas, but would be very likely found sailing under German flags and manned by German seamen. When men stand and prattle about this debt not being a real debt that should be redeemed, I answer that it is a debt of honor, and that upon every bond that may be issued there will be the bloodstains of American boys who put their lives into the balance.

Let them repudiate if they will, but let us ask what is our due. I have no hesitancy in saying they will not repudiate. Do men tell me they can not pay, when their own bonds, bearing a high rate of interest, are selling at $115 in the market this morning? A bond bearing a high rate of interest is not worth par, no matter what its rate of interest, if it be not a good bond. They have the money to still continue world exploitation. Let a single one of the enslaved peoples dare raise his hand for a government of his own; that hand will be stricken down by a British saber within the flash of an eye. They have the money to hold those people in subjection, countless seething hordes of men and women who have a right to their own government.

They have the money to push forward their conquests. They had the money to enlarge their navy, and were preparing to maintain their dominance upon the ocean at all costs. When they made a bargain with us in the four-power pact, they bargained for and obtained a 25 per cent advantage, a fact I demonstrated upon this floor, and that was denied, but denied from false premises. They have the money. If they are a little pressed to-day, give them time; that is all right. But who dare write a general bill of bankruptcy for the British Empire?

I have said some things here I would not on any account have misunderstood. I am not suggesting trouble with Great Britain. It will not come unless we make it by tying ourselves to Great Britain so closely that our interests and hers become united in a way so that her troubles will drag us into trouble. I am not seeking to disparage the British people, or even the British Govemnment, for the British people, only 38,000,000 of them in the British Isles, have proven their right to a place in the sun by occupying about one-third of the earth's surface. Such a race is not to be spoken of disrespectfully, but such a race can and will meet its obligations of honor and of justice.

So, Mr. President, I have objected and I do object to a unanimous-consent agreement which would cut off this debate. There is no use prolonging the debate interminably. Let whoever has anything to say say it, and when amendments are brought forward let them be open to debate. I expect to offer some, and to urge them with a reasonable degree of earnestness, but I see no reason why we can not come to a vote. But, please God, I wish we were not to do the voting. I wish this could be submitted to the American people and debated for 30 days. In my judgment, if it were, we would hear a storm of protest that would begin at the Pacific Ocean, roar over the Sierra Nevadas, and sweep down into the great central parts of the United States, where it would meet a similar wave of indignation sweeping in from the Atlantic seaboard.

THE POWER OF THE STATE LEGISLATURE OVER THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, some days ago I gave notice that I would address the Senate to-day, and I hope that during the time I am making my remarks I may proceed without interruption. I shall be glad at the close of my remarks to answer any questions I am able to answer, if they are propounded.

Mr. President, in this day of advanced civilization, no legitimate excuse can be given for the existence of the Electoral College. The election of a Chief Magistrate of our country through the instrumentality of presidential electors is a relic of monarchal government. It is absolutely contrary to the principle of democracy. A democratic form of government is based on the theory that the people are sufficiently intelligent to select their own rulers. To the extent that this right is denied or circumvented, it is a denial of democracy.

When our forefathers threw off the monarchal yoke and declared themselves free and independent, they took the most advanced step in government that the world had ever known, and yet, to quite an extent, the move was an experiment in government. The founders of our Government were careful lest in taking this step they should go too far afield from the then existing conditions. In their wisdom they declined to take any step that might endanger the stability of the governmental structure which they set up. It was a serious question with them as to just how much power could be delegated directly to the people, and in framing the Constitution which was the result of their deliberate action they were exceedingly careful lest the step which they were taking should be so great as to endanger the permanency of the Government. In the Constitution of the new Government the only place where the people had a direct voice and vote in the selection of those who should govern them was in their right to select by direct vote the Members of the House of Representatives.

The Senate was removed one step from the citizen by providing that the Members of that body should be elected by the State legislatures. The President, the most powerful official of all, the one who had more to do with the making of the laws that should govern the people, and their enforcement, together with the power of selecting the judges who should construe the laws, was to be elected by presidential electors, who, in turn, should be selected in the manner provided by the various State legislatures. Thus it was provided by fundamental law that the people themselves, constituting the new Government, should have no direct voice or vote in the selection of the one official who had more to do with their happiness and destiny than any other. Since our Government was founded the trend has, in accordance with the immutable law of civilization, been in the direction of greater democracy, which always means placing additional power in the hands of the people themselves. Thus we have provided, by an amendment to the Constitution, for the direct election of Senators, and by a system of political practice through the organization of political parties we have, to some extent at least, nullified the provisions of the Constitution providing for the election of President by a college of electors. Presidential electors are selected with an implied agreement of honor that, if elected, they will cast their vote for certain persons for President and Vice President, but the machinery of the Electoral College still remains. It is worse than useless; it stands as an impediment on the road of governmental progress; and it has no more excuse for its existence in a democratic form of government than has the appendix in the human body.

Of course, the only proper way to fully relieve ourselves of this relic of the ancient monarchal system is to amend the Constitution and provide that the people shall have a direct vote in the selection of their Chief Magistrate. This is a slow, tedious, and difficult procedure. I had hoped that an amendment to the Constitution, eliminating the Electoral College, would be submitted by Congress at the present session, but it is now evident that that is impossible, not because Congress would not vote for such a provision if it were brought face to face with the proposition but because with the crowded condition of the calendars of the House and the Senate with many important and necessary matters of legislation it is a physical impossibility within the time of the life of the Congress to bring the matter to a decision.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF THE STATE LEGISLATURES IN THE PREMISES.

We have lived under this archaic system so long we do not realize that under the Constitution of the United States the State legislatures by a very simple statute could obviate the greater portion of the difficulty. Paragraph 2, section 1, Article II, of the Constitution of the United States provides:

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors—

And so forth.

It will be observed that this constitutional provision under which our presidential electors are selected gives to the State legislature almost unlimited power in the appointment of such officials. This power, given to the State legislature by the Federal Constitution, can not be in any way interfered with, either by law of Congress or by State constitutional provision. The legislature is supreme. It can not be required to submit the question to a vote of the people. It was not intended by the framers of the Federal Constitution that it should submit the matter to an election. The legislature can make the appointment itself. It can provide for any other manner of appointment. Because the State legislatures were desirous of increasing the power of the people, they have usually provided that these presidential electors shall be selected by a direct vote of the people themselves. This means that the names of the candidates for President and Vice President are not printed on the official ballot, but instead the voter is presented on the ballot with the names of candidates for presidential electors, and he votes for the electors, who, in turn, are pledged to vote for such candidates for President and Vice President as are favored by the voter. The real intent of these provisions made by the various State legislatures is to avoid the technical provisions of the Federal Constitution and to give to the people, as nearly as they can, a direct voice and vote in the selection of President and Vice President. However, under the provision of the Federal Constitution that I have quoted the legislature has the power to provide that the names of the various candidates for President and Vice President shall be printed on the ballot; that the names of the various candidates for presidential electors shall be omitted therefrom; and that presidential electors shall thereupon be appointed who will give legal effect to the wishes of the voters expressed at the ballot box.

The legislature could provide, for instance, that after the general election it shall be the duty of the governor to appoint presidential electors who will pledge themselves to vote for the candidates for President and Vice President who have received the highest number of votes at the general election just held. They could provide for the appointment of such electors by a committee of the legislature. They could likewise provide that these electors shall be appointed from lists selected by the political party whose candidates for President and Vice President had just carried the State, or they could provide that the electors shall be selected by the candidate for President who had received the highest number of votes for that office at the general election.

It can be said, I know, that the electors thus selected are not legally bound to vote for any particular man for President and Vice President; that as a presidential elector he has a right to exercise the discretion that the Constitution of the United States places in him; and that he is in fact bound only by a pledge of honor which he has a technical, legal right to violate if he chooses.

This is true, but the same objection applies to the presidential electors selected under our present system. A person selected as presidential elector from a State can, if he chooses, vote for any person he pleases for President and Vice President of the United States. His right to do this is preserved by the Constitution of the United States and can not be changed by enactment of law. He is only bound under the present system by a pledge of honor; so that, if this objection be an evil, it is one that already exists and would not be made any greater by the change I have suggested.

A change such as I have outlined would more closely follow the United States constitutional provision in regard to presidential electors than the system which now exists. It will be observed that in the constitutional provision quoted the word "appoint" is used. It was evidently the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the legislatures should adopt some method of appointment of these electors; and while the method adopted by the legislatures is conceded to comply with the Constitution, the one I have outlined is a more literal compliance than the present system providing for the election by the people of the electors.

NEBRASKA HAS ADOPTED THE NEW METHOD.

The Legislature of the State of Nebraska has already provided by law for the printing of the names of candidates for President and Vice President on the official ballot and for the appointment of presidential electors by the governor after the election. It is made the duty of the governor to appoint as presidential electors those persons who have been selected by the party whose candidate for President received the highest number of votes at the general presidential election just preceding, and in the last presidential election in that State the voter voted directly for President and Vice President without being confronted on the official ballot with the names of presidential electors.

THE SHORT BALLOT.

The change I have suggested would cut down the length of the official ballot at presidential elections from 25 to 80 per cent. I have before me an official ballot used in the State of Pennsylvania in the last presidential election. It contains nearly one square yard of paper. This ballot is so large that it can not be unfolded and spread upon any table or shelf in any voting booth that I have ever been in. It is not only an extravagant and unnecessary use of paper but the expense of printing is enormously increased by its size and its inclusion of several hundred useless names. Its size alone makes it impossible for an ordinary country newspaper to print it. In addition to rendering it impossible for the voter to cast an intelligent ballot, it increases the expense to the taxpayer manyfold. This ballot contains the names of 266 candidates for presidential elector. It has also 38 blank places within which names of candidates for presidential elector can be written. If some system of election like I have outlined had been the law in Pennsylvania, instead of 266 names, together with 38 blank places for names, we would have had the names of seven candidates for President and seven candidates for Vice President, together with 14 blank places.

I have before me a copy of the official ballot used in the State of New York in the presidential election of 1916. At that election, in the State of New York there were six political parties entitled to a place on the official ballot. Two of these parties had nominated the same candidates for President and Vice President, so that one set of electors was printed twice upon the ballot. Altogether, there are 270 names of candidates for presidential elector and 45 blank places. If the New York Legislature had adopted some law similar to the one now on the statute books of Nebraska, instead of this array of candidates there would have been printed the names of five candidates for President and five candidates for Vice President, together with 10 blank places on the ballot. If New York had followed her sister State in the West and had eliminated this worse than useless method, her presidential ballot would have been shortened 94 per cent and in addition the voter would have had the right to vote directly for his choice for President and Vice President. It would be interesting likewise to make a computation and ascertain just how much money would have been saved to the taxpayers of that great State; and if we were to make a computation covering the entire United States, we would be dumfounded and amazed at the great extravagance that this foolish practice entails upon the voters of America.

When we consider that all this is useless and as unnecessary as the fifth wheel of a wagon, we are led to wonder why it is that our State legislatures have not long ago exercised the power given them by the Constitution of the United States to shorten and simplify the ballot, to economize the taxpayers' money, and to give the voter a more easy and direct way of expressing his choice for a Chief Magistrate of his country.

THE ONE OBJECTION.

I can conceive of only one possible objection to this suggested change, and that is so unimportant and so easily avoided that it fades into insignificance. The first clause of the twelfth amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides:

> The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves.

Under this provision, if a candidate for President and a candidate for Vice President should be inhabitants of the same State and they should both carry that State at the November election, the presidential electors of that State would not have the right to vote for both of them. This is true at the present time and under existing conditions. It is a contingency that will in all probability never happen, but since it is a possibility it might be well for the legislatures to make provision for its happening, which they could easily do by providing that in such case the electors should not be bound to vote for the Vice President who had just carried their State, and should either not vote at all for Vice President or should vote for the person having the second highest vote for Vice President. Even if it did happen, it would be extremely improbable that in such a case the result of the election in the entire country would be changed, because this provision prohibiting electors from voting for both President and Vice President who are inhabitants of the same State as themselves would never apply to more than one State in any election. It is not, however, a valid objection to the change I have suggested, because this condition exists under the present system just the same as it would exist under the change I have proposed.

THE CHANGE BY THE STATES WOULD BE FOLLOWED BY AN AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION ABOLISHING THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

As before stated, the most desirable thing of all would be an amendment to the Federal Constitution abolishing the electoral college. Experience has shown that this is extremely difficult to bring about, even though a very large majority of the people are in favor of the change. Experience has likewise shown that when the States have, within constitutional limits, circumvented the Federal Constitution by statutory provisions which to some extent nullify the Federal Constitution by indirect means, a change in the Federal Constitution will follow. The amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote is a fair illustration. There is no question but that a very large majority of the people were in favor of the direct election of United States Senators, and for a great many years they tried in vain to induce the Congress to submit the necessary proposition to the State legislatures. The State of Oregon finally devised a plan by which the election of United States Senators by the legislature became a mere formality. It provided by law that a candidate for the State legislature should have the right to have printed on the official ballot a pledge which in effect meant that if elected to the State legislature he would vote for the candidate for United States Senator who had received the highest number of votes in the general election just preceding. It was after this law had been in force a short time in Oregon that other States began to enact practically the same provision, and it was not many years until a large number of the States in the Union had by similar provisions practically taken away from the State legislature the right to elect United States Senators. This pledge again was nothing but a pledge of honor—a promise that had no legal effect, but yet, so far as I know, it was never violated.

Candidates for the State legislature almost invariably gave this pledge. As a rule, they were required to give it in order to be elected. It was a demonstration that the people almost unanimously were in favor of the election of United States Senators by a direct vote. Candidates who had carried their respective States were often elected to the United States Senate by a legislature that was largely composed of members of the opposite political faith. A way had been found to give to the people more direct power in the selection of their lawmakers. It was a step of progress toward greater democracy in government.

THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE TO VOTE DIRECTLY FOR THEIR OFFICIALS IS FUNDAMENTAL IN A DEMOCRACY.

The Electoral College is useless. It is unnecessary. It is expensive. It is a denial of the freedom of the citizen to have a direct voice in the selection of the Chief Magistrate of his country. It would seem, therefore, to be the part of wisdom for a State legislature to go as far as it can within constitutional limits to abolish the system. But while these reasons are sufficient to induce the legislature to take such action, it must also be remembered that the Electoral College results in the denial of the freedom of the citizen in a fundamental way. In a country that is wholly free no handicap, either direct or indirect, can be placed upon the right of the voter to vote as he pleases. This fundamental right is protected in every State in the Union by providing on the official ballot for as many blank places in which the voter can write the names of those he prefers as there are places to be filled. It will be observed that in every State where the voter is allowed to vote for presidential electors, there are as many blank places on the ballot as there are electors to be elected. This is done in order to preserve this fundamental right, but in this case it does not do it.

The office to be filled is the office of President, but the official to be elected is a presidential elector, and this right is not protected by providing for blank places in which the voter can write the names of presidential electors. Nobody cares who the presidential electors are. The offices to be filled are those of President and Vice President, and while the ballot complies technically with the theory that the voter shall be free to vote for whomsoever he pleases, for practical purposes it is no such thing. What State in the Union would submit to a provision by which the governor and the lieutenant governor would be elected by a system of electors? How long would the citizens of any State stand for such an indirect method? How soon would there be an uprising of the people in the State if such a law prevailed, demanding that their fundamental right to vote directly for the executive officer of the State should be protected? And yet, during the lifetime of all those who live, such an ancient method has been in existence for electing the President of the United States. The citizenship of America has been compelled to submit for more than a generation to a system of electing President and Vice President that could not stand for a day if applied to the various States.

If we vote directly for a governor and a lieutenant governor, why for the same reason should we not be allowed to vote directly for President and Vice President? There is no officer under our Government so important as President. He has both a legislative and an executive function. Even in his legislative capacity he is more powerful than either the Senate or the House. By virtue of the power given him to appoint all the appointive officials of the United States, he is able very often to have a commanding and dominating influence in legislative matters. He is supreme in appointments. He is supreme in his executive capacity. He possesses the power to appoint all the judges who construe all the laws applying to every citizen in the country.

The power of all other governmental functions combined is not as great as that possessed by the President, and yet the citizens of this great country do not have a direct voice in his selection. His influence over the destiny and the happiness of the citizen is much greater than that of the governor of any State, and, while we would not submit to any provision for the election of a governor by indirect means, we are compelled on account of the existence of the Electoral College to be deprived of this right in the most important office of all.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE DENIES STILL ANOTHER FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT.

Every State in the Union provides for some method by which independent candidates for office can have their names printed upon the official ballot. This is another right fundamental in every democracy. If political conventions pay no heed to the wishes of the rank and file of the voters in the nomination of a Senator, a Representative in Congress, a governor, or any other elective official and nominate on both dominant tickets candidates who are unsatisfactory to the citizenship, a method is provided by which the electorate can nullify such nominations and elect an independent candidate for the office to be filled.

No such thing can be done when it comes to filling the office of President and Vice President of the United States. The Electoral College stands in the way. In order to be an independent candidate for President, it would be necessary to organize a new political party and complete an organization in every congressional district in the United States, and even then, when the voter went into the booth, he would not see printed on the ballot the name of his candidate for President. He would be presented only with the names of a lot of unknown people running for the office of presidential electors. He would be lost in a maze of candidates and by a multitudinous list of the names of unknown people. If it were not for the Electoral College, he would have before him the names of all candidates, occupying but a few inches of space, and would have no difficulty whatever in voting for the candidate of his choice.

It is no answer to say that the man could vote blindly for a party. We are all more or less partisan. We have grown up amidst the glamour and the glow of partisanship, but however partisan we may be, if we are also fair and desire to protect inviolate the freedom of the citizen, we must preserve by law the right of the independent voter to have an opportunity to express his will and to have his wish considered and given full weight. We should not permit our partisanship to defeat our fairness, because if we do we will in the end, together with all our fellow citizens, suffer for such conduct. The will of the people can not be expressed in law unless the right of all the people, regardless of politics, is fully protected and preserved.

There is no practical way under existing conditions for anyone to be an independent candidate for President. To organize a new party after the national conventions have completed their work, and do it before election, is not only an extremely difficult thing but it is exceedingly expensive. It can not be done without the expenditure of enormous amounts of money. The result is that the voter, when he would vote for President and Vice President, is confined in his choice to the nominees of the two dominant political parties. It is often a choice between two evils. He is curtailed in his right of suffrage just as fully and as completely as though this curtailment were definitely written into the Constitution of the United States. There is no escape. When the national political conventions have adjourned, whatever may have been the result of their work, the election of a President is confined to two men. The political machinery of a great national party is so great that it is within the power of those who control this machinery to control the action of the national convention. Nothing short of a political revolution within the party could prevent it, and even then those who control the national committee by their arbitrary action can make up the temporary roll of a convention, and thus by arbitrary means defy the will and the wish of the rank and file of the party.

Within the memory of all of us we have seen national conventions of both of the great political parties, controlled and dominated by the bosses and the self-appointed alleged political party leaders, without any consideration being given to the millions of voters who constitute the party. This ought not be possible in a free country. This would not be possible if it were not for the existence of the Electoral College, which makes it a practical impossibility for anyone to become an independent candidate for President. It does not necessarily follow, if the Electoral College were abolished, that there would be independent candidates for President.

The very fact that an avenue existed by which the people could overthrow the national convention would cause these conventions to hesitate before they made nominations that they knew were obnoxious to the citizenship generally. It is because they know that when the conventions are over, the people are thus limited in the selection of their Chief Magistrate, that they abuse the power and authority in their hands and disregard the wishes of the people. If they knew that their work in the national convention was not the last word, and that they were not thus supreme in their action, they would exercise more care and pay more heed to the public. The power of the political machine and the political bosses would to a great extent be nullified and there would be a way by which the voice of the people could be heard and heeded, regardless of machines and bosses. The policeman on the corner, by his very presence, saves the store from robbery. As long as he is at his post no robbery takes place, but when he is removed the protection thus afforded is gone. While he is there the safety of the store is made secure. His very presence prevents crime. If this right of independent action existed, the very fact of its existence would purify our politics and give us a Chief Executive more in touch with the common people.

THERE IS NO EXCUSE FOR THE EXISTENCE OF THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

The Electoral College can not be defended. The only result of its existence is to increase the power of the comparatively few men who control national conventions. These men are not necessarily those who appear as delegates. The delegates are often only pawns, moved at will by the secret influence of selfish men and combinations of wealth whose identity does not appear on the surface. They make their investments in national conventions and receive their reward in national legislation. Their influence is apparent, but their identity is concealed. When they control both national conventions their work is complete. They must contribute to both sides in order that the party spirit may be kept alive and the millions of voters be kept active in a sham battle, while the real perpetrators of the fraud are laughing behind the scenes. The machinery is oiled by those who are to be the beneficiaries, while the party spirit is cultivated in the rank and file to such an extent that the voter really imagines that he is having something to say about the destiny of his country. In the end the bills are paid by the weary taxpayer who has been induced to furnish the enthusiasm and do the shouting for his own undoing.

Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the Senator in his remarks subsequent to my interruption developed the matter about which I wished to inquire. I wanted to ask him if, under the Nebraska law, a voter can vote for a candidate of one party for President and a candidate of another party for Vice President—in other words, whether he can vote for the individual?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; he can do that.

Mr. CALDER. And then the elector who was appointed by the governor after the election would, of course, be expected to vote for the candidate who received the majority of the votes of that State?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. And that elector might vote for a man of one party for President and a man of another party for Vice President?

Mr. NORRIS. The voter might; so might the elector.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator displayed the ballot of New York State.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. As I recall, it had printed at the top of the electoral column the names of the candidates for President and Vice President; did it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I will say to the Senator from New York that while I am not familiar with the practice—and the Senator from New York will correct me if I am wrong about it—I fancy that in the State of New York at presidential elections there is a separate ballot box for the votes for presidential electors.

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And they have found it necessary to do that, I suppose, on account of the size of the ballots?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. So that a voter in that State in presidential elections has two ballots given him, one for State officers and Members of the House of Representatives and Senate——

Mr. CALDER. And local officers; county and city officers.

Mr. NORRIS. And another one, such as I hold in my hand here, that contains nothing on earth but the names of presidential electors and other party insignia that is printed on it.

Mr. CALDER. And, as the Senator probably meant to convey the idea, we are compelled to have these two ballots because of the great number of presidential electors.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the point exactly. The Senator has hit the nail right on the head.

Mr. CALDER. And I have observed, in analyzing election returns, that when our voters go to the polling places and are handed the two ballots about 10 to 15 per cent of them do not vote for anyone except presidential electors. They think when they have put that mark at the top in the circle that they have voted for the whole ticket.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and, as a matter of fact, they have not.

Mr. CALDER. They have not. As I say, there are 10 to 15 per cent of them.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not suppose that the Senator from New York can give us any information now, for instance, as to how much additional expense to the taxpayers of New York is involved on account of having two ballot boxes and two complete sets of machinery there?

Mr. CALDER. I can not say. I know that it runs into the tens of thousands of dollars, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it would be a great amount.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to be sure that I understood the statement made by the Senator from New York. Did I correctly understand him to say that under the law of his State, if the voter makes a cross mark in the circle here, he does not vote the whole ticket?

Mr. CALDER. Oh, yes; he votes for all of the electors.

Mr. NORRIS. On that ticket?

Mr. CALDER. On that ticket.

Mr. WILLIS. But under the law in the Senator's State there is a separate ticket——

Mr. CALDER. A separate ticket for a presidential year.

Mr. NORRIS. They have a separate ticket for the governor and other officers and a separate ballot box.

Mr. WILLIS. There are two ballot boxes?

Mr. CALDER. Yes, sir; and the voter, by placing one mark in the circle, votes for all of the electors; but he can, as the ballot indicates, vote for the electors in the different columns.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and there are as many blank spaces on the ballot as there are electors?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. In the case of the Senator's State it was 45?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, the object of that is purely technical.

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. But, fundamentally, the object of that is to reserve to the voter the right to vote as he pleases. Of course an intelligent voter voting for presidential electors would vote in the circle, because he does not care anything about the electors. It is the fellow that they are going to vote for that he is for; and yet we go through the foolish formality of giving him an opportunity—which we must do if he is free—to go down the list and vote for 45 men, or he can vote for 40 men and write 5 more names over here, or he can write 45 names over here; so we just go through the formality of preserving what is conceded to be a technical right.

As a matter of fact, so far as presidential electors are concerned, there is not anything to it. The real protection he ought to have is this: He ought to be permitted, if he wants to do so, to vote for a Republican candidate, let us say, for President and a Democratic candidate for Vice President. There is not a State in the Union that would pass a law that would say—and the people of no State would stand for it—that "we will not allow a voter to vote for a man of one political party for one office and a man of a different political belief for another office."

Mr. CALDER. As for governor and lieutenant governor?

Mr. NORRIS. As for governor and lieutenant governor; but when it comes to voting for President and Vice President that is true now, and there is not any way to get around it.

Mr. CALDER. That is right.

Mr. NORRIS. Because you vote for an elector—we will say that he is one of the Republican electors—and if he is elected he is going to vote for the Republican candidate for President and the Republican candidate for Vice President.

Mr. CALDER. He can not do otherwise.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. The voter is absolutely denied the right to vote for one man on one ticket and another man on another ticket.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator knows that I am in sympathy with the general proposition he advocates. The electoral system broke down the first time it was ever used, and has never functioned as it was intended to function. What I want to ask the Senator is this: Does he know from his examination how many of the States in the Union provide headings such as are provided here?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not.

Mr. WILLIS. I know that in my own State we have a similar arrangement; that is, the name of the candidate for the Presidency and the name of the candidate for the Vice Presidency appear at the head of the list, so that there is no confusion in those States. While I am in favor of the proposition that the Senator advocates, there is no confusion growing out of the number of electors, because they are identified here by the name of the candidate.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; the intelligent voter will make only one cross, of course, for the presidential electors. He will vote in the circle. That is true. That does not, however, do away with the fact that, for instance, at the last presidential election if a man wanted to vote for Vice President on one ticket and President on another he could not do it.

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, absolutely not. There is no way in which he could do it at all.

Mr. NORRIS. There is only one State in the Union that I know of where he could do that, and that is my own State.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not hear all of the Senator's remarks. Did he explain that in his remarks?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not know that there was any State where that could be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the State of Nebraska provides for the printing of the names of the candidates themselves on the ballot and for the appointment of presidential electors after election. In Nebraska it is provided that the governor shall appoint as electors those people who were selected by the party whose candidate for President carried the election.

Mr. WILLIS. How does the law of the Senator's State meet the provision in the Constitution which provides that the electors shall cast their ballots for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves?

Mr. NORRIS. I explained that, too.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well; I will get that in the Senator's speech.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true now.

Mr. WILLIS. There is nothing new in that?

Mr. NORRIS. There is nothing new in that. In other words, we can not by a State enactment change the Constitution of the United States. The only reason why the legislature can select any method it pleases is because the language in the Constitution is as broad as it can be made. I want to read that again for the Senator:

Each State shall appoint—

Now, listen to that; it is "appoint," not "elect"—

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct—

So they can select any man they want to.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, the Senator knows that for many years the legislatures did choose the electors.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. That was quite common years ago.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, to-day—February 15, 1923—is the first anniversary of the founding of the Court of International Justice, perhaps the greatest achievement of the League of Nations. I had intended to signalize that anniversary, in so far as I might be able to do so, by continuing the account of the work of the League of Nations which I gave the Senate on October 5, 1921. I do not desire, however, to interfere with the disposition of the pending measure and shall defer my remarks until it shall have been disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator from Texas.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, there has been brought to my attention the lax enforcement of the prohibition law in the District of Columbia. My information is that since the 1st of January there have been something like 200 arrests, and that the courts try only a very few cases a week; that the defendants give bond, and before the trial can ever be had the witnesses disperse, perhaps die, or go away and can not be had.

I am told that we need more judges in the District. I am thoroughly in favor of economy, but I fear that the present condition is one of false economy, and I trust that the Judiciary Committee or the Committee on the District of Columbia will look into this matter and if necessary give the people of Washington another judge. We can not have respect for law unless we enforce the law.

The dockets of the courts are crowded, and I understand a year or two behind in their calendars. I feel that people who break the law ought to be made to bear the expenses of enforcing the law. I do not want to be cruel to offenders, but they should be taught to obey the law, and if they willfully go and violate it, then they should be punished, and punished rapidly. They are entitled under the Constitution to a quick trial, and that should be had.

The business of this country is growing, the population here is increasing very rapidly, and these people do not have a vote. I would not vote to give them a vote, but it behooves us to look after their interests carefully, and to see that justice is done. The nonenforcement of the law here is deplorable. I do not know any city in the world that I have read about where there is as much lawlessness, according to the population, as there is in Washington. I believe one of the reasons is that offenders are not punished, and I think there should be another judge.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate No. 124 to the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the further conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The message also announced that the House had adopted a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 84) authorizing the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate No. 124 to House bill 13660, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, to strike certain language from said amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 2531. An act to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 3169. An act to equalize pensions of retired policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF WAREHOUSE ACT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3220) to amend sections 2, 5, 11, 12, 15, 19, 29, and 30 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916, which were on page 2, after line 10, to insert:

That section 6 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That each warehouseman applying for a license to conduct a warehouse in accordance with this act shall, as a condition to the granting thereof, execute and file with the Secretary of Agriculture a good and sufficient bond to the United States to secure the faithful performance of his obligations as a warehouseman under the laws of the State, District, or Territory in which he is conducting such warehouse, as well as under the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, and of such additional obligations as a warehouseman as may be assumed by him under contracts with the respective depositors of agricultural products in such warehouse. Said bond shall be in such form and amount, shall have such surety or sureties, subject to service of process in suits on the bond within the State, District, or Territory in which the warehouse is located, and shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe to carry out the purposes of this act, and may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, include the requirements of fire insurance. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that a bond approved by him is, or for any cause has become, insufficient, he may require an additional bond or bonds to be given by the warehouseman concerned, conforming with the requirements of this section, and unless the same be given within the time fixed by a written demand therefor the license of such warehouseman may be suspended or revoked."

And on page 3, after line 24, to insert:

That section 18 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. That every receipt issued for agricultural products stored in a warehouse licensed under his act shall embody within its written or printed terms (a) the location of the warehouse in which the agricultural products are stored; (b) the date of issue of the receipt; (c) the consecutive number of the receipt; (d) a statement whether the agricultural products received will be delivered to the bearer, to a specified person, or to a specified person or his order; (e) the rate of storage charges; (f) a description of the agricultural products received, showing the quantity thereof, or, in case of agricultural products customarily put up in bales or packages, a description of such bales or packages by marks, numbers, or other means of identification and the weight of such bales or packages; (g) the grade or other class of the agricultural products received and the standard or description in accordance with which such classification has been made: Provided, That such grade or other class shall be stated according to the official standard of the United States applicable to such agricultural products as the same may be fixed and promulgated under authority of law: Provided further, That until such official standards of the United States for any agricultural product or products have been fixed and promulgated, the grade or other class thereof may be stated in accordance with any recognized standard or in accordance with such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; (h) a statement that the receipt is issued subject to the United States warehouse act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder; (i) if the receipt be issued for agricultural products of which the warehouseman is owner, either solely or jointly or in common with others, the fact of such ownership; (j) a statement of the amount of advances made and of liabilities incurred for which the warehouseman claims a lien: Provided, That if the precise amount of such advances made or of such liabilities incurred be at the time of the issue of the receipt unknown to the warehouseman or his agent who issues it, a statement of the fact that advances have been made or liabilities incurred and the purpose thereof shall be sufficient; (k) such other terms and conditions within the limitations of this act as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture; and (l) the signature of the warehouseman, which may be made by his authorized agent: Provided, That unless otherwise required by the law of the State in which the warehouse is located, when requested by the depositor of other than fungible agricultural products, a receipt omitting compliance with subdivision (g) of this section may be issued: Provided, however, The Secretary of Agriculture may in his discretion require that such receipt have plainly and conspicuously embodied in its written or printed terms a provision that such receipt is not negotiable."

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution No. 84, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate No. 124 to the bill (H. R. 13660) entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes," be authorized to agree to striking out the following language from said amendment: "at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge."

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PURCHASE OF GRAIN FOR SEED PURPOSES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith S. 2023, entitled "An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes."

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1923.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I submit the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk, and I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration and adoption.

I may state that all it proposes to do is to write into the bill which has just been returned by the President specific reference to the two years, which reference by mistake was left out in the bill as it passed Congress. The resolution provides for the insertion in the bill as it passed both Houses of the words "in the years 1918 and 1919." Those are the years for which the loans for the purchase of seed were made, and, as I have stated, reference to them was left out by mistake.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the bill which the President has returned to Congress?

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. The bill passed the House of Representatives and the Senate with an error omitting reference to the two years to which the legislation was intended to apply, but the mistake was not discovered until the bill had reached the hands of the President.

Mr. ROBINSON. What was the nature of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. The bill relates to the loans which were made to farmers to purchase seed wheat in 1918 and 1919.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is now proposed by the concurrent resolution to incorporate a reference to those two years?

Mr. CURTIS. The purpose is to specifically mention those two years in the bill. The bill was unanimously reported from the committee; and as I have stated, it passed the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator from Kansas offer an amendment to the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I have submitted a concurrent resolution authorizing the enrolling clerk to correct the error and to write in the two years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas?

The resolution (S. Con. Res. 40) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2023) defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes, be rescinded, and that the Secretary be authorized and directed to reenroll the bill with the following amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," insert "in the years 1918 and 1919."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States in the years 1918 and 1919 for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes."

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to take only a few moments time to express my dissent at the criticism of Great Britain on this floor, and the statement of the Senator from Missouri intimating that the United States would be justified in using force and violence to collect the debt from Great Britain. I do not wish to discuss the suggestion at any length at all. I merely wish to express my earnest dissent from sentiments of that nature being made on the floor of the United States Senate, because I think it is mischievous and harmful in our international relationships that in this body, without dissent, such sentiments should be expressed on the floor.

Of course, I do not take it very seriously, and I do not suppose the world will take it very seriously; but I think it is far better, in speaking of our relations with foreign nations, to be exceedingly temperate and careful in our expressions. I have never been willing to speak unkindly of distant Japan as a country, for instance. I believe that all the nations of the world are governed according to their environment, according to their lights, and that their statesmen are doing approximately about the best they know how. Nevertheless, they are led into war by the imprudence of human leadership, due to the frailty of judgment of men in high places.

I think it proper to observe that even in dealing with private persons the collection of debts by brute force is no longer lawful or regarded as a civilized process. It no longer meets the moral sense of mankind to incarcerate an individual for debt, for instance. It is now unlawful in civilized countries to imprison for debt. It is no longer regarded as justified to take from a man his liberty because he is unable to pay a commercial obligation, much less the liberty of a nation because it can not meet a commercial obligation; and it was my objection to the principle of using brute force to collect a debt which led me, among many others, to express my dissent from the attitude of the French leadership in going into the Ruhr and using force and violence and using whips on the citizens in the streets as a means of collecting a national commercial debt.

In my judgment, they will not collect the debt in that way. What they will collect will be a harvest of hate, which will not only not liquidate the commercial debt but may impose other debts still more serious upon both the German and the French people. Such a policy seems deplorable. It affects our interest as world citizens, and I vigorously protest against it as a remedy worse than the disease.

Without intending to refer to Europe at all, I am in sympathy with the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] declaring that the making of war shall be an international high crime. The individuals who are responsible for the making of war ought to be held to a personal accountability. I should not think it necessary to impose the death penalty upon them for their lack of understanding, of wisdom, of honesty, of good will in bringing on war, because men do those things without knowing very well where they are going, but I think a long-time incarceration of such persons would be entirely justified, in order that by that example—depriving them of personal liberty—other leaders of mankind would be warned against bringing upon the innocent people of the world the bloodshed and losses inflicted by war.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] seemed to think that it was highly advantageous that we should have a high rate of interest in settling with Great Britain. I think a low rate of interest is better for the world, not only in settling this debt, but I think that as a standard there ought to be a low rate. I remind the Senate that before the war our 2 per cent bonds were selling at par. They did have the currency privilege, but now all bonds, in effect, have the currency privilege in a way, because they are used as a means of getting currency. Our 3 per cent bonds, without the currency privilege, were above par before the war, and while we have now a current rate of 5 per cent on call loans in New York, that is because the rate on call loans in New York is arbitrarily fixed by half a dozen men who sit around a table and in the morning fix the rate for the day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. Just a moment. That is an arbitrary matter, while in London, where they have not this system of arbitrarily fixing the rate of interest on call loans and do have competition for call-loan money, the rate to-day is 1¾ per cent, and has been running along between 1½ and 2 per cent. I read from this morning's New York World, for instance, this statement of the London money market:

Money was loaned at 1¾ per cent. Discount rates were short and three-month bills, 2⅛ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is call money.

Mr. OWEN. The latter is the discount rate for 90 days.

Mr. SMOOT. But the 1¾ per cent is for call money.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is for call money. In London they have a settlement every two weeks of these loans on exchange collaterals, so that they have a system under which the debtor is not required to liquidate within 24 hours. The consequence is that they can afford to give a better rate than where the man may be called on at any time to settle and liquidate. We could have the same low rate in America if the United States Government and the State governments would exercise their proper functions in supervision of these great money markets, and without interfering with any of their legitimate business, without interfering with their great purpose to be a market where stocks and bonds are bought and sold according to the value. Now I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wanted to ask the Senator a question, but perhaps I can do it later, if we have the time.

Mr. OWEN. I am quite willing to have the Senator ask me now.

Mr. BORAH. I want the view of the Senator as to the advantage either to the United States or to Great Britain of this clause, and why, therefore, it is inserted:

Any payment of interest or of principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest.

What was the financial reason, from a business standpoint, for inserting that clause?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know what the history of it is, but it is perfectly obvious that if our indebtedness is liquidated that is all we need to ask. There might perhaps be some advantage, if our securities should go under par, in having the British Government become the buyer of those securities, for if it should it would bring them back to par, and it would help our credit. I do not see any harm in this at all.

Mr. BORAH. Could it be of any possible advantage, unless one of two things should happen—either that the Government bonds had already been purchased by the agents of the creditor governments at from 92 to 94, or that hereafter the bonds should go down and they should have the opportunity to purchase them? What advantage could be derived from it, except something of that kind?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there could be no advantage if they had already bought the bonds, because they could sell them at par, so that there would be no advantage in the provision in that respect. Of course, if they went below par, if there could be such a thing—and I grant that there could be—the credit of England would be affected just the same as our credit would be. What we want, and what the contract we made with the people provided, I might say, was that when this money loaned England and other countries was paid it would go toward paying the obligations of the Government of the United States, and as long as they are drawing now 4¼ per cent, your commission thought our people would be very much gratified to receive such bonds at par and accrued interest and cancel that many of their bonds.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there would be no advantage to the British Government in going into the market and purchasing bonds at par and paying with bonds instead of cash.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the advantage there would be, and I might just as well state it now——

Mr. BORAH. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Oklahoma does not object, I will state it.

Mr. OWEN. I would be glad to have the Senator make a statement in regard to the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Payments on account of the principal may be made in three-year periods. That is because of the fact that there may be a year or two years in which the balance of trade against England, we will say, would be so great that she could not pay us; but we refused to allow the settlement to go beyond the three-year period. We provide that in the payment at the end of any three-year period there shall be included the total of all of the payments due during the three years, with interest upon the deferred amounts. If during the first year England did not have an amount sufficient to pay any money, and the payment of it would involve the question of exchange between the two countries, if she had only part of the money, she could pay us in our bonds, together with what little interest may be collected on those bonds in that time, and that would assist her when she did have money enough to pay in the three-year period, if she took advantage of it, and offset the interest she would be compelled to pay us on those deferred payments. It is nothing more nor less than a fair business proposition between two honorable nations, and I can not see any reason why we should not do it. We want those bonds paid.

Mr. BORAH. Want what bonds paid?

Mr. SMOOT. We want our bonds paid.

Mr. BORAH. We will take care of our bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. We will take care of them by the payment of a number of the bonds with the money we receive from the English bonds that we will take from her.

Mr. BORAH. At whose suggestion was this clause put in the contract, that England might pay in our bonds?

Mr. SMOOT. England asked the privilege of doing that.

Mr. BORAH. Did she state the reason why she wanted that put in?

Mr. SMOOT. I stated the reason why.

Mr. BORAH. Was that the reason she gave?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the reason she gave.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Oklahoma permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Utah thinks there is no probability that Great Britain has already purchased a considerable quantity of our bonds, because she would have no interest in holding them to pay upon the principal of her debt, for the reason that many of them are at par now; but, conceding that she has already purchased a large quantity of these bonds on a depreciated market, it might be quite possible that she could not throw them on the market again without depreciating them below what they are at present, but she could turn them in to the Government of the United States at par.

Mr. SMOOT. If she threw them on the market, as the Senator suggests, if she had them in sufficiently large quantities, it might bear the market of the bonds for a little while, but it could not possibly bear the market to any extent. We buy those bonds for our sinking fund. As the Senator said, if England purchases the bonds it will increase the value of the bonds. There is no question at all about that.

Mr. OWEN. If England came in as a buyer of the bonds, it would make the bonds go back to par.

Mr. SMOOT. As to whether she has bought the bonds, I can not say.

Mr. OWEN. It is altogether improbable.

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt that she has. Why should she buy a bond bearing 4¼ per cent interest and still be paying upon her own obligations 5½ per cent? If I were representing England, and I think if the Senator were representing England and was responsible for the finances of that country, if we should buy our own obligation drawing interest at 5½ per cent and redeem that obligation, we never would put our money into 4¼ per cent bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That seems reasonable; but, on the other hand, suppose the bill is passed and a settlement is made with Great Britain upon the basis of the interest at the rate of 3 per cent during the next 10 years, would it not be to the advantage of Great Britain to have our bonds which draw 4¼ per cent? While she was paying us only 3 per cent, we would be paying her 4¼ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The only advantage that could possibly come would be with reference to the time between the payments of the annual payment of principal, as I have already stated, and on that she would have to take a chance. It all depends upon her finances. Not only that, but it would also affect us. If England and the balance of the world were compelled to pay gold into the Treasury of the United States and take it out of the other treasuries of the world in large quantities, I will say to the Senator that America would suffer from such a course. The exchange value of money would be such that we would lose by that process a great deal more than we would ever make upon the little difference in the rate of interest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact that Great Britain last October paid out $100,000,000 and that contemporaneously with that the British exchange was going up and is even higher now?

Mr. SMOOT. England had been for two years or more, I think, preparing for the payment of that interest. She paid $50,000,000 on the 15th of October, 1922, and paid $50,000,000 on November 15, 1922. As I remember, and I state it only as from memory, she did promise to pay $125,000,000 during that time, but her last payment of $75,000,000 she was not able to make and she asked that she be permitted to pay $50,000,000 and did pay the $50,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator does not maintain that the payment of that amount had an injurious effect on the rate of British exchange?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not, because I said that they had been preparing for quite a while to pay that amount of money. I want to say to the Senator, however, that if England were called upon to pay another $100,000,000 to the Government of the United States there is no question that it would affect her exchange. If I had the English budget here I could show the Senator how it would affect it and why.

Mr. GLASS. Let me ask the Senator what possible disadvantage it could be to the United States if England were to do that? The United States has to pay her rate to somebody. It could not be of any possible disadvantage to this Government if England were to proceed in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be no disadvantage whatever. If England in the meantime, during the first year of the three-year period, or at any intermediate time, should be able to take a part of what she was owing us and put it into our bonds it would strengthen our bonds, and she could get a little interest out of those bonds to assist her in paying the interest which she would have to pay to us.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Carrying out the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], is it not a fact that England can only get a benefit out of the provision in case she is able to buy our bonds at a discount?

Mr. SMOOT. With one exception. It is true that it is impossible for her to do it if our bonds are above par. The Senator from Idaho was right in that respect. But if they were exactly at par and the first payment on the principal fell due, we will say, on December 15, 1923, and she did not have the money with which to pay it without crippling her in making other payments which were absolutely required to be made, and in the payment of which the exchange value between the two countries would be adversely affected, then she could take advantage of the privilege that is given her and she would not likely make the first year's payment. Therefore if she had a part of the money for the first year's payment she at least could put that part into bonds and draw the interest until perhaps the next year, when she could pay the full two years, and she would have the advantage of at least the accumulated interest for that length of time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. She would be drawing interest from us at the rate of 4½ per cent, and paying interest to us at the rate of 3 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; for the time she would hold those bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there is something in the argument. She could put herself gradually in the position where she would be making a profit of 1½ per cent interest every year on the bonds of ours which she bought and held.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that if England or any other country had the money, she would live up to the contract of paying, but she does have that privilege of deferring payment. I think it is an advantage to her and also an advantage to America in case of a tight money market.

Mr. OWEN. The real point is that England has the opportunity of deferring payment. It is no favor to England to say she may buy our bonds and get a rate of interest on bonds, because any nation or any person could do that.

Mr. BORAH. But while she holds our bonds and collects 4½ per cent interest on them, she is only paying us 3 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see that there is very much argument in that when we know there are some outstanding English obligations drawing 5½ per cent. England is not going to buy our bonds as an investment at 4½ per cent when she has obligations of her own now drawing 5½ per cent.

Mr. GLASS. To the extent that she should buy our bonds, she would simply stabilize the bond market for the 13,000,000 American people who own our bonds.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but there is another item, of course, which I understood was in the proposition. The matter came to me by reason of suggestions made to me by one of the great bankers of the United States in discussing the proposition. I am asking these questions because of things which he said to me in discussing the matter.

Of course it would help stabilize the bond market, because the minute the bond market started to go down, England would come in and buy, and that would stabilize the bond market. That is a great advantage. If the bonds were still in the hands of those who originally bought them, I could see a great universal advantage throughout the United States; but unfortunately that is not true.

Mr. GLASS. It is true, I will say to the Senator, to a very great extent.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] stated there were 13,000,000 bondholders in the United States, and the bonds have not been so purchased to the great extent that people seem to think they have been. I know the Senator is correct as far as the bonds are out of the hands of many of the original bondholders.

Mr. BORAH. But if the Senator would go out through our section of country, the Senator's and mine, he would find none of the bonds in the hands of the laborer who bought them or in the hands of the farmer who bought them, or any of that class of people, out through our country. I do not know how it is in the East, but out through our part of the country they have passed out of the hands of such people entirely.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator that I requested the Undersecretary of the Treasury several days ago to furnish me with a statement, and that statement in detail shows that there were 13,000,000 holders of the bonds. It does not argue because John Smith has sold his bonds that they necessarily have gone into the hands of a millionaire. Tom Jones, who may be a little better able to hold the bonds than John Smith, very likely has bought them in the same community.

Mr. BORAH. That may be true in some parts of the country, but I happen to know that all through the West the bonds have passed out of the hands of that class of people almost universally, and especially the very small holders. They have gone into the hands of the bankers and that class of people who are able to handle them. I am not criticizing the proposition, but I am of the opinion that back of all the proposition is a desire to stabilize those bonds.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia upon what information the Treasury Department ascertains the number of holders of its bonds? What source of information has it?

Mr. GLASS. I did not undertake to inquire the source of the information. I simply asked as to the facts, and the Undersecretary furnished me with a statement as to the number of borrowers.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is so familiar with such transactions that I thought possibly he would know without specific information from the Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, I do not think that the Treasury knows, though to some extent it does. It may only give an approximate estimate, and it did give an approximate estimate showing that the bonds were held, in various denominations, by 13,000,000 holders.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. How could they know where the unregistered bonds were held?

Mr. GLASS. As to the registered bonds, they could know exactly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. GLASS. As to the coupon bonds, they had to make an estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one other source of information, I will say to the Senator, and they could get the information from that source. Every taxpayer with an income of over $1,000 a year has to make a tax return as to his income, and they can secure a great deal of information from that source. Not only that, but every taxpayer who pays an income tax reports upon the bonds that he holds and the interest upon and kind of bonds that he has in his possession, and the amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me I want to say that I am astounded at the figures submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that there are 30,000,000 bondholders in the country. That is one out of every two grown persons in the United States, because about 50 per cent of our population is less than 21 years of age. That would mean a most remarkable condition. I want to assure the Senator that there is no such condition as that in my State. I do not know where the bondholders are, but the Senator surely must have been misinformed.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Tennessee misunderstood me. I did not say 30,000,000, but 13,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought there must be some mistake. Of course there could not be 30,000,000 holders of our bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must not think that because a person is not 21 years of age he can not own bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are a few very fortunate people——

Mr. SMOOT. Not only a few, but there are whole families and whole communities——

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; I know that.

Mr. SMOOT. I know where the bonds have been given as Christmas gifts and in every other way bonds have been presented to persons under 21 years of age.

Mr. McKELLAR. I misunderstood the figure stated by the Senator from Virginia, and the number, 13,000,000, presents a different situation.

Mr. SMOOT. The baby bonds which were issued by the post offices throughout the country in denominations of $5, $10, $25, and $50, which was the maximum of the denominations issued, were held even by school children. I know all over the United States funds were collected in schools sufficient to buy a bond. The children all contributed to such funds, and the bonds are held by them now.

Mr. GLASS subsequently said: Mr. President, in the course of a colloquy to-day I undertook to state the number of holders of Government bonds. I said, or should have said, at all events, that they were 13,000,000 in number; but I am told by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that he understood me to say "30,000,000" instead of "13,000,000."

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I did.

Mr. GLASS. Therefore, in order to have the RECORD appear as it should appear, we have agreed to the alteration, if alteration be needed, so that I may be quoted as saying "13,000,000" instead of "30,000,000."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia knows, I should like to be informed how many holders of bonds there were in the spring of 1920.

Mr. GLASS. As I recall, the largest number of holders of Liberty bonds was 22,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Was it not 18,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to say that the remarks I made about this particular matter were made on the assumption that the Senator from Virginia had said "30,000,000"; and I do not know that I should have said anything at all if I had understood him to say "13,000,000," as he did. It seems to me that 13,000,000 is quite a large number of bondholders, and I hope there are that many; but my statements were predicated upon what I understood to be his statement that there were 30,000,000 bondholders in the United States.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it has been suggested that it will be against the interest of the United States to have the payment of this indebtedness extended over a long period of time. I think, however, it will be perfectly obvious upon considering the matter that having the indebtedness extended over a long period of time will be highly advantageous to the United States as well as to the debtors of the United States. Suppose we were to say that the indebtedness ought to be paid immediately, and it should be paid, it could only be paid in commodities, because we know that it could not be paid in gold. Suppose that there were sent into this country immediately billions of dollars worth of commodities from Europe, it would have the effect of breaking down commodity prices here and would interfere with our own manufactures and commercial activities. It would make a commodity panic. Obviously that would be against the interest of the stability of values in America and would be injurious to all our people. It is far better, in my opinion, to extend the payment of this indebtedness over a long period of time, and 62 years, in my judgment, is not too long a period, because it must be remembered that Europe owes approximately $18,000,000,000 to the United States.

The indebtedness of $11,000,000,000 and upward is not the whole of the indebtedness due the United States by foreign countries, for there is also a large amount which is due to our nations in all sorts of form. That means an interest charge against that indebtedness of about $700,000,000 in addition to our normal commodity balance of exchange. That balance of exchange, in terms of commodities, is running about $1,200,000,000 a year. The interest on the foreign debt added to that will make it approach nearly $2,000,000,000 a year. That has got to be paid in terms of commodities. The world has got to have time to readjust itself; and this debt ought to be extended over a very long period of time in order that the world may accommodate itself to the conditions.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Can the Senator from Oklahoma advise us as to what rate of interest is paid on the indebtedness which is owing to private citizens or to individuals in this country by England?

Mr. OWEN. That rate of interest is probably 5 or 6 per cent.

Mr. BORAH. I understand also that the rate of interest which is paid upon some of the English domestic bonds is 5 per cent?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; but, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho and the country ought to realize that while rates of interest are at a certain point to-day it does not at all mean that such rates are permanent. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have built up in America through the Federal reserve act a means by which credits may be extended against commodities in lieu of gold.

The same thing has been done under the farm loan act by extending credits against farm lands on long periods of time. Those acts are nothing more nor less than a factory for the manufacture of credits in lieu of gold; so instead of having credits depend alone upon the small amount of gold in the world, we now have built up a system by which credits are extended against commodities which are merchantable and nonperishable. That means a very large volume of values as a basis of new credits in the country. Therefore, when we speak of the rates of interest before the World War of 2 and 3 per cent on our bonds as being normal, we need not think that in 10 years from now the rate of interest on United States bonds will not be comparatively low, and for the further reason——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator will excuse me, if he pleases, for a moment—for the further reason that the gigantic output of commodity values under modern machinery such as we in the United States have built up and are still building up in geometrical ratio, and the tremendous volume of commodities which is being poured out, indicated before the depression began a productive power on the part of the American people of approximately $70,000,000,000 a year. There is a great annual increase of capital created out of the work and labor of men which is constantly growing in America—which is constantly growing throughout the world—which must find investment. Because of the great World War which poured out a huge flood in billions of Government securities that capital has been diverted into those Government securities and at rather high rates of interest. Some governments are paying 7 and 8 per cent now, and our own bonds, bearing an interest rate of 4¼ per cent, went down to 82 two years ago, but they have already come back and they are going above par.

The Treasury Department is able constantly to make a little better terms in regard to the credits which are required for the meeting of the Treasury obligations. Within 10 years we may expect the world rate of interest, so far as the credit of the United States is concerned, to be down to 2 and a fraction per cent—at any rate, under 3 per cent. I have not the slightest doubt of it. I think the arrangement made with Great Britain binding Great Britain to pay the rates of interest fixed in the agreement is fair, and I think that Great Brtain was justified in asking permission to pay in United States Government bonds, because if they can liquidate our indebtedness to our people that will satisfy our purpose, and ought to be regarded as sufficient to liquidate the obligation of Great Britain to us.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the stipulation of the agreement under which the bonds of the United States may be used for the redemption of the bonds of Great Britain instead of cash, to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] referred a short while ago, whether the incorporation of that provision does not show that the commissioners who negotiated the agreement expect that quite likely the conditions which the Senator has now predicted will not arise, but that the bonds now outstanding will go below par, indicating that the rate of interest will be higher?

Mr. OWEN. Regardless of the implied forecast, naturally they want to get whatever opportunity might be afforded by the future which they can not forecast.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But my question was, Did not the incorporation of the provision referred to indicate that they expected a condition of things quite different from that which the Senator is now predicting?

Mr. OWEN. The opportunity of paying in these bonds at any time gives them an advantage, of course, in the contingency that they should fall to a low price—I agree to that—but that does not at all affect the argument which I am making.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is perfectly obvious that it gives them an advantage, but that is not the question which I addressed to the Senator. My question was, Does it not indicate that they have anticipated that our bonds will go below par and that our credit will not be improved, as the Senator predicts it will be?

Mr. OWEN. It indicates not that our credit may not be improved, but there may be periods during which it will not have such a strong standing as is expected. They want an option which is always advantageous when it costs nothing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think it is nothing more than a desire to take advantage of the situation if our bonds go down. There would be no point to the option if they went up.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me say again that if it had been absolutely known that our bonds never would be less than par, then there would be the advantage I have already stated in relation to the interest period between the first and the third year payments.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me that the conclusion is irresistible that they figured that the time would come when our credit would not be as good as it is to-day, and that our bonds would be upon the market below par.

Mr. SMOOT. That may or may not be so; but I agree with the Senator from Oklahoma that in 10 years from now the United States and Great Britain will be able to borrow money at a much less rate than they are borrowing it to-day.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee started to ask me a question when I was in the middle of a sentence, and I did not get an opportunity for ascertaining what the question was.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is very kind. He has answered the question I had in mind. I was going to ask if he believes that at any time within 10 years the United States could fund $4,600,000,000 of indebtedness at a less rate than 4 or even 4¼ per cent? He has stated that he does think so.

Mr. OWEN. I have not the slightest doubt of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I differ entirely with the Senator. I do not believe, with the enormous amount of bonds outstanding throughout the world, not only bonds issued by this Government but by virtually every government in all the world, that there is the slightest possibility of our funding this indebtedness at any such rate.

The Senator will remember that the present 2 per cent bonds that are now outstanding were sold at a price so that they would yield about 5 per cent, as I recall, and they were issued long, long after the Civil War. I do not know of any bonds that have been issued by our Government at very much less than the rate our present bonds bear.

Mr. OWEN. I do not agree as a historical fact with the statement the Senator has made; it is not correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was so informed by the Treasury Department this morning; I do not know whether or not the statement is correct.

Mr. OWEN. The Treasury Department will have to readjust its figures, for they are not correct, as a matter of fact.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Treasury Department advised the Senator to that effect the Treasury Department made a statement that history does not bear out.

Mr. OWEN. And as to which I know better.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the bonds to which I have referred had the circulation privilege.

Mr. OWEN. And they have it yet. I had occasion to have bought $200,000 of those bonds at par, and I know they were not issued at the low rate the Senator indicates.

Mr. McKELLAR. Were they bought by the Senator recently?

Mr. OWEN. They were bought about 10 years ago, as nearly as I can remember.

Now, Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator has said, I remind him again of what was quoted in the morning newspapers—and is quoted in every morning newspaper; it is a constant thing; it is nothing new—that money in London right now on call is at 1¾ per cent and on time 2½ per cent—merchants' credit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator must see that his argument is faulty, for the reason that if Great Britain could get money in her own kingdom at 1¾ per cent, as the Senator says it is now bringing there, she would be exceedingly foolish to give us a 3½ per cent bond or even a 3 per cent bond.

Mr. OWEN. I only pointed out to the Senator that the merchants and the bankers of London were getting money on call at 1¾ per cent and on time at 2½ per cent. That does not mean that Great Britain can go in and borrow in the London market $4,000,000,000 at one time; but it means that, according to the current needs of commerce and industry of England as expressed in the London money market, call money is only commanding 1¾ per cent and time money 2½ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. For 60 and 90 day paper.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; for 60-day paper. That is of itself evidence of what will be the normal rate when the world gets readjusted, as it will be readjusted in a few years.

Mr. McKELLAR. What does the British Government pay for the money which it borrows?

Mr. OWEN. It probably pays 5 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it pays 5 per cent, that would not even be a comparable situation; but it would be more comparable than the argument in favor of this rate; that is, that because call money was 1¾ per cent, as the Senator has said, or that time money on 30-day paper was 2½ per cent, that British bonds in this enormous sum could be sold at such a rate.

Mr. OWEN. The effect of the Senator's argument would be that because our bonds were down to 82 they never could go up.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; because in an emergency, when the Government is compelled to use its credit on a very great scale, of course the market to supply that credit is limited, and therefore the sale of that credit is at a higher figure. As that condition changes, however, the Government will increasingly be able to get credit on better and better terms; and I have given the reasons which justify the belief that all the nations of the world will be able to get money on better and better terms, because there will be increasing capital to be invested in such forms of bonds, and the extraordinary occurrences during the World War, making a demand for credits by these governments, will have ceased. Moreover, the productive power of improving man-made machines is growing by geometric ratio, and the volume of commodities and credits and capital as it increases will lower the interest rate of the bonds of nations which will in future be at peace and engaged in liquidating the wounds of war.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am opposed to the measure before us for the ratification of the agreement entered into on behalf of our Government by the Foreign Debt Funding Commission with the Government of Great Britain touching its obligations arising out of loans made to it by the United States during the war and immediately thereafter, and purpose to set forth briefly the reasons which impel me to the conclusion at which, after reflection, I have arrived.

The agreement involves the stupendous sum of upward of $4,600,000,000. The indebtedness is not disputed. No controversy subsists or has ever arisen concerning the obligation, either with respect to the liability or with respect to the amount. The total sum was loaned. It represents cash out of the Treasury. The advances were begun pursuant to a law of Congress, enacted speedily upon our entrance into the great conflict, under which the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized, from the proceeds of Liberty bonds, for the issuance of which the act made provision, "to purchase at par from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, their obligations, hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act." The clause quoted is from the original Liberty loan act of April 24, 1917. Similar language in subsequent acts authorized loans under like conditions, pursuant to which nearly $10,000,000,000 were loaned to our allies, including the vast sum heretofore mentioned to Great Britain.

The several Liberty loan issues were put out at the following rates of interest, to wit:

The first Liberty loan, 3½ per cent; second Liberty loan, 4 per cent; third Liberty loan, 4¼ per cent; fourth Liberty loan, 4¼ per cent; Victory Liberty loan, 4¾ per cent.

Their maturity is as follows: The first, June 15, 1947; the second, November 15, 1942; the third, September 15, 1928; the fourth, October 15, 1938; and the fifth, May 20, 1923.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is, however, a privilege of redemption of those bonds before those dates.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes; certainly. We are obliged, however, to take them up at those dates. We may, if we see fit, take them up earlier.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. That is what I wanted to call the Senator's attention to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, certainly.

Owing to the expedition which the conditions imperatively demanded, a simple I O U was taken at the time from the borrowing nations, reciting that it would be by the debtor, if requested by the Secretary of the Treasury, converted "at par, with an adjustment of accrued interest, into an equal amount of 5 per cent gold bonds conforming to the acts of Congress." None of the bonds so promised by the nations thus lavishly provided with funds by the taxpayers of the United States have ever been delivered, the efforts of the Treasury to induce compliance in that regard, prosecuted with such insistence as international courtesy would permit, having proved unavailing.

I am moved to advert to the absence of any controversy between the parties to the transaction touching either the obligation to pay or the amount to be paid, because in the discussion which has taken place the arrangement entered into is frequently referred to as a "settlement." A settlement implies ordinarily a dispute, usually involving mutual concessions respecting reciprocal demands. The term is often used to signify an arrangement entered into by a bankrupt or involved debtor with his creditor or creditors by which he is excused from paying all that he owes, though such a transaction is more appropriately referred to as a composition. Neither the one nor the other condition justifying the use of the term is present here. There is, as stated, no controversy, and there never has been any controversy, touching the debt due from Great Britain that might be the basis of a settlement. Neither is she a bankrupt nation, or so involved as to be threatened with bankruptcy. She would deeply resent any intimation of insolvency or near insolvency.

The Foreign Debt Commission, which came into existence by virtue of the act approved February 9, 1922, and authorized thereby to convert, refund, and extend the time of payment of the loans made as heretofore stated, was by its terms denied any authority to accept bonds bearing less than 4¼ per cent per annum—assumed to be about the average rate we pay on the money loaned—or maturing later than June 15, 1947, within which period, as stated, the bonds through the sale of which the funds loaned were realized will fall due. It agreed, however, in substance, tentatively, and subject to the approval of Congress, as the British representatives understood perfectly, that the United States would accept the bonds of Great Britain due in 62 years, bearing 3 per cent interest for the first 10 years and 3½ per cent thereafter. Congress is now asked to approve this arrangement.

It is a plain misnomer to denominate such a transaction as a settlement. It should be recognized for what it is, namely, a proposal to abate from the amount due us, concerning which there is and can be no dispute, substantially the equivalent of 1 per cent per annum on $4,600,000,000, or $46,000,000 annually. We must exact of the taxpayers of America an amount sufficient to pay the accruing interest on Liberty bonds at 4¼ per cent and over, and accept from Great Britain, on an equal amount of her bonds, interest at 3 and 3½ per cent—a plain gift to her of nearly $50,000,000 yearly.

In that aspect of the case—and no other view of the transaction can be taken—the highly eulogistic phrases of the message of the President commending the adjustment to Congress, in which he extols the virtue of the debtor nation entering into it in thus formally recognizing its obligation on account and arranging for the payment of sums borrowed by it, however vast, as an example to the world, seems strangely out of place.

It is a recommitment—

He says—

of the English-speaking world to the validity of contract.

It can not be unseemly to say it—and it is too important to be omitted, the failure of the British undertaking would have spread political and economic discouragement throughout the world, and general repudiation would have likely followed in its wake. But here is kept faith—willingly kept, let it be recorded—and a covenant of peace no less effective than it would be if joint British and American opposition to war were expressly agreed upon. It is a covenant of peace and recuperation, of respect and cooperation. It is a new element of financial and economic stabilization, when the world is sadly needing a reminder of the ways of peace. It is an example of encouragement and inspiration, when the world is staggering in discouragement and bowed with the sorrows of wars that were and fears of wars which humanity is praying may be avoided.

He adds—

"It is a recommitment of the English-speaking world to the validity of contract."

One is tempted to believe that the President was speaking ironically. The contract called for bonds bearing the same rate of interest and maturing contemporaneously with those by the sale of which the money which passed was procured. Nearly five years had elapsed since that contract was entered into without compliance with its terms. Some arrangement less onerous was sought; and there is no pretense that the one thus tentatively entered into is not more favorable to the debtor and less so to our Government. But if the observance were strict, why should it evoke praise? Is it not expected of every nation, as of every individual, that it will make provision to pay its debts, and particularly those debts incurred by borrowing? Would it not be ignominious, as well as disastrous, not to do so, or at least to exhaust its every resource in order to make payment according to its promise?

Perhaps, though, this exordium was intended to spur other nations to adjust their indebtedness to us. If so, it is as likely to offend their sensibilities, intensified by their distress. France, at least, appears to require no admonition. A highly honorable editorial recently appeared in one of the Paris papers, from which I quote as follows:

What Frenchman did not experience a painful feeling during the last conference at Paris, and even for several years back, when the question of the interallied debts was being considered, at seeing France in the rather shabby position of a debtor who seeks to obtain a quittance from his creditors?

We may say that all the costs of the war ought to be pooled and that Great Britain entered the war on her own interest, in order to prevent Germany from establishing herself at Antwerp and Calais. But it remains true, nevertheless, that no agreement to pool war costs binds either Great Britain or America, or that we owe 11,000,000,000 of marks to the one and 14,000,000,000 to the other—25,000,000,000 in all—representing in round figures, 75,000,000,000 of our present paper francs.

However enormous this foreign debt may be, however difficult it may seem to us to begin to pay it, especially after having advanced 100,000,000,000 of our paper francs on Germany's account to our sufferers in the north and our war pensioners, we must face this duty, cost what it will, if we wish to restore our credit and see the franc rise again in value. This liberation from our burdens once accomplished, our financial horizon will clear, confidence in our credit will be greater than ever, our good name will no longer have anything to fear from the maneuvers of stock jobbers; the economic readjustment which will result from this situation will be of benefit to all.

Let us not deceive ourselves concerning the transaction with respect to which our approval is sought. It is a remission of a part of the debt due us from Great Britain, and nothing else. No honeyed words can make it anything else.

The armistice had hardly been signed when an agitation began on both sides of the Atlantic for the cancellation of the debt due to the United States from its allies. Certain it is that before the credits which had been established in this country by virtue of the loans had been exhausted by any nation the movement was in full swing. High-minded and farseeing citizens of our country advocated that course, some upon sentimental, others upon economic grounds; others, whose selfish interest could not be concealed, joined in the effort to release our foreign debts, and still others, who yielded to the persistent propaganda, inclined by predilection and habit to accept views that are popular in or propagated by Great Britain.

Despite repeated rebuffs the foreign offices of the debtor nations continued to regard the question as an open one. President Wilson and his Secretaries of the Treasury flatly told the representatives of the powers who cautiously introduced the subject that it was not even to be discussed. The arguments in favor of the remission of the debt fell flat. They made no impression upon either the Democratic or the Republican administration and but little upon the country. When the unyielding attitude of our Government became known a torrent of abuse was heaped upon our people by those whom they had befriended. Uncle Sam was very profusely portrayed as Shylock by a ribald press, mindless of the fact that Shylock exacted an unconscionable bargain when he made the loan, while our Government, in addition to the gigantic efforts it was making on its own account to win the war, generously offered to lend great sums to its allies at exactly the rate of interest it was itself obliged to pay without any charge whatever on account of the expense incident to finding the money. It might be added that even if there were any other source from which their needs could be supplied, no such favorable terms could be secured in any market. Only a short time before our Government thus came to their aid, the joint bonds of Great Britain and France, secured by collateral bearing 5 per cent interest, were negotiated at no more than par in New York. Indeed, well-authenticated reports are to the effect that they were underwritten at 95.

The irresponsible emanations of malicious private journals may be forgotten, but the implied criticism of the Balfour letter is of another character. That official communication advised the continental allies, to whom Great Britain had made advances, that she was generously disposed to forgive all debts owing to her, aggregating some $17,000,000,000; but, alas, she was unable to do so because the United States would not release her a paltry $4,500,000,000, and so she was obliged to insist upon their settling. Obviously the effect, if not the purpose, of this letter was to excite the ill will of continental Europe against the United States. An analysis of the proposition robs it of much of its seeming generosity. Of the $17,000,000,000 which Great Britain thus offered to forego, $9,750,000,000 is the amount of her share of the reparation due from Germany, the collection of which is remotely problematical, our claim for reparation from Germany having already been waived. That leaves $7,250,000,000 of actual loans which she offered to forgive. But she would be released by the United States to the extent of $4,500,000,000, making her net sacrifice but $2,750,000,000. Our Government could not remit the debt due from Great Britain without according like treatment to our other allies, signifying a sacrifice upon our part of $10,500,000,000 as against a net sacrifice on her part of about one-fourth that sum.

Our Government was unshaken alike by argument and vilification, but now it yields in the policy to which it has heretofore steadily adhered and forgives, not all, but a portion of the debt due from one of our late allies—not a large portion relatively, it is true, but a tremendous sum nevertheless, as heretofore pointed out.

Upon what consideration? Assurance is given that the representatives of Great Britain conveyed the intimation to the commission, or perhaps desired to have it understood, that she could not, by reason of the sacrifices made in the war and her internal problems more or less intimately associated therewith, pay more than 3 or, at most, 3½ per cent. Of course if Great Britain can not pay more, if that is the limit of her capacity, if upon inquiry it is found that she is unable to redeem her obligations, there is no course open to us but to accept the agreement evidencing what she believes she can pay.

For my part, I have no disposition to force her into any such humiliating admission. If we are to act, however, upon any such suggestion, emanating from any source, we should be supplied with the information from which that conclusion is to be drawn. It will require some very accurate calculation to demonstrate that having the ability to pay $161,000,000 a year (3½ per cent on $4,600,000,000) she can not pay $195,500,000 (4¼ per cent on $4,600,000,000). She is paying $500,000,000 a year as doles to her unemployed. Ours, who get no such gratuities, are in effect to be taxed to help make up those which go to her idle. For, though our laborers may not pay any great sum into the Federal Treasury as income taxes, no one can doubt that they contribute a very substantial part of that exacted of those who do and who pass the burden along to the ultimate consumer in the form of increased prices of the commodities which they must buy.

It does not satisfy me to be told that the people of England are paying burdensome taxes—so are we; nor to be told that they are paying higher taxes than the people of any other country. Ought we to join them in their effort to retrench at our expense? Recently they gave an effective range to the great guns of their battleships of 25 miles as against 20 miles, by elevating their muzzles, involving important changes in the construction of the vessels upon which such guns are mounted. Information is not at hand as to the cost of this resurgence of the desire to remain mistress of the seas, but our Government is called upon to expend $60,000,000 to remodel our ships to meet the competition she has thus renewed in violation of the spirit of the treaties entered into at the Washington conference. Her budget discloses that she is expending £10,000,000, approximately $50,000,000, annually to maintain her authority over the mandated territory which she acquired as a result of the war, including Mesopotamia, Palestine, the former German-African colonies, and the Pacific islands south of the Equator, her share of those—awarded to her pursuant to the secret treaty with Japan of which she inadvertently omitted to advise us when we entered the war. An imperialistic policy comes high. A royal family is an expensive affair, but just why should the people of the United States be called upon to help support either? I decline to give this arrangement my sanction upon the ground that Great Britain can do no more.

Lily isles that o'erlace the sea—

The statement was made in one of our most reliable periodicals within the current month that the drink bill of that country would pay off the debt she owes us in 25 years. This reference is not to be considered as a suggestion that Great Britain embrace the policy of prohibition. It simply means that for aught I know the payment of the debt signfies only the abandonment of some luxuries on the part of her people, such as in their straitened circumstances they even now enjoy.

Considering what Great Britain is spending on her territorial acquisitions growing out of the war, I was prompted to advert to what she got out of it as contrasted with what we got. But that feature having been presented on yesterday in his usual masterly way by the Senator from Idaho, I forbear. I can not resist, however, the impulse to descant upon the tragic failure of most of the high hopes with which our country entered the war. It is true we "licked the Kaiser." The menace of his vaulting ambition was effectually laid. But to what extent has there been realized the stirring conviction animating our soldiers as they went forth, and comforting their mothers, that they were engaging in a war to end war? How far did they succeed in making the world safe for democracy, or in assuring the reign of justice among nations? If selfishness and ambition ran riot at the Peace Conference, as they did, if the old order under which the spoils were distributed among the victors remained dominant, as has been fully disclosed, was Great Britain guiltless? It was her Prime Minister who demanded of Germany, regardless of the stipulations of the armistice, such reparations terms as her own economists and statesmen now concede to be impossible, with the result that industrial and financial chaos abroad, reflected in widespread and protracted industrial depression in this country, has followed and another general European war is threatened.

Notwithstanding the elevated state of mind, the intense ardor of the American people, the generous sentiment prevailing toward their allies at the time the loans in question were contracted, the exalted expectations they cherished touching the great adventure upon which they had entered, no one even proposed that any gifts of money should be made those nations associated with us in it, or that the loans which they solicited should be made on terms more generous than those recited in the acts by authority of which they were made. In the light of what was achieved, it is strange that anyone should now propose to liberalize them.

It is said that Great Britain was fighting our battles for three years before we went into the war. I can not accept that view. The occasion referred to is not the first time England became immediately involved in war arising out of continental controversies. History discloses that she becomes almost inevitably embroiled in war between any two of the leading nations on the Continent. It is the exception rather than the rule that she is able to maintain a neutral position in such a contest. Conceding that the madman who precipitated the awful conflict aimed at world domination—a very just assumption—the peril of Great Britain was immediate, ours remote. A great ocean lay between us and his base. His guns, once the channel ports had been occupied, might make comparatively safe the passage over the Straits of Dover of an invading army. Anticipating such a possibility, or others no less obvious and alarming, Great Britain had entered into an alliance with France by which she was obligated to come to the aid of that country in the event of an attack by Germany. Upon like considerations she had guaranteed the independence of Belgium. Prudence no less than her solemn treaties impelled her to the course she took. Moreover, the triumph of Germany meant the success of the Mittel Europa project of the Kaiser and the Berlin-to-Bagdad scheme, by which an ambitious rival and potential enemy would be athwart her direct route to India. Great Britain was fighting her own battles, not ours.

Conceding, I say, that we would have been justified at the outset of the war in indulging the belief that the Kaiser dreamed of the time when, like Alexander, he would sigh for other worlds to conquer, such a supposition would afford a sorry basis for a declaration of war upon him. Had Germany entered France directly instead of by way of Belgium, the plight of Great Britain would not have been essentially different, but who would assert that in that event the Government of the United States would discharge its duty to its people and to the world by letting loose its dogs of war? It is safe to say that no American citizen ever contemplated the possibility of his Government taking any such step in such a contingency.

After the event—some time after the event—in captious political criticism, it was asserted that we should have gone in when Belgium was invaded; but no responsible individual, either in or out of public life, either advocated or suggested that course at the time, a course that would have been madly quixotic.

In extenuation of the generosity displayed in this so-called settlement at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States, it is said that the money was all spent in this country for commodities at high prices and—a common error—for war materials. In the first place, much of it went to pay for the products that normally go to Europe to meet the necessities and demands of the civil population and that were intended for civil and not military use, the allied governments themselves becoming the purchasers, instead of their individual citizens, in accordance with the policy which it was found necessary to institute for the conservation of the limited supply. In the second place, nearly everything purchased was secured at prices regulated and controlled by our Government. And thereon hangs a tale, reference to which would be ungracious under other circumstances and but for the imputation to which our country and its people have been so repeatedly subjected of ungenerous conduct toward our allies and an avaricious desire to profit unduly by reason of their necessities. Notwithstanding we were giving them an opportunity to buy in this country at the same figure which our Government fixed as the price of what it would pay for the commodities it required, we were paying in Great Britain and France the highest prices for everything we bought there, often in an uncontrolled market. Some warm exchanges took place between our authorities and those of Great Britain over the condition. Jute will serve for illustration. Our demands for that commodity, supplied chiefly by India, both for military and civil use, were enormous. The price being exacted of us was, in the opinion of the War Industries Board, exorbitant. Appeals to the British Government brought only the indifferent reply that the Imperial Government could not constrain the Government of India. Our Government then, in effect, threatened to shut off the supply of silver for the use of India under the Pittman Act, thus discrediting the Indian currency, and buy jute with the cheapened silver rupees. In due course the Indian Government came through. The Imperial Government, it appeared, could persuade if it could not constrain the colonial administration. It is not proposed to offset the concessions asked of us with respect to the loans made to the Allies, that they should refund any part of the vast sums we paid them for service and supplies, often at outrageously exorbitant prices. In effect we are asked to excuse them from paying for supplies purchased in this country, while they hold and have no disposition to refund the cash we paid them.

It is advanced further that we shall be able to refund our bonds as they fall due on terms at least as favorable as those accorded by the proposed adjustment with Great Britain.

We heard the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] a few moments ago that we shall be able easily to refund our bonds at a rate of interest not higher than that we are now to exact of Great Britain. I have very great respect for the opinion of the Senator from Oklahoma with regard to any of these questions, but I say in passing that I conferred only a day or two ago with an authority in finance having no superior in this country who expressed quite a contrary view.

Perhaps we may, but why should we assume the risk? If it is asserted that there is none, let me remind those entertaining such optimistic views that had anyone in 1910 predicted that within 10 years the United States would be paying on its loans more than 4 per cent, he would have been set down as rattle-brained. Who shall say what vicissitudes may overtake our country affecting its credit or what world influences may depress the market for its securities or increase the rate of interest at which they must be put out? The very agreement we are asked to ratify contemplates such a contingency and provides that Great Britain may go into the market whenever our bonds are purchasable there at a discount, acquire them under such conditions, and apply them instead of cash to the redemption of her bonds issued pursuant to the adjustment made by the commission now before us.

I am not impressed with the stabilization argument so forcibly presented on yesterday by the able senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Undoubtedly any adjustment of our foreign loans would tend to the stabilization of markets. For four years the agitation for the cancellation of these loans has been in progress. Whether payment of the stupendous sums represented by them will or will not be exacted is a question which can not fail to have a profound effect upon world finance and industry. In a greater or less degree any uncertainty as to the amount which must be paid, if any is to be paid, is a disturbing factor. I agree that the settlement proposed will be stabilizing in its effect. So would an agreement by which we are to accept half the amount due or one-fourth or to forgive the debt altogether. It is quite likely that such a course would stimulate industry throughout the world. A wealthy manufacturer would stimulate his business by forgiving all his customers their debts to him. They would then be in a position to make other and much more than the normal demands for his products. Possibly he might be obliged to enlarge his factory to meet the increased trade that would result. The much to be desired stabilization would ensue upon the adjustment of the debt strictly in accordance with the terms of the contract under which it was incurred as it will upon the terms proposed. Of course, if Great Britain will not perform as she agreed that is the end of the matter. We shall in that case have neither stabilization nor interest. But I can not believe that she will not perform, or at least would not have performed. She has too much at stake. Her credit gone—why expatiate? She descends from the high station she has held through the centuries. It is unthinkable to my mind that she would not perform.

It is scarcely necessary to notice the oft-repeated remark that we shall never get as much from any of our other debtors, or the same idea conveyed by the remark, "I shall be glad if we get as much from our other debtors." So shall I. We shall deal with each of them as the conditions may seem to justify. To one of them we owe something for our existence as a Nation. To another we may possibly have a thought that it is an infant Republic we aided in coming into being, and not a proud nation that has stood the storms of the centuries, upon whose dominions the sun never sets, whose capital is the financial center of the world.

I can find no valid reason for abating anything in the instant case from what is justly due us.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	George	McKinley	Sheppard
Bayard	Gerry	McLean	Shortridge
Borah	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Brookhart	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Calder	Harreld	Nelson	Stanley
Cameron	Harris	New	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	Nicholson	Sutherland
Colt	Heflin	Norris	Swanson
Couzens	Hitchcock	Oddie	Townsend
Culberson	Johnson	Overman	Underwood
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Wadsworth
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Kellogg	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Ladd	Pomerene	Warren
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell	Watson
Fletcher	Lodge	Reed, Mo.	Weller
France	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Robinson	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was on page 2, line 5, after the name "United States" to strike out the words "recommended by the commission and approved by the President, as set forth by him in a message presented to Congress on February 7, 1923, as contained in House Document Numbered 554, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session"; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the settlement of indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I shall speak only briefly upon this subject. I expect to vote for this bill and I shall vote for it whole-heartedly. I can not agree with my brethren who seem to take the position that the United States is making very great sacrifices by this adjustment of the debt owing by the British Empire to the United States of America. I recognize the fact that at the time we entered the World War and made the several loans to the British Empire as well as to others of our allies there was a general understanding that the governments to which the loans were made should pay to the United States Government the same rate of interest which we were compelled to pay when our bonds were issued; but I think the entire correspondence between the several governments demonstrates conclusively that the obligations, whatever they were and whatever their form, were to be readjusted later. There can not, in my judgment, be any difference of opinion upon that subject.

At the time our bonds were marketed they were so drawn as to mature in comparatively short terms, and with the privilege upon our part to call in as many of the bonds at any time as we were able to. Why was that done? Because, I dare say, it was in the mind of everyone connected with both the executive and legislative departments of the Government that after the World War was ended, and we had resumed normal conditions, those bonds could be, and would be, refunded at a lesser rate of interest.

I was a good deal surprised, if I may use that word, on yesterday when the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] called attention to the large amount of property and money which the Allies had exacted from the German Empire, and then suggested under such circumstances we ought to exact somewhat harder terms from Great Britain and our other allies. I submit this proposition: The yardstick by which the liability of an enemy country is measured by the victorious country is not the yardstick we should apply when it comes to measuring the liabilities of one ally to another, both of whom have been engaged in a common enterprise.

Senators, what is the situation with regard to these debts? Before we got into the World War Great Britain established gold credits in this country, as I am informed, to the amount of $4,000,000,000. That money was expended amongst our merchants and manufacturers for war and other necessary supplies. Then the World War was the enterprise of our allies against Germany. Later on we declared war, and then it became the joint enterprise of ourselves and our allies. After we got into the war, were we prepared to go to the front? Were our Army and Navy equipped? No. Then, what could we do in that common enterprise? We could do just one thing in the early days of the war, and that was to assist our allies with funds. We did not stop at that time to determine when our allies should pay these loans or the rate of interest they should bear. Why? Because it was common knowledge that we could not do it at that time with satisfaction to either party to the transaction.

After we got into the war we loaned Great Britain approximately four billions of money. But that was not all we did. We said to Great Britain, as we said to the other allies: "We will loan you this money, but you must spend it in the United States." Did the American Government then anticipate the vast profits our people would make out of the expenditure of this money loaned by us to Great Britain and France and other nations in the war, which was ours as well as theirs?

Why, Senators, just think of it! We loaned to Great Britain four billions of money. It was expended here. Our merchants and manufacturers waxed rich. I shall not pause to speak of the very large percentage of profits they made. That is a matter of common knowledge; but more, because we could not otherwise control conditions, as we then thought, we concluded to levy large income and excess-profits taxes so that our Government could reach some of these exorbitant profits which were made out of our Government and our allies. If the World War had been their war alone, ours would have been a different problem. It was not their war; it was ours as well—ours in defense of our Government as well as in defense of the Governments of Great Britain, Belgium, France, and Italy, aye, in defense of the civilization of the world.

We are now the creditor nation of the world. After our people have made these vast profits and after we have taken a portion of them for revenue purposes are we to insist upon a rate of interest which every Senator must believe will be in excess of prevailing rates of interest a few years hence? That is the question. We are interested in the economic and financial condition of the world as well, and this is the first step toward the readjustment of international finances.

I do not think the American people want us to insist upon a rate of interest whereby we can make an undue profit out of the loans which we made to our allies.

Our national debt to-day is twenty-two billions plus. The national debt of Great Britain is about thirty-eight billions. Our national per capita indebtedness is $226.35. The per capita indebtedness of the people of Great Britain is $822.54. Great Britain owes to us about $4,600,000,000 out of these $38,000,000,000. It is said that the tax rate in Great Britain is higher than it is here in our country or among any of our allies. Great Britain is our debtor. I have no brief for the British Government, but I am trying to look upon this question as I think a representative of a creditor nation should look upon it. To me it is a business proposition, nothing more and nothing less.

When has it happened that a great creditor, even in private life, in the adjustment of a debt which is owing to the creditor, does not take into consideration the financial status of the debtor himself? If we are going to insist upon payments at exorbitant rates of interest, or upon the payment of the entire debt, let us say, within the 25 years, as the law creating the debt commission requires, how is Great Britain to take care of her other obligations?

Now, let us see if we can not get a little valuable information from the consideration of our own Civil War debt.

As I recall, the initial cost of the Civil War was about $4,500,000,000. In 1865, at the close of the war, our total national debt was $2,674,815,856.76, or a per capita national debt of $76.98. In 1914, when the World War broke out, the total debt of the United States was $950,593,142, or $9.60 per capita. In 1860 our population was 31,443,321; in 1870 it was 38,558,371.

The Government of the United States when dealing with respect to our own national debt did not feel that it was justified in levying excessive rates of taxation, and so 49 years after the war closed we had only reduced our national debt from $2,674,815,856.76 to $950,593,142.

Some seem to think, with this example before us, even now we should attempt to embarrass our former allies by insisting upon an earlier payment of this debt and at a greater rate of interest.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that when this proposal of settlement was made Great Britain had in mind the fact that she must meet her other obligations quite as well, and so it was believed necessary to distribute the payment of the principal over a period of 62 years. I think, under all the circumstances, that is a pretty fair proposition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I feel like saying to the Senator that I have not heard anybody complain about the period of time within which the money is to be paid. I imagine that everybody would be quite willing to give Great Britain any reasonable time within which to pay.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the proposal has been criticized a good deal because of the length of time over which the payment is to be distributed.

Now just a word with regard to the interest.

Some years ago we sold bonds at 2 per cent. It is true, I believe, they had connected with them the circulation privilege. Some of our municipalities, I believe, have sold their bonds in years gone by at less than 4 per cent, if we take into consideration the premiums paid. Here is a very, very large debt; I submit, as a matter of common financial knowledge, the larger the obligation and the longer the period of years over which it is distributed the less is the rate of interest.

We make the rate here 3 per cent for 10 years and 3½ per cent thereafter. I shall be very sorry if within that period we do not find the general rate of interest throughout the world to be less than 3½ per cent. We can not let this debt rest as it is. Common business prudence suggests that we fix it up in some way so that we will know what and when payments will be made on principal and what the rate of interest will be. We have given to Great Britain the privilege of paying off this debt faster than she is required to pay it. On yesterday some Senator—I have forgotten who it was—made the statement that this money might be dumped in upon us, and we would have it in the Treasury, and we could not dispose of it. I do not think any Congress in the life of the Nation has ever sat which could not dispose of a surplus. With our bonds to be paid, have no fear; we shall not be embarrassed by the amount of money in our Treasury.

Mr. President, I want to repeat, in conclusion, what I said at the beginning.

I think the Debt Commission ought to be congratulated upon the work it has done. I think the adjustment will commend itself to the peoples of both nations.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, it seems to be my fate not to agree very often with my friend from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I am very sorry.

Mr. REED of Missouri. When any man proposes to pay the debts of the United States out of the profits which some war manufacturers made and put in their pockets, the proposition strikes me as unique, to say the least. We borrowed this money from the American people. We did not force this money upon Great Britain; we loaned it to her at her instant request. She spent the money in this country, and undoubtedly some American manufacturers made some money out of the transactions. How does that justify us, then, in collecting any part of those profits from the general taxpayers of America, for if we pay 4½ per cent for money which we loaned to Great Britain, we must tax the American people for that percentage. It does not come from the manufacturers who made the profits; it comes from everybody who pays a tax.

It is not a source of great satisfaction to me, if I have to pay a larger income tax in order to pay the interest which we are to lose by this transaction, to know that some steel company down in the Senator's State made a lot of profits during the war. It is not a source of great satisfaction to a farmer who has to pay a tax. All of our people, whether they pay an income tax directly or not, nevertheless help pay these taxes, for in the end they are taxes resting upon consumption, at least to a large extent. Every tax increases cost, and every man helps to pay those taxes.

If this debt is to be liquidated out of war profits, let us go and find the war profiteers and assess the debt against them. More than that, it is said this money was loaned to help us win the war. We bore our part of the war after we got in. We bore a good deal more than our part of the war financially. We have a debt of $220 per capita that was accumulated in about 18 months, and the British Isles have a debt, they say, of $800 per capita, and they have been accumulating it for 800 years, or thereabouts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The debt accumulated by England during the war amounted to more than all the expenses of maintaining England for 226 years before the war, and the bulk of her debt was incurred during the war.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; perhaps the bulk of her debt was incurred during the war, but I say that England has been accumulating her national debt for 700 or 800 years. She was heavily in debt before the war began, and Senators want to charge that all in as a part of her per capita indebtedness and balance it up against our per capita indebtedness.

As has already been shown, for a large part of this debt which she incurred in this war she holds the obligation of other countries, and they will be canceled out of the payment of those obligations, for you may trust it to Great Britain to collect her debts. More than that, is any account to be taken of the fact that she has gathered in a territory so vast that if she were to pay for it she would have to pay more than her entire war indebtedness?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. FRANCE. In connection with what the Senator has said, I saw a statement the other day to the effect that the former German-African colonies now held by Great Britain were probably worth approximately $17,000,000,000, embracing, as they do, a territory of about one-third of the area of the United States—a territory largely undeveloped and containing vast potential sources of wealth.

Mr. REED of Missouri. More than that. You figure the per capita indebtedness of the British Empire, in effect, against the inhabitants of the British Isles; you take the entire debt which has been accumulated by the central government and divide it among the 38,000,000 or 40,000,000 people of the British Isles. You utterly fail to take into account the hundreds of millions of people who inhabit the British Empire and who can be taxed by Great Britain if she will. If she does not tax them directly, she taxes them indirectly by exacting and taking over to herself trade advantages which the United States does not enjoy. If she has seen fit to accumulate a debt in order that she may be mistress of the seas and monarch of one-fourth of the land of the globe, I do not propose, as far as I am concerned, to grow sympathetic and impose burdens upon American taxpayers on that account.

Again, suppose there were some profits made by people in this country out of goods sold and paid for with this money; I repeat what I said on yesterday, at that very time Great Britain was buying with her own moneys some $3,000,000,000 worth of goods in this market, because it was the cheapest place she could buy, and if she bought $3,000,000,000 worth voluntarily, that is a complete demonstration that she paid no more than the market price in the world for those goods which she paid for with the money she obtained from our Federal Treasury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator may not have been in the Chamber when I discussed that matter. I called attention to the fact that she paid less than she would have been obliged to pay in the markets of the world, because prices here were controlled by the Government, and she bought at Government prices.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thank the Senator. I heard that part of his speech, but I have not enlarged upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana does not mean that the prices of the great bulk of her purchases in the United States were controlled by our Government?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do. Take wheat, for instance, or steel. She bought copper at controlled prices.

Mr. SMOOT. At about what—25 cents a pound?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Twenty-three and a half cents a pound, when the market price was 35 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the list of the goods England purchased from us, if the Senator will look at it. Was the price of cotton agreed upon?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not believe there was any control of the price of cotton at any time.

Mr. SMOOT. A billion six hundred million dollars' worth of that was bought.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have instanced steel; I have instanced wheat; I have instanced copper. Those represent great purchases.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Montana does not object, I will call attention to the items, and I think the Senator from Montana himself will admit, after looking at the items, that his statement ought to be modified. I put this in the RECORD in my speech on Wednesday.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would be very glad to be corrected if I was wrong. I stated that the prices of most of the things she bought were Government controlled.

Mr. SMOOT. That means that the prices of over half of them were controlled, and I simply rose to correct that statement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will be glad to have the Senator put the items in.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I wish to say that during that time the cotton spinners of the United States paid the same price for their cotton the British spinners paid. After all, they got their cotton as cheaply as they could get it anywhere in the world

Mr. SMOOT. Nobody has denied that; but the price was not controlled by the United States Government.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Whether it was controlled or not, we get back to this, then, that they paid no more than the market price in the world for anything. They paid no more than our people paid for anything. The question of the excess profits exacted from them, then, disappears from this case, and the whole argument based upon it falls.

Mr. SMOOT. I admit what the Senator says in relation to them paying the market price. I will go even further than the Senator did, and say that the reason they bought the goods in the United States was, primarily, because they could buy them cheaper here, and the other great reason was that they could not get them anywhere else in the world.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Two very good reasons.

Mr. SMOOT. I will go further than the Senator went. But I rose to say that the prices of the bulk of the purchases which make up the $7,219,408,669.94 were not controlled. The prices were not controlled in a majority of the cases.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Has the Senator a statement of the things that were sold?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator allow me to glance over it?

Mr. SMOOT. Here is the statement of every purchase made by England.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let us see about this robbery, even by the robber barons of our country, for which we are expected to attack the American people—if we had any robber barons.

According to this statement, after we began to make loans to England we sold of cereals $1,375,379,343. That figure, to my mind, is astonishingly low, but let me treat it as accurate.

Mr. SMOOT. That includes not only wheat but all cereals sold at the time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the figures are the figures of the Government. Every exportation of goods during the war was reported to the Government, to whom sent, and the price at which sold. That was the requirement made by the Government upon every exporter. The statement is a compilation of the purchases made by England.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, what happened in regard to wheat? We did regulate the price of wheat. We sold and delivered to our allies wheat of the finest grade at $2 and, I think, later at $2.26 a bushel. That same character of wheat purchased in Europe at that time from European sources was bringing $4 and $4.50 a bushel. So they obtained the wheat in America for substantially one-half the price it probably or might have gone to, and had that much advantage over the world market. The Senator said this figure is not confined to wheat. Every man knows that the reduction in the price of wheat affected the price of every other cereal, and necessarily so. I think no one will deny that. So that upon the farm products usually descended the effect of these regulated prices.

Let us turn to the question of meats. Everybody knows that the Food Administration called in the great packers of the country and, after negotiation with them, the prices of meats were fixed. They even went to the extent of undertaking to fix the prices of pork based upon the number of bushels of corn it took to make 100 pounds of pork. They did the same thing with reference to cattle. So that our Food Administration—and I do not pause to criticize it—in its efforts to keep down the prices to the American people, at the same time kept down the prices to the governmental consumers who were purchasing from us, to wit, our allies in the war. I do not find meat in the schedule to which the Senator called my attention.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will find foodstuffs.

Mr. REED of Missouri. "Other supplies" might include it and might not. Now, what about transportation and shipping? They paid to us for transportation and shipping $48,890,000, according to the statement. What did we pay to them? We paid to Great Britain alone, I will not say for transportation and shipping alone—indeed, I am certain it was not for that alone, but that was a large item entering into the total—$394,799,000. Did they lose any money on that transaction? The rates they charged us for transporting our soldiers and our munitions were war rates and were undoubtedly as high as were the prices of anything we sold to them.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the only reason why I rose was so that the RECORD might be correct as to our exportations and the purchases made by England. I might add also that if it had not been for our loans to England, England could not have purchased those goods. It would have been an impossibility for her to do it at all. Therefore our people would not have had the market.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not know whether the Senator is correct in that or not.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows England did not have that amount of gold. The Senator knows $7,000,000,000 is more than half of the gold in the world to-day. The Senator knows that Great Britain did not have $1,000,000,000 worth of gold when she entered the war.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, I have heard that old argument before, and I am surprised at the Senator repeating it, about there not being enough gold. Somebody sits down and adds up all the gold there is in the world and then adds up the debts and finds that the debts are about a thousand times as much as the gold and then asks, "How are we ever going to be able to pay the debt?" He seems to forget that the same gold dollar may pay 100 debts in one day.

Mr. SMOOT. They could not have paid us if we had not advanced the money to them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I imagine England would have been able to get something; but if she had not, then it is a certainty that she would have gone to the wall in the war, and our support was of such a nature as to be vital to her, and therefore all the more reason why she should willingly pay what she owes.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. I agree with the Senator that she would have gone to the wall. No matter whether we loaned her the money or not or whether it was twice that amount, unless we had sent our men across the water England and France would have gone to the wall. There is no doubt about that, in my opinion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. There is added in the $7,000,000,000 an item of $337,000,000 of interest and $353,000,000 of maturities. There is also added $16,000,000 of relief. There is added $261,000,000 of silver. An item of food for northern Russia, $7,000,000, is added. So when we eliminate the items of which I have just spoken the proportion of the cereals and of controlled products which we sold to Great Britain is a very considerable percentage of the total.

Mr. SMOOT. Quite a considerable percentage; but I want to say to the Senator that the Russian relief was not our relief. That was the amount of purchases England made from us for her share of the relief that went to Russia.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I suppose the Senator will not claim that we gouged her in the silver that was sent to India?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not said that we gouged her on anything. I will say to the Senator, so far as the silver was concerned, that in the past until the time of the war she virtually controlled the trade of India because of purchasing her silver in the market at 50 cents an ounce and charging it to India at $1.27 an ounce.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly. That is the way Great Britain deals.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, with India.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; with her subject peoples. She buys silver at 50 cents and turns it over to them at $1.27 and makes them take it, but when we deal with her we ought to cut down our account below what it really is!

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is wrong when he makes the statement that she makes them take it The Senator knows that in India they do not want paper money. It is silver money that they want, and they have very little gold.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Why does she not turn over to her subject people 50-cent silver at 50 cents? The Senator said she does not make them take it. I say she makes them take it because she is the Government and because there is a British bayonet, either actually or figuratively, pressed against the back of every inhabitant of India.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I am not going into that question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Of course not. I am obliged to the Senator for an example of the way Great Britain settles, not with her debtors, but with her subject people. "We will buy in the markets of the United States silver at 50 cents and we will make you take it or we will turn it over to you and impose it upon you at 127 cents." Ergo: We ought to be very merciful to England and remit part of her debt owing to us.

That is not the only transaction that Great Britain conducts in that way. Think of the spectacle. She took a mandate over the oil lands in Turkey and, as I understand, all of the mandates provided that the property should be held in trust and all nations should have similar rights. But I am told that the representatives of the successors of our friend Rockefeller, whose name has been so often used, went over there to undertake to start drilling for oil and were warned off the premises. England has that oil and England will keep it until the crack of doom and she will sell it like she sells the silver for 140 per cent profit. So, Mr. President, I think we may dismiss this question of a large profit.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah if $200,000,000 of silver which we turned over to England is included?

Mr. SMOOT. Not a dollar of it is included in the settlement.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I meant included in the Government-controlled commodities.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that was Government-controlled, was it not?

Mr. SMOOT. The silver was Government-controlled.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; that is to say, with the market price of silver at that time running anywhere from $1.20 to $1.37½ we turned over to Great Britain 200,000,000 ounces of silver at $1 an ounce.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; according to a law which was passed by Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; that is what I mean. Great Britain had that advantage; instead of exacting from Great Britain the general world market price, we controlled the price of silver in her interest, fixing it at $1 an ounce, and let her have 200,000,000 ounces of silver at $1 an ounce.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and there were very good reasons for that.

Mr. GLASS. May I inquire would the Senator have had us make a profit out of our ally with whom we were then engaged in a common war?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I make no complaint whatever of the transaction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am now yielding to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I make no complaint whatever about the transaction to which I have referred; it was perfectly proper; but I now object to an argument based upon the proposition that we profiteered out of England and therefore we ought to yield something of the rate of interest that she promised to pay us.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate nor of the Senator from Missouri to go into the silver question, but the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] knows exactly why England was allowed to have that amount of silver; and the Senator also knows that if it had not been done the West would not have been receiving a dollar an ounce for its silver to-day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah understands that the arrangement was entirely satisfactory to me; it was honorable to both sides; I would not have had it otherwise; but I can not sit here in silence and hear our country traduced as having been profiteering at the expense of our allies and exacting from them exorbitant prices for the products which they bought, when, as a matter of fact, we controlled the prices of our commodities in their interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, we controlled some of them; nobody doubts that, and I never made a statement to the contrary. Simply for the RECORD I made a statement that the record will prove.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the other side of the matter is that we purchased from Great Britain during the World War enormous quantities of materials, and we bought them at World War prices. So they were buying from us products, the price of which was controlled by law or regulation or market conditions, below World War prices, while we were buying from them at full war prices.

I have only insisted—I insisted on yesterday, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], with great force, has done so to-day, and I am now merely reiterating the argument—that there is no reason in morals or in business for us to remit any part of this obligation upon the ground that the money was expended in America. That is the sole point that is now at issue. No man is complaining because our Government did not take advantage of our allies. All that we are claiming is that no advantage was taken, and that the defense offered for the bill on the ground that our manufacturers made some money is a defense without merit.

Another argument has been made here to which I wish briefly to advert. It was made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and had to do with the ability of the United States hereafter to borrow money at a low rate of interest. Senators will notice that under the terms of this bill during the first 10 years Great Britain is allowed the small rate of interest of 3 per cent, and after that is to pay 3½ per cent. So at the time when a low rate of interest will probably prevail in the world she will be paying the higher rate, whereas now that the higher rate is certainly upon us she escapes with the low rate. Accordingly, for the first 10 years she will pay 3 per cent, against our 4½ per cent, with the probability that we can not during that period refund our indebtedness at less than 4 per cent or 4¼ per cent. But after the 10 years shall have run, when, we will assume, the world will have settled down and rates of interest may go to 3 per cent, then when her 3½ per cent interest begins to accrue she will have the right to pay at will—and that implies and carries with it the right, of course, to refund—her indebtedness. So when the low rate comes she can take advantage of it. On the other hand, while the high rate exists she takes advantage of that, and we are the only party to the contract who is almost certain to be worsted in the transaction.

The credit of this Nation was the best of any country in the world, and yet our first Liberty loan of 3½ per cent we converted into 4 per cent bonds, and then converted those bonds into 4¼ per cent bonds. The second Liberty loan issued at 4 per cent was converted into 4½ per cent. Our Victory loan notes were negotiated at 4¾ per cent. So we have been obliged since we loaned out this money to raise our rates of interest and those rates of interest in part—the distinguished Senator from Virginia perhaps will remember the dates—were raised subsequent to the war, and after peace had come. I undertake to say that those who were managing the Treasury were obtaining the money at the best terms they could.

England to-day is paying 5 per cent and 5½ per cent, and Canada is paying 5 and 5½ per cent, and we are paying 4 per cent at the best. Yet gentlemen have the temerity to tell us that we will not lose by this transaction when we loan money at 3 per cent and pay from 4¼ to 4½ per cent for the identical money we have thus loaned. I am not much of a financier, but I have paid enough interest to know the difference between 3 per cent and 4¼ per cent when I have to pay it.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator probably does not get it at any such rate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I can multiply both figures by two and then approximate the rates I pay.

So let us have done with this plea that no profit was made. It is not sound. A profit was made. Our people who had to pay the 4¼ per cent interest on the bonds, the taxpayers of this country, did not make a profit; but profit was made by a lot of gentlemen who put the bonds so far down in their pockets as, to paraphrase an utterance of George Vest, the American eagle thereon could not be heard to scream.

What about the sentiment? Great Britain had her war burdens to carry and we had ours. She could not carry all of hers; she came over here and borrowed some money. They charged us for every service they could think of; they charged us, in some instances at least, for the very soil on which our soldiers stood while they were turning back the German tide. That was dollars and cents. When we objected in the committee to having turned over to Great Britain a large sum of cash while they were in default to us for interest, the Secretary of the Treasury in substance stated, "We are settling each of these transactions in cash as we go along, and when we get to the debt England will respond in like manner." He did not mean, of course, in cash, but in an equally honorable settlement. I think this is enough about war profits.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wrote to Secretary Mellon yesterday asking him to give me a statement of the amount of interest payable to the United States on account of the proposed refunding bonds to be issued by Great Britain, calculated on a basis of 4¼ per cent per annum. Secretary Mellon has sent me the figures. These ought to be interesting to Members of the Senate, and I ask permission to have them incorporated in the RECORD.

In this connection, Mr. President, I ask the reporter to include in those figures of interest payments the column showing the principal payments as shown on page 3544 of the RECORD of February 13, so that the Senate can have at a glance the identical figures showing what we would receive annually if we were paid back exactly what we pay out on these bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request preferred by the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 15, 1923.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with your request of the 14th instant I am sending herewith a table showing the annual interest payments that would be necessary if the interest rate upon the British debt was 4¼ per cent per annum.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

	Statement of amount of interest payable to the United States on account of the proposed refunding bonds to be issued by Great Britain, money at 4¼ per cent per annum.[1]	Schedule of annual principal installments to be paid on account of principal.[2]	Total interest and principal.
1	$195,500,000	$23,000,000	$218,500,000
2	194,522,500	23,000,000	217,522,500
3	193,545,000	24,000,000	217,545,000
4	192,525,000	25,000,000	217,525,000
5	191,462,500	25,000,000	216,462,500
6	190,400,000	27,000,000	217,400,000
7	189,252,500	27,000,000	216,252,500
8	188,105,000	28,000,000	216,105,000
9	186,915,000	28,000,000	214,915,000
10	185,725,000	30,000,000	215,725,000
11	184,450,000	32,000,000	216,450,000
12	183,090,000	32,000,000	215,090,000
13	181,730,000	32,000,000	213,730,000
14	180,370,000	32,000,000	212,370,000
15	179,010,000	37,000,000	216,010,000
16	177,437,500	37,000,000	214,437,500
17	175,865,000	37,000,000	212,865,000
18	174,292,500	42,000,000	216,292,500
19	172,507,500	42,000,000	214,507,500
20	170,722,500	42,000,000	212,722,500
21	168,937,500	42,000,000	210,937,500
22	167,152,500	46,000,000	213,152,500
23	165,197,500	46,000,000	211,197,500
24	163,242,500	46,000,000	209,242,500
25	161,287,500	51,000,000	212,287,500
26	159,120,000	51,000,000	210,120,000
27	156,952,500	51,000,000	207,952,500
28	154,785,000	53,000,000	207,785,000
29	152,532,500	55,000,000	207,532,500
30	150,195,000	57,000,000	207,195,000
31	147,772,500	60,000,000	207,772,500
32	145,222,500	64,000,000	209,222,500
33	142,502,500	64,000,000	206,502,500
34	139,782,500	64,000,000	203,782,500
35	137,062,500	67,000,000	204,062,500
36	134,215,000	70,000,000	204,215,000
37	131,240,000	72,000,000	203,240,000
38	128,180,000	74,000,000	202,180,000
39	125,035,000	78,000,000	203,035,000
40	121,720,000	78,000,000	199,720,000
41	118,405,000	83,000,000	201,405,000
42	114,877,500	85,000,000	199,877,500
43	111,265,000	89,000,000	200,265,000
44	107,482,500	94,000,000	201,482,500
45	103,487,500	96,000,000	199,487,500
46	99,407,500	100,000,000	199,407,500
47	95,157,500	105,000,000	200,157,500
48	90,695,000	110,000,000	200,695,000
49	86,020,000	114,000,000	200,020,000

[1] As furnished by Secretary Mellon.
[2] From page 3544, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

	Statement of amount of interest payable to the United States on account of the proposed refunding bonds to be issued by Great Britain, money at 4½ per cent per annum.	Schedule of annual principal installments to be paid on account of principal.	Total interest and principal.
50	$81,175,000	$119,000,000	$200,175,000
51	76,117,500	123,000,000	199,117,500
52	70,890,000	127,000,000	197,890,000
53	65,492,500	132,000,000	197,492,500
54	59,882,500	136,000,000	195,882,500
55	54,102,500	141,000,000	195,102,500
56	48,110,000	146,000,000	194,110,000
57	41,905,000	151,000,000	192,905,000
58	35,487,500	156,000,000	191,487,500
59	28,857,500	162,000,000	190,857,500
60	21,972,500	167,000,000	188,972,500
61	14,875,000	175,000,000	189,875,000
62	7,437,500	175,000,000	182,437,500
Total	8,172,665,000	4,600,000,000	12,772,665,000

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator give a summary of the statement?

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just going to do that.

The principal payments are made for the 62 years precisely in the manner and in exactly the same amount as in the proposal of the commission. The interest payments begin the first year with $195,500,000, and gradually decrease in exactly the same way until the sixty-second year, when the amount is $7,437,500. The total amount of interest paid during the 62 years will be $8,172,665,000. The total of principal and interest to be paid will be $12,772,665,000 instead of $11,105,965,000, as proposed by the commission, making a difference of $1,666,700,000 that will have to be met by taxation upon the American people.

Mr. President, that is all that I have to say at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Reed, Pa.
Ball	George	Lodge	Robinson
Bayard	Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard
Brookhart	Glass	McKellar	Shields
Broussard	Gooding	McKinley	Smoot
Bursum	Hale	McLean	Spencer
Calder	Harris	McNary	Stanfield
Cameron	Harrison	Moses	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Sutherland
Colt	Hitchcock	New	Swanson
Curtis	Johnson	Nicholson	Townsend
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Trammell
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Ernst	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mont
Fernald	Keyes	Phipps	Weller
Fletcher	King	Pomerene	Willis
France	Ladd	Ransdell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire if the amendment is indicated by the crossed-out lines on page 2, lines 5 to 8, inclusive?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, when this matter of the settlement of the British debt with the representatives of Great Britain was first raised I for one received it in a very sympathetic way. In the first place, I appreciated the importance of reaching a settlement, as I think everyone else has appreciated that importance. In the second place, I shared with most people the feeling that the present attitude of Great Britain toward world affairs is such as to merit substantially the approval and cooperation of the American people. I was glad to participate in the legislation which reduced the rate of interest which Great Britain was being charged from 5 per cent to 4½ per cent. I should be glad to meet any views presented by the representatives of Great Britain concerning the maturity of this loan. I think it would be a mistake for the United States to insist upon the terms of the existing obligation, which require payment within 25 years. So, when the representatives of Great Britain came to this country to discuss the matter with the American commission, I felt a natural disposition to sustain and support any settlement that could be made within reason, not only just to the people of Great Britain but even to the extent of being generous.

I appreciate the fact, frequently asserted here, that Great Britain is overtaxed. I appreciate the fact that the people of the British Isles at the present time are paying probably a higher rate of taxation than any people in the world, and I know that much of that taxation falls upon their citizens of a comparatively small income. I was, therefore, prepared to receive in a very sympathetic way any adjustment of the indebtedness which might be arrived at between our commission and their representatives which commended itself to reason and fairness.

Even after the President of the United States had presented this matter to the joint session of the Congress, I was disposed to think that I could give it my support. I did not quite view the matter as he did, as a monumental exhibition of British stability and of the high credit of Great Britain, because I knew that ever since the day of the armistice British representatives have been frequently appealing to representatives of our Government for an alleviation and a modification of the indebtedness. But I appreciated the fact that the British Government has serious problems on hand, and I was willing to solve all doubts in favor of meeting the arrangement which might be arrived at.

My first disappointment in this matter was upon ascertaining that while Great Britain had sent to this country two very able statesmen and financiers, who probably presented what was the fruit of British study in the matter, presenting it in a very able way, there was no evidence whatever that representatives of the Government of the United States had done anything to present to the British commission the equities on our side of the case. The only evidence that has gotten to the public at all is the evidence which was brought out by the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and that committee was able to secure testimony only from the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the Senator from Utah, evidently acting under some understanding with his colleagues, or with the administration, was very careful not to give to the Committee on Finance, and through them to the Senate, any real information concerning the attitude or action of the American representatives in arriving at a bargain with the British.

I find incorporated in the hearings before the Committee on Finance a very able and a very ingenious statement by the British representative, the right honorable the Chancellor of the Exchequer, at the opening meeting of the Anglo-American Debt Commission, and anyone who reads that statement must be impressed, as I have been, with the ingenuity and force with which the chancellor presented the British side of the case to the commission. After that had been incorporated in the RECORD in a prominent way, one of the members of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said, "Who replied to that statement by Mr. Baldwin, if a reply was made by anybody?"

That statement by the British chancellor called for a reply. It was the British side of the case. Our commissioners were there to present the American side of the case, but when the Senator from Wisconsin made that inquiry as to who had presented our side of the case in reply to that able argument by the British chancellor, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said, "No reply at length was made." That indicated to me that perhaps the American side of the case had not been adequately presented to the representatives of Great Britain and that we had merely accepted their statement of the case as the basis or the foundation of this proposed settlement.

There is another feature about this that I do not like, and I think it must have occured to other Americans as well. This proposition is brought before the world as an American proposition to the British Government. We first learned of it, virtually, through the papers after the British debt commission had returned to England, and it was held up before the world as our proposition to Great Britain. To me it is almost unthinkable that our representatives under the existing law should have made that proposition to the British Government, and I think there is very reasonable circumstantial evidence which indicates that in fact that was the British proposition to our representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that that is not the case.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would be glad to hear from the Senator exactly what occurred. We are all in the dark.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. If the Senator will read the hearings, they will tell him what occurred. The first proposition that was made by England was an annuity plan, virtually upon a basis of 2 per cent, as I stated before the committee. That was not considered by the commission a moment. No discussion took place on it other than for the American commissioners to simply say it was out of the question.

Next, the British commissioners made a proposition based upon their budget, and under the budget they said they could perhaps pay 2 per cent interest. That was not considered any length of time by your commission.

After discussion pro and con between the commissioners the chancellor did say that he thought he could get the Government of Great Britain to agree to pay 3 per cent—straight 3 per cent. That was not agreed to by your commission. After that the commission did say that they would submit, first to the President, and ask him to recommend to Congress, a proposition for the British to pay 3½ per cent interest per annum, the payments to be made upon the principal, beginning with $23,000,000 and ending with $175,000,000, for the length of time it would take to settle the debt. That figured out a little less than the number of years given in the statement incorporated in the RECORD the other day, of which the Senator has a copy.

That proposition was cabled to the British Government and it was not accepted by the British Government. Then further meetings were held between the representatives of Great Britain and the American commissioners, and a compromise was made whereby the interest for the first 10 years would be 3 per cent and for the balance of the time 3½ per cent. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Baldwin, and Mr. Montague Norman, the governor of the Bank of England, went home to present that proposition. They thought that it was useless to present it; they were not in a position to say that it would be accepted. They had no authority to accept it, they claimed to our commission. They arrived in England and presented it to the Premier, Mr. Bonar Law, and the council. They then wired to the British ambassador here, saying that they would accept it in principle, and when the commission was called the ambassador appeared before the commission and stated that his Government had asked as a privilege that they be allowed to pay half of the interest for the first 10 years in bonds and half of it in cash, and he gave the reasons why the English Government requested that. Your commission decided that rather than have no settlement they would grant that request, and that proposition is now before this body.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that does not greatly modify the statement I have made. The British commission went home and got the agreement of the British Government to the matter before the American Government had agreed to it, and it really comes to us as a proposition from Great Britain to the American Government, the Government of Great Britain having agreed to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no agreement. This proposition is made, and it will not ripen into an agreement unless Congress authorizes that it shall.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Naturally; but why, then, call it an American offer to Great Britain? Great Britain has agreed to it, and she is offering it to us, as a matter of fact. No matter what twist you may give to the words, the British commission agreed to it, the home Government has agreed to it, they cabled over here that they had agreed to it, and I say it is really a British proposition to us. It is uncandid to submit it to the world as an American proposition, and put the Senate of the United States in the light of repudiating it, if it does so.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know who has stated that it was an American proposition. It is a compromise between the two countries arising out of a proposition which, if agreed to by Congress, will be put into operation.

Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. GLASS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am a little curious to know what difference it makes whether this proposition originated with Great Britain or with the United States. The representatives of the two nations met together for the purpose of composing this loan, and putting it into such form that it could be refunded. So I am curious to know why the Senator emphasizes the question as to where the particular plan originated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no objection to stating. I have said, in passing, that that was one of the things which tended to check my disposition to approve this proposition. I received this, as I have stated, in a sympathetic way. I approved the idea of our coming to a just and even a generous settlement with Great Britain, but I do not like the seeming lack of candor that has been exhibited here in the attempt to foist this upon us as an American proposition which Great Britain has accepted, when I feel sure the circumstancial evidence is that it is a British proposition which is now being submitted to us.

That is not all. In his message, as has been referred to here already, the President sounded the praises of Great Britain for entering into such a generous contract as this is, which he said marked a great step in international keeping of faith. That does not appeal to me, because I find, on examining these figures, that instead of Great Britain living up to the contract she made with the United States, this settlement means a tremendous concession to Great Britain, and shows, to my mind, that she is not keeping the contract as originally drawn.

What was that contract? That contract provided that the Government of the United States was to advance a large amount of credit to certain European countries associated with us in the war, among them Great Britain, and it provided that the countries which received that credit or that cash were to reimburse the people of the United States for it, and to pay the same rate of interest the American Government had to pay in borrowing the money.

Now, an examination of the terms of the settlement shows that we are practically contributing, that we are so modifying that contract as to give up something like $1,000,000,000 of what we would be entitled to at the end of 62 years if the contract were lived up to.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Secretary of the Treasury has presented figures that show it was $1,666,700,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It may be my figures are not sufficient. But here is the way I have arrived at my conclusion: As set forth in the message of the President, the principal in December last was $4,600,000,000, the interest payments will aggregate $6,505,965,000, a total of $11,105,965,000. That is what Great Britain will pay to the United States during the 62 years if this legislation is enacted and the settlement is made and Great Britain keeps the contract—$11,105,965,000.

But under the existing contract the interest at the rate of 4¼ per cent, as we have already conceded the rate would be, during that same period of time, under the same arrangements for payment, the total amount which Great Britain would pay us would be $12,121,000,000; but instead of getting that amount, as we would under the 4¼ per cent rate of interest, we will get only $11,000,000,000, which would be a sacrifice of $1,015,035,000.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Would it not be fairer if the Senator would state that it was denominated in the bond that if the rate of interest then being paid by this Government on its obligations should be increased, the rate accordingly would be increased to the British Government? And is not the converse of that implicitly embodied in the contract—that if the rate of interest to this Government should in any given period of time be materially reduced, the British Government should have the advantage of the reduction?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think what the Senator from Virginia has said is absolutely correct; and if the commission had made such an arrangement with the representatives of Great Britain, I should have said "amen" to it absolutely. I do not doubt but what I shall be compelled finally to vote for this arrangement, but I would have been glad if the commission had made an arrangement with the people of Great Britain that we would charge them no higher rate of interest than we ourselves were compelled to pay. I would have accepted it promptly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think everybody else would have done so.

Mr. GLASS. I merely want to say that it is my considered judgment, as it is that of a great many people who are better qualified to speak than I, that we have a better arrangement than that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to mention to the Senator from Nebraska this difficulty about the arrangement he suggests: The object of the settlement is to make a complete adjustment of the debt which Great Britain owes the United States. One of the principal reasons and necessities for the settlement grows out of the fact that there is a degree of uncertainty about the rate of interest which the loan must bear under the present arrangement. If there is anything in the argument that one of the chief purposes and effects of the settlement would be to stabilize conditions, it must be apparent to any Senator that an arrangement by which the United States Government might refund its bonds at will and frequently readjust the rate of interest that Great Britain should pay would perpetuate the prevailing condition of uncertainty.

I think one of the chief benefits, if it can be said that the settlement will be beneficial, grows out of the fact that it contemplates a complete determination of that question. The question as to the amount of interest to be paid is entirely a different proposition, but my judgment is that it would be ill advised, to say the least, to bring into the settlement of this question any proposition which contemplates a readjustment of the interest rates to be paid by Great Britain at the end of 5-year periods or any other time. It is better to settle the question now, better for both of the Governments directly concerned, and certainly better calculated to bring about a stabilization of business conditions and of interest rates. No one can look into the future and determine with accuracy what interest rates on reliable government obligations will be at the end of the 10-year period. That question will be determined by events which may not be within the control of both Great Britain and the United States, and which certainly will not be within the control of either alone.

But I have the thought that if the hope of the world is to be realized, a day is coming reasonably soon when economic and political conditions will become more settled than at present, and one of the results will be a reduction of interest rates on obligations of the character involved in this discussion. The probability is, unless present conditions continue and the European governments advance more nearly to the brink of bankruptcy and ruin than where they now stand, that the interest rate at the end of a few years will be very much lower than now, and at the end of 10 years may be lower than 3½ per cent.

I also have the thought that if the debts of the governments of Europe are not adjusted and funded in some way bankruptcy menaces them all. No government that enjoys a proud history, no people who are hopeful of their future, will admit bankruptcy. But when we consider the fact that Great Brtiain now owes $38,000,000,000, that her economic condition is disturbed, that she is the one nation in Europe that is probably solvent, that her credit and her influence must stand between European civilization and financial and economic ruin, we may well regard an adjustment of the question which eliminates detailed computations as to interest, an adjustment which charges the peace-time rate of interest rather than the war-time rate of interest as one promotive of the best interests of civilization.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to add to the splendid statement made by the Senator from Arkansas that if the world should get into another war, we need not expect England to pay any part of the interest if she is involved, and I do not see how it would be possible to have a war now in Europe unless England were involved.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have great respect for the opinion of the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Arkansas, and the Senator from Utah, but this is not a matter of opinion. I may have an opinion that interest rates are going to be very much higher, and personally I am frank to say that as to that I am a pessimist. I believe we are going to have a reasonably good year this year in the United States on account of the secondary inflation in the midst of which we are now. But I believe that hereafter, probably beginning next year, we will enter into a long period of serious depression and suffering as the result of the war, and suffering from similar causes from which Europe suffers.

But the matter before us is not a matter of opinion. I may have one opinion and somebody else another opinion. We are here as the representatives of the American people. We loaned $4,600,000,000 of their money. We agreed with Great Britain and Great Britain agreed with us that she would reimburse us not only for the principal but for the interest we had to pay in borrowing the money to loan to her. Now we are asked to enter into a settlement with Great Britain which gives her arbitrarily a rate of interest of 3 per cent for the next 10 years and 3½ per cent for the succeeding 52 years, through which time no one can foresee what the rate of interest would be.

What right have we to take from the American people a thousand million dollars during the next 50 or 60 years to help Great Britain in her distress? What right have we, as is proposed in the bill, to add $340,000,000 to the loan we have already made her? We made it in war times under our war powers, and here it is proposed to give it to her in times of peace. I am sympathetic with Great Britain. I think Great Britain now is the one nation in Europe that is playing a bold and an intelligent and great part in seeking to stabilize things. But we do not represent Great Britain. We represent the American taxpayers, and I doubt whether we have any right in peace times to put upon the American taxpayer this extra thousand million dollars of taxes that he must pay.

Now, that is not all. I have prepared and I think I shall offer an amendment as follows: Strike out the language contained in lines 4 to 12, both inclusive, on page 3, and insert the following:

Interest to be payable upon the unpaid balances on December 15 and June 15 of each year at a rate which shall be the average rate of interest paid by the United States for the same year upon bonds issued by the United States since April 15, 1917, and still outstanding.

Mr. President, such a provision as that would guarantee to Great Britain as low a rate of interest as the United States can procure. It would give to Great Britain the great credit which our Government enjoys in the markets of the world. It would be a guaranty to her that, so far as the $4,600,000,000 indebtedness is concerned, she would have to pay no more interest on her bonds than we ourselves would pay. It would not only be just to Great Britain but it would be generous, because where in the world can she borrow money at the same rate at which the United States can borrow it? Mr. President, it would be just to the American taxpayer. I do not think we have any right, as I consider the matter now, in peace times to borrow money and pay a greater rate of interest on our bonds than we exact from Great Britain.

It has been said that this enormous indebtedness of Great Britain, amounting to $38,000,000,000, is such a burden that her people are sorely distressed, and doubt is raised whether Great Britain could pay us the same rate of interest that we are paying to our own citizens in the United States. Mr. President, where has Great Britain borrowed this $38,000,000,000? She has borrowed it of her own people. If she is not able to meet her obligations, let her scale down her obligations to her own people. Every nation, if it desires to preserve its credit at all, will take care of its external debts more readily than its internal debts. Great Britain is the richest country in the Old World at least. Great Britain has been the source and center of financial power in the world for centuries, and to-day the capitalists of Great Britain still own, so it is said, two-thirds of the securities and investments in different parts of the world which they owned before the World War began. So it is not complimentary to Great Britain to picture her as being in the attitude of a pauper and a repudiator. I believe that if our commissioners had done their duty in representing the equities of the American side of the case they could have induced the British commissioners to pay upon the money which we have loaned to Great Britain the same rate of interest which we pay on the money which we are borrowing from our own people. I have no objection to the provision which allows the payments to be made over a period of 62 years; I would be perfectly willing to have the time lengthened, if necessary; but I object to any increase of the amount of the debt, and I should be very sorry to be compelled to vote for a bill providing a rate of interest which I believe will be less than we ourselves will be compelled to pay during the next few years.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to have his amendment read?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let the amendment be read, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be glad to have the amendment read. It is short.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the language contained in lines 4 to 12, both inclusive, on page 3, and to insert the following:

Interest to be payable upon the unpaid balances on December 15 and June 15 of each year at a rate which shall be the average rate of interest paid by the United States for the same year upon bonds issued by the United States since April 15, 1917, and still outstanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer certain amendments to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow; that after the hour of 2 o'clock to-morrow no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the bill, nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered thereto, and that during the calendar day of to-morrow, Friday, February 16, the Senate shall reach a conclusion touching the bill and all amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. That means that not later than 12 o'clock to-morrow night the Senate must vote on the bill and amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am satisfied that a vote will be reached earlier than that, with the limitation on debate in effect; but I wonder if the Senator would consent merely to giving effect to the limitation on debate at 2 o'clock to-morrow and let the debate on the amendments run on until concluded in orderly process? I believe a limitation of 10 minutes would make certain the conclusion of debate before the expiration of the calendar day of to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I would want a statement included that the final vote upon the bill and all amendments should be on the calendar day of February 16. That would allow us to run until 12 o'clock to-morrow night.

Mr. McKELLAR. We will have to have a roll call if the agreement undertakes to fix the time for a final vote.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, as the Senator stated the proposed agreement, I think there is an error in it. I should like to have it reported as the Secretary has it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can repeat it; the Secretary has not a copy; it has not been written; I have merely stated it orally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Secretary thinks he can state the agreement proposed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; let it be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is agreed by unanimous consent that from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Friday, February 16, 1923, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations with foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922; nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto; and, further, that before an adjournment or recess on said calendar day the Senate shall vote upon the bill through its various parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was the substance of my request for unanimous consent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; I thought it was a little different.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not like to interpose an objection, but I am inclined to think I shall be compelled to do so. This is one of the most important measures of a financial nature which can possibly come before the Congress. I do not believe that the time ought to be fixed when we shall be compelled to vote upon amendments without an opportunity to explain them. Heretofore I have frequently made the same suggestion in connection with proposals for unanimous consent having in view the final disposition of bills. My judgment is that, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, if we limit the debate to 10 minutes, there will be no difficulty in disposing of this bill before 12 o'clock to-morrow night. We may be mistaken about that, however; and there is not a Senator here but who recalls instances where, after an agreement for a fixed time for voting, most important amendments have been presented, we have been required to vote on them, and no one has been permitted to make even an explanation. I submit that that does not comport with an opportunity for deliberation upon such an important matter as this.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Washington and other Senators will consent to that modification of the unanimous-consent request. I stated a moment ago that I should prefer it in that form. It will lead to the disposition of the bill long before 12 o'clock to-morrow night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, with the last clause added to the proposal for unanimous consent, I shall have to object.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, Mr. President, I modify the request so as to provide that after 2 o'clock to-morrow no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request as modified?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood, if that is agreed to, that we will continue in session until the bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have just this proviso to add to the unanimous-consent agreement:

Provided, That no list of Senators be made at the desk for recognition in violation of the rule of the Senate, and that Senators be recognized in the order of their rising and addressing the Chair.

That has become a practice here which everybody recognizes as vicious and in violation of our rule, and it ought to cease.

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator be content with that understanding without having it put into the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why not put it into the unanimous-consent agreement? Then we will be sure to have it carried out.

Mr. SMOOT. It is in the rules, and all that the Senator has to do is to call attention to them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have called attention to this matter on nearly every occasion. On three or four occasions that come to my mind now I know that Senators on this floor have not been able to speak after they had prepared to speak upon a question simply because the rule has been violated in that way, and I think it is time that the violation should cease. I have been promised by the Presiding Officer again and again that no list would be made up at the desk; the Vice President has so promised; and yet the practice has been resumed, after being suspended for a time. I think this is a good way to cut it off and make an end of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senator to understand that I have no objection at all to his request.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do understand so.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why I made the suggestion I did is because the rules themselves provide for it; and I think, now that the question has been called to the attention of the Senate, that no Presiding Officer is going to have a list made up upon the bill to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the agreement read, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement as modified.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the business of to-day the Senate will take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow, and that from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. to-morrow—calendar day of Friday, February 16, 1923—no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill H. R. 14254, the debt refunding bill, so called, nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto: Provided, That no list shall be kept at the desk giving the names of Senators and the order in which they are to be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the talk around me was such that I was prevented from hearing the agreement as to continuing in session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing in the agreement about continuing in session.

Mr. SMOOT. I made that statement, Mr. President, and I want it as a part of the agreement.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; it is worthless without it.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

And further, that on to-morrow the Senate will continue in session until the bill is finally disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement as modified? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

The unanimous-consent agreement entered into is as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the business of to-day the Senate will take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow, and that from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. to-morrow—calendar day of Friday, February 16, 1923—no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill H. R. 14254, the debt funding bill, so called, nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto, and that the Senate will continue in session until the bill is finally disposed of.

It is also agreed that during the further consideration of the bill no list shall be kept at the desk of the Presiding Officer giving names of Senators and the order in which they are to be recognized.

RECESS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 16, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 15, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for listening to our prayer, which is the best mood of our souls. In this moment we would be humble and penitent, for we are conscious of our failures. We bless Thee that Thou art a God of deliverance, hence we are not outcasts from Thy mercy. In every way may we be worthy of the best traditions of our country and enable us to promote its honor and goodness. Let our faith in Thee transcend the passing hour. Give wisdom and courage that shall declare the righteousness and integrity of free government. Help us to maintain the sanctity of Thy law, to follow the steps of Thy revealed truth, and to love Him who first loved us. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits the following personal requests which should have been submitted yesterday:

By unanimous consent—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of important business.

Mr. LINTHICUM for the day on account of death in family.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs have leave to sit during the session of the House to-day.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be permitted to sit during the session of the House to-day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean to object to the request?

Mr. DOWELL. No; I withdraw the point for the present.

Mr. DE VEYRA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the gentleman is entitled to be heard by the House, and I therefore make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Codd	Gilbert	Lampert
Ansorge	Collier	Goodykoontz	Langley
Atkeson	Connolly, Pa.	Gould	Lineberger
Barkley	Copley	Graham, Pa.	Luhring
Benham	Crowther	Griffin	McArthur
Bird	Cullen	Hardy, Colo.	McClintic
Blakeney	Dale	Hays	McSwain
Bland, Ind.	Davis, Minn.	Himes	Mansfield
Bond	Denison	Hudspeth	Mead
Bowers	Drane	Hutchinson	Michaelson
Brand	Dunbar	Johnson, Ky.	Mills
Brennan	Dupré	Johnson, S. Dak.	Montague
Briggs	Dyer	Jones, Pa.	Morin
Britten	Echols	Kahn	Mudd
Brooks, Ill.	Edmonds	Keller	Newton, Mo.
Brooks, Pa.	Fenn	Kendall	Nolan
Burdick	Fess	Kennedy	O'Brien
Cantrill	Fish	Kiess	Olpp
Carew	Focht	Kindred	Overstreet
Chandler, N. Y.	Frear	King	Park, Ga.
Chandler, Okla.	Free	Kitchin	Parker, N. Y.
Clark, Fla.	Freeman	Kleczka	Parks, Ark.
Classon	Garner	Knight	Paul
Perkins	Schall	Strong, Pa.	Volk
Rainey, Ala.	Scott, Mich.	Sullivan	Walters
Ransley	Sears	Sweet	Ward, N. C.
Reber	Slemp	Tague	Wheeler
Reed, N. Y.	Smith, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.	White, Me.
Riddick	Snell	Taylor, Colo.	Williams, Tex.
Rose	Sproul	Taylor, N. J.	Winslow
Rossdale	Stiness	Thorpe	Yates
Ryan	Stoll	Vestal	Zihlman

The SPEAKER. Three hundred Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Commissioner from the Philippine Islands is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DE VEYRA. Mr. Speaker, I am sending to the reading clerk a copy of a resolution adopted by the Sixth Philippine Legislature, first session, which I ask to be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The Resident Commissioner sends to the Clerk's desk a resolution which he asks the Clerk to read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Sixth Philippine Legislature, first session, begun and held at the city of Manila, on Monday, the 16th day of October, 1922.]

Concurrent Resolution 5, asking the Congress of the United States for authority to call and hold a constitutional convention for the Philippine Islands.

Whereas it is a principle recognized in all democracies, and especially in the political organization of the United States, that a people must be governed by its own constitution, as the legitimate and efficient form of government of the people, by the people, and for the people;

Whereas the situation of the Philippine Islands is and always will be a substantially anomalous one so long as we are not governed by a constitution approved by our representatives, our present liberties, guaranties, and institutions being but concessions of the Congress of the United States;

Whereas the Filipino people have from the beginning on opposed this anomaly and have expressed their desire to enjoy the benefits of immediate and complete independence;

Whereas the people and the Government of the United States have solemnly promised to grant such independence as soon as a stable government can be established in the Philippine Islands;

Whereas such stable government does now exist and operate in said islands, with the necessary guaranties for permanent success and security;

Whereas it is essential in order that the bonds of friendship between the people of the United States and the people of the Philippine Islands may be strengthened and the best interests of both peoples promoted and assured that the demand of the Filipino people be complied with and the solemn pledge of the American people redeemed in a speedy and satisfactory manner; and

Whereas it is the sense of this legislature that the discussion and approval by the legitimate representatives of the people of a political constitution for the Philippine Islands is an orderly and expeditious procedure for the immediate realization of our independence: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives of the Philippines concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same hereby is, requested to authorize the Philippine Legislature to provide for a general election, to be held for the purpose of selecting delegates for a constitutional convention, which shall prepare, discuss, and approve a political constitution for the independent Philippine Republic, determine with the Government of the United States what kind of relations, if any, shall in future be maintained between said Government of the United States and the government of the Philippine Islands, and, finally, provide for the election by the people of the Philippine Islands of the officials who shall have authority and perform duties under the constitution so approved and to whom the present government of the Philippine Islands shall be transferred as soon as they shall legally assume office.

The presiding officers of both houses of the legislature are hereby authorized to communicate the text of this resolution to our Resident Commissioners for presentation to the Congress of the United States.

Adopted November 29, 1922.

[SEAL.] MANUEL L. QUEZON,
President of the Senate.
MANUEL ROXAS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This resolution, which originated in the Philippine Senate, was finally adopted by the same on November 20, 1922.

[SEAL.] FERNANDO MA. GUERRERO,
Secretary of the Senate.

Finally adopted by the house of representatives on November 21, 1922.

[SEAL.] NARCISO PIMENTEL,
Acting Secretary of the House of Representatives.

WHY CONGRESS SHOULD AUTHORIZE A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Mr. DE VEYRA. Mr. Speaker, 11,000,000 people are looking forward with the greatest eagerness and hope to the action of this body on the resolution that has just been read.

The Philippine Legislature and the Filipino people consider that the holding of a constitutional convention is the next logical step to be taken in the direction of their promised complete and absolute independence.

Among Americans interested in the Philippine question their opinion is reflected with questions like these: What kind of government will the Filipinos establish when they get their independence? What kind of commercial relations do they desire to maintain with the people and Government of the United States? Are they really resolved and prepared to establish a democratic government which will guarantee to the Filipino citizen as well as to the foreigner constitutional liberty and equality under the law and to provide the nascent State with such securities as will make it safe from anarchy, class conflicts, dissolution, or invasion?

It is but natural if the American people are somewhat doubtful about the success of the future Philippine State, when they consider differences in race, customs, and traditions which separate us from you. For this reason we should be permitted to call a constitutional convention where we may clearly and unequivocally state what the Philippine republic will be.

A constitutional convention was the process of leading up to a Philippine republic that was recommended to the first Philippine mission which visited the United States, by several members of a joint committee of the American Congress, at a hearing held in Washington June 2, 1919.

At that hearing Senator CHAMBERLAIN, of Oregon, one of the committee members, thought the Philippine Legislature could call a constitutional convention and frame a constitution to be submitted to the American Congress without the authority of the latter. President Harding, then Senator Harding, one of the committee, thought such action might possibly savor of defiance of the United States, indicating he thought it would be better, whether necessary or not, to get the approval of Congress before calling the convention to frame a constitution. This policy is the one which has been followed by the Philippine Legislature in adopting the resolution which the Clerk has just read.

THE VITAL FEATURES OF THE PHILIPPINE QUESTION.

In presenting this resolution I ask the most serious attention of this House to certain pivotal facts that can not much longer be ignored:

1. The Philippine Islands, in the language of the American Declaration of Independence, of right ought to be a free and independent State.

2. The people of these islands ardently and increasingly long for such nationality and independence.

3. The United States of America has repeatedly promised this independence. Every President from and including the lamented McKinley to the present administration has solemnly renewed this pledge in the name of the American people.

4. On August 29, 1916, the Government of the United States through and by its Congress and its President entered into a covenant with the people of the Philippine Islands in respect to the time upon which this independence was to be achieved. One only condition precedent was required of the Filipino people. Upon compliance with that condition independence was to be declared.

5. The people of the Philippine Islands, with perfect faith and absolute confidence, accepted this covenant. Diligently they set themselves to the task of complying with that one condition.

6. In every respect and fully they have accomplished that task. Long ago they knew that it was done. Long ago the highest representative of the American Government in the Philippines ungrudgingly certified to the world that it was done. For many months, therefore, the people of the Philippines have been turning an inquiring gaze upon the United States. They have done what was required of them. They have performed conscientiously and exactly their part of the contract. They now ask with growing emphasis, When does the United States intend to perform its part? When does it purpose to redeem its word of honor so unassailably pledged? When will it carry out its promise now so long overdue?

POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES HAS BEEN ALTRUISTIC FROM THE START.

It is in no spirit of ingratitude, in no forgetfulness of the obligations of the Filipino people to the United States, that they now urge this demand. We are well aware that the course of the United States toward the Philippines has been nobly conspicuous among all the records of all nations that have held subject peoples. We know well and we shall never forget that the American occupation has been distinguished by an unprecedented generosity, broad liberty, and an unselfish desire for the welfare and progress of the Philippine people. We know well and shall never forget that we owe you material advantages of almost incomparable nature. Neither overlooking nor obscuring these facts, nevertheless, with the utmost earnestness, with all sincerity, we call your attention to the great underlying truth of national life.

No benefits, however great, and no altruism, however splendid, can compensate any people for the lack of that national independence by means of which alone they can attain to their full normal life, normal development, and normal expression of their latent powers. Without freedom wealth is nothing, culture is meaningless; existence itself is only the procession of idle images on a purposeless screen.

All the conceivable advantages of good schools, sound finances, adequate means of communication, improved housing, enlarging commerce, growing manufactures, developing industries—count all in their most alluring and desirable forms—and they can compensate no people for the loss of freedom, freedom that the unvarying experience of mankind has found to be the first object of a normal people and immeasurably above all other objects in their eyes.

AMERICA HERSELF IS THE REAL INSPIRATION OF FILIPINOS.

In ample defense and proof of our position and feelings about this we cite your record. We call to your mind the magnificent spirit and achievements of your own great struggle for independence. We remind you that in 1779, when the cause of the revolting Colonies seemed far from bright; when with a standfastness the world will always admire, the Colonies had carried on for five years an unequal and apparently hopeless struggle, commissioners from Great Britain came to them with an offer of every conceivable material advantage, save only independence. They were to have complete amnesty, security, a place of honor at the head of all the British colonies, all restrictions upon trade removed, all burdens of taxation abolished, everything for which they had struggled granted to them except only independence. What was the reply of your forefathers? They stood forth and said to the Government of Great Britain, "We fight here for liberty and with nothing short of liberty will we be content." The example of your forefathers in that ever memorable contest has been and is our inspiration. We complain of no injustice or wrong on the part of the United States. We admit, and with feeling and truth we affirm to the world, that from the United States we have received only the kindest consideration and a much larger share of self-government than was ever granted before to any dominion or colony. Yet diminishing in no way our recognition of your good will we say to you, as your fathers said to the British: We stand here for liberty and independence and with nothing else will be content.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE SYMPATHETIC TO THE FILIPINO PLEA.

We feel also that this faith and this aspiration of ours are entirely in harmony with the feelings, convictions, and sympathies of the great American people. We are assured in our hearts that you wish us to be free no less than we desire freedom for ourselves. We are convinced that the people of the United States have never once wavered from their purpose as expressed in the beginning of their relations with these islands. We are certain that Americans in general desire to leave there a memorable heritage of freedom and nationality for coming generations. If the United States has seemed tardy in carrying out these lofty purposes, if it has seemed negligent of its overdue obligations in the covenants it has made, we are convinced that these defaults are due to the following conditions existing here:

1. Imperfect knowledge of the passionate yearning of the Filipino people for their independence.

2. Imperfect knowledge of the achievements of the Filipino people under the measure of self-government that has been allowed to them.

3. Imperfect knowledge of the democratic nature of society in the Philippine Islands and of the intelligence and moral fitness of their people for complete and immediate nationality.

FILIPINO PEOPLE CAN NOT JUSTLY BE EXPECTED TO WAIT LONGER.

But the Filipino people can not justly be expected to acquiesce in the longer postponement of the fulfillment of this covenant because of a lack of familiarity in the United States with the exact conditions that prevail in the islands. In that covenant no provision was made that complete knowledge of the Philippine Islands should first be universal in the United States. Never was it so much as hinted that all people of America must first be convinced of the fitness of the Filipino people for self-government. There was, indeed, no reference to any specific degree of fitness to be attained, there was no mention of any state, intellectual or material, upon which independence was to be contingent. Only one condition was mentioned, only one promise was made, only one thing was stipulated. In the plainest of plain terms the United States undertook to withdraw its sovereignty as soon as a stable government "can be established" in the islands. That condition has been fulfilled and nothing now remains but for the United States to perform its part of the agreement.

Lest there should be any chance of misunderstanding about this, let me cite to you the contract of August 29, 1916, upon which all these final appeals to you must be based. The exact words of that contract are: "It is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein." Simply this and nothing more—"as soon as a stable government can be established therein." What is a stable government? What do we mean by stability in government? About this there is no chance among honest men for a serious difference of opinion. The thing signified is perfectly plain. All governments having foreign relations have in use a standard definition of stability. That drawn up for the State Department of the United States by Mr. Elihu Root when Secretary of State and in use by that department ever since declares a stable government to be one existing with the consent of its people, fulfilling its normal functions at home and able to fulfill its obligations abroad.

THE PHILIPPINES TO-DAY HAVE A GOVERNMENT THAT IS STABLE IN EVERY WAY.

The government of the Philippine Islands that the people established under the terms of the covenant of August 29, 1916, began at once to fulfill all of the terms of this definition and has continued to fulfill them ever since. For almost seven years it has been a completely functioning governmental organism, as complete as any in the world, excepting only for its position as a dominion of the United States.

It has been in all its branches, except its first executive, a government carried on by the native people. It has had a legislature of two chambers elected by the votes of those people and on its own motion conceiving, drawing, and enacting every law that has gone into effect. It has every executive, administrative, and judicial department necessary for the maintenance of a system of justice for the execution of the laws, for public order, the security of life and property, the orderly process of public and private business, for adequate communication, for the development of education, for the expansion of agriculture, for the material, mental, and spiritual needs and welfare of the population. All these works have been directed by officers chosen from the mass of the people. To the record made in these almost seven years by a government of natives, by natives, and for natives, is one to which any Filipino may justly refer with pride. It is a record that before any international tribunal would secure recognition of the right of these people to a place in the circle of nations. It has demonstrated, in theory and in practice, that they know as well as older nations the requirements of an intelligently ordered society, that they have the ability permanently to fulfill all these requirements, and that upon this foundation they are able to build a great, enduring, and progressive nation.

OBJECTIONS TO INDEPENDENCE ARE NOT REASONS BUT EXCUSES.

Against their demands so just, reasonable, and well fortified for the independence so long promised to them, certain objections are urged in this country. These objections do not come from the masses of the American people nor from any impartial persons aware of actual conditions in the islands and solely desirous of the general welfare. They originate in small circles and private interests that derive profit from the present conditions. From such sources, by the route of ingenious and persistent propaganda, it has been urged upon you, for example, that self-government in the Philippine Islands has not been a success because the Philippine National Bank has been in difficulties. Since this bank is to a certain extent a Philippine Government enterprise, 51 per cent of the capital stock being in the insular treasury, the conclusion is drawn for you that the troubles of the bank indicate a native incapacity. It is true that the bank in the months of tremendous upheaval and contraction that followed the abnormal conditions of the Great War suffered losses. So did scores and hundreds of other banks in all parts of the world and from the same causes. It has never yet been suggested in any other case except that of the Philippines that these disturbances were a reason why any people should be deprived of their claims to national existence. The bank has made some unwise loans. Other banks have made unwise loans under less excusable conditions. I have even heard of banks and trust companies in the United States that were said to have done so, not to mention things far worse. I think I have heard of presidents and cashiers of banks that have been imprisoned for actions not merely unwise, but extremely criminal. Yet it has never been alleged that because the president of a great bank in Cincinnati, let us say, was sentenced to imprisonment for wrecking his institution, the American people were thereby proved to be unfit for self-government. As the business conditions in the Far East slowly returned to a normal basis with the subsiding of the war whirlwinds, conditions of the Philippine National Bank steadily improved. To-day it has outlived its troubles. Henceforth it has an assured road of solid prosperity before it.

NO NATION ON EARTH CAN BE SAID TO BE 100 PER CENT EFFICIENT.

In the next place, it has been urged against Philippine independence that the courts of justice in the islands are behind with their work and that causes are sometimes subject to long delays. Without venturing upon specific comparisons, which might be unpleasant, it seems to me that I have read that in most of the cities of the United States these conditions are much worse than anything that is alleged against the courts in the Philippines. Yet it has never been asserted that because the American courts are overcrowded and undermanned the American people have thereby lost their right to nationality. I think I have read of cases before the most august and honored of all American tribunals, the great Supreme Court of the United States, that have gone four or five years and even longer without adjudication. No one has held this to be a reproach against the American Nation. No one has suggested here that the right to nationality can justly be affected by it. No one should now attempt to use such an allegation as an exclusive indictment of the Filipino people. When I say to you that the courts of the Philippine Islands have dockets no more clogged with cases and no further behind in their work than average courts in the United States, you will understand that this charge against my people is only subterfuge.

PHILIPPINE FINANCES ARE TO-DAY MOST SATISFACTORY.

Third, it has been alleged that the finances of the islands under native self-government has been so mismanaged that it is necessary now for the insular government to negotiate a loan by which it can be relieved of the stringency in its treasury. This again is a great and very strange misrepresentation. The finances of the Philippine government have been managed with an ability comparable with that displayed in the financial department in any other government in this world. It is not true that there has been extravagance, recklessness, or unauthorized expenditures. The legislature has increased the appropriations for education, public works, and other necessary activities, but it has never yet begun to touch the real resources of the islands. The tax rate is one of the lowest in the world. Instead of being "bankrupt," as a most wicked and desperate propaganda has proclaimed, these islands are absolutely solvent, filled with untouched riches, and perfectly able to take care of themselves. The loan upon which these injurious allegations are based was not made because of any financial difficulties but for other purposes and other reasons not necessary to discuss here.

ILLITERACY IS VERY LOW.

Fourth, there is a common misapprehension that, while the United States has done much to spread education in the islands, illiteracy is still very common, and the majority of the people are still virtually in a state of barbarism where they are not actual savages. Against this vicious, grotesque, and monstrous invention I desire to enter the most emphatic protest of which I am capable. In the school year of 1920 and 1921 there were enrolled in the public schools of the Philippine Islands close upon 1,000,000 school children, with more than 100,000 more in the private schools. This was an increase of 152,000 over the previous year, or 19 per cent. In 1920 there were 5,944 public schools in the islands, an increase of 981, or 20 per cent, over the previous year. In 1920 the expenditures for public education amounted to 18,420,000 pesos, or more than $9,000,000, which was an increase of 23 per cent over the previous year. All these figures have since been still further increased, to the honor of the great and efficient Philippine department of public instruction.

The percentage of illiteracy in the Philippine Islands is to-day very low, indeed. It is less than that of Spain, Portugal, and some other European countries, whose right to independence has never been questioned. It is as small as in some sections of this great Union, whose right to self-government has never been impeached. Of the 11,000,000 inhabitants of the Philippine Islands about 10,000,000 are Christians and civilized, and of the remainder, only a small number can now be regarded as still unreached by civilization. The percentage of these is very much smaller than the percentage of the uncivilized people in the American Colonies when their independent nationality was established and acknowledged. The work of civilizing and educating the small number of Philippine inhabitants still without the pale is being urged with ceaseless activity, so that within a few years there will have been left no people in the entire archipelago that could be described as either savage or barbarous.

A civilized, independent, educated, intelligent population, with the background of centuries of their own history as a racial unit, knowing well the great lessons of the democratic struggle, uplifted and encouraged by the inspiring story of the United States itself, having demonstrated its capability to carry on a modern government, stands forth and asks that its aspirations be gratified. That demand, gentlemen, I lay here before you, and in the name of that population I beg for an answer.

I have mentioned among the reasons why the United States has not redeemed its pledge to the Philippines the general ignorance here of the intensity and unanimity of feeling on this subject among my people. Would that in some way I could have this moment the attention of every American man and woman. I would cry in the ears of this great, intelligent, well-meaning American Nation that in this oversight in ignorance of the truth lies the chance of a terrible disaster. I do declare to you, upon my faith as a man, as a Filipino of the Filipinos, knowing my people well, that as surely as truth is truth and right is right, they are virtually of one mind about this. Heed no one that would tell you otherwise.

"FILIPINOS OF THE SOUTH" HAVE BEEN MISREPRESENTED.

The Filipinos of the south, whom you call Moros, are as much Filipinos as those of the north. It is constantly represented to you that all Moros are opposed to the rest of the nation; that they would prefer to remain under the rule of the United States; and that, therefore, in justice to these so-called dissenters you must not grant independence. Suppose all these allegations to be true, how many Moros are there in the islands? Fewer than half a million. What is the total population? About 11,000,000. You are asked then to refuse the petition of twenty-one twenty-seconds of the population because the last twenty-seconds part does not joint in it. Is that just?

Again, supposing these allegations to be true, was there ever any radical decisive action in the story of human affairs about which there was no difference of opinion? It is recorded that in your own struggle for freedom there were many Tories. The Declaration of Independence was opposed in many regions. Even your Constitution was not unanimously adopted. In your Civil War neither North nor South was always of one opinion. If, then, it were true that, among 11,000,000 people, 500,000 did not join with the rest in a demand for nationality, the fact would be insignificant. If independence could be refused on such grounds, there could rightfully be no national progress nor emancipation anywhere. But I say to you that the Filipinos are not divided on this score. Representatives of the Moros have repeatedly voted with the rest of their countrymen in favor of complete and immediate nationality. Leading men among them have joined in every great demonstration and every petition for the same object. In every Moro community will be found plain evidence that in the words of Hadji Butu, the great Moro senator and leader, "the Moros are one with the rest of the Filipinos."

INDEPENDENCE IS THE ONE NATIONAL ASPIRATION OF THE WHOLE FILIPINO RACE.

As to the fervor and profound conviction, the sincerity and depth of the feelings of the people of these islands on this subject of independence, I think it is time a word was said to the American Nation, said in all kindness, in all good will, but with all earnestness. The hearts of these people are set upon national existence. To urge upon them any other plan or system of existence is utterly futile and a mere waste of time. To delay much longer the fulfillment of their natural and irrevocable desires will be fraught with great danger. At the present time the heart of every Filipino beats warmly for the United States; but it so beats because every Filipino has unbounded confidence in the righteous, good faith, honest, and exalted principles of the American Nation. To shatter that faith and to fill its place with distrust, dislike, and a cruel disillusion would be a lamentable and ominous disaster. Not only in the Philippine Islands, but throughout the whole of the Far East, the word would go that morally the great American Republic was no more.

In all those vast regions millions and millions of men are turning to you. Beyond all comparison the United States of America is the greatest power in the Orient, solely because men have faith in you, your word, your professions, and your ideals. To the people of these regions, struggling slowly up from despotism to liberty, a nation like the United States, believed in as the champion of human rights, the defender of democracy, the unarmed soldier of liberty, is all the light they know. If having entered into this sacred covenant with the people of the Philippine Islands the United States should now break its word and show that its professions of high ideals and of honesty were of no more validity than the specious and filthy tricks with which other nations have seized territory and amassed plunder in the Far East, the result would be a moral debacle hardly to be paralleled in the history of the world. There would be left no foundation for faith. Men would cease to believe in any promise, any treaty, any agreement, any liberty, any government. There would be struck down at once all the hopes of those brave and tireless advocates of democracy and freedom that are now trying to find the road to enduring conditions and national happiness. It would be impossible to exaggerate, it would be impossible even to describe the abyss of despair into which all this part of the world would be plunged if the terrible idea should ever be forced upon mankind there that the United States was no longer a Nation that kept faith and no longer had another purpose than sordid ends of gaining and keeping. The people of the Philippine Islands have far too much faith in and affection for the United States to entertain the slightest belief that such a moral catastrophe is possible.

INDEPENDENCE IS ALREADY OVERDUE.

Yet let me say to you, still with all kindness, with all good will, and with all due restraint, that people can not be expected always to put up with delay and delay and delay in the fulfillment of a contract the term of which has long expired. In accordance with a pledge of its own making, the United States ought to have retired from the Philippine Isands five years ago. Every day that has passed since then has increased the astonishment of the Filipino people at the present procrastination of which they have been the victims. It is not possible that this procrastination can go much longer without profoundly shaking the faith of the Filipino people in the good intentions of the United States. They know perfectly well how fallacious, how fabulous, and how malicious have been the pretenses by which this procrastination has been excused by those who make a profit from continued occupation. It is not in human nature that intelligent men will continue indefinitely to regard a nation with unchanged affection if it refuses to do them justice. It is high time that the American people should understand clearly what impends. You have promised us freedom. On one pretense or another that freedom has been denied to us. We most earnestly and solemnly beseech you not to add to this delay. We have carried out our part of the contract. We beg you to carry out yours. We appeal to the American tradition. We appeal to the wonderful American history.

The same principle with which you endowed the world when you became free still obligates you to be freedom's champion. Again and again, at great cost to yourselves, with the loss of blood and treasure and the lives of heroes, you have thrust the spotless shield of the United States between weak peoples and those that stood to oppress them. Do not, we beg of you, allow that shield to be stained now by an act of oppression on your part.

You that fought for your liberty, that insisted upon your independence, that have carried the light to so many dark places of the world, that have given to mankind in the Great War so magnificent and unequaled an example of unselfish devotion to the cause of democracy and the rights of the oppressed, we appeal to you finally that you shall keep the ancient faith intact, that you shall not quench nor at this late day lower the light you have carried so long and so far, that you shall not make the pledged faith of the United States a thing as soiled and ductile as dicers' oaths.

AN EXCELLENT REVIEW OF THE PHILIPPINE SITUATION.

In conclusion, I should like to offer as supplementing and enforcing these remarks an article that appeared in the December number, 1922, of the Contemporary Review, a leading review of Great Britain. It is entitled "The future of the Philippines," and is by Charles Edward Russell, the well-known American author and lecturer:

[From the Contemporary Review, December, 1922, London, England.]

THE FUTURE OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The problem of the Philippines was one of the many difficulties inherited by President Harding's administration when it came into office. The course taken in dealing with it can be construed only as a censure, and that of a kind unusual, on the preceding administration.

The question, briefly stated, is whether the sovereignty of the United States is to be withdrawn from the Philippine Islands in accordance with the wishes of a majority of the inhabitants thereof, or whether some form of government, radically new to them and possibly fraught with grave dangers, is to be ventured upon in place of the present tenuous connection. The surrender of the islands to their inhabitants has been contemplated from the beginning of the American occupation, but vaguely and as an ultimate and distant aim. The people were to be fitted for self-government, and were thereafter to be set free to manage their own affairs. This benevolent purpose each succeeding administration had avowed, but without hinting a period for the achievement, until August, 1916, when—the Democratic Party being in sole control of all branches of the American Government—a measure known as the Jones Act was passed by Congress and signed by President Wilson. It set forth in the preamble the terms upon which the United States was willing to withdraw, and even approximated a date for its departure.

"Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the war with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and

"Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and

"Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without in the meantime impairing the exercise of the right of sovereignty of the people of the United States, in order that by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers they may be better prepared fully to assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence: Therefore"—

The act followed, comprising 31 sections of an organic law for the native government of the Islands under American supervision until the sole condition required by the preamble—the establishment of a stable government—should be fulfilled.

The question of stability was not left long without official clarification. By the Jones Act the government was centered in a two-chambered legislature, elected by the people under a restricted franchise, and in a Governor General appointed by the President of the United States. In 1919, after nearly six years spent in this post, Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison made this statement before a committee of Congress:

"I wish to state upon my responsibility as governor general that in my opinion there exists to-day in the Philippine Islands a stable government, which I think should answer the requirements laid down by Presidents Grant and McKinley and, as I understand it, also by Mr. Root, namely, a government elected by the suffrages of the people which is capable of maintaining order and of fulfilling its international obligations."

On December 7, 1920, President Wilson in his message to Congress explicitly indorsed the same finding. He said:

"Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and that thus they have fulfilled the condition set by the Congress as precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet."

If Governor General Harrison and President Wilson were right, no course consistent with honor was left to the United States except to effect at once the liberation of the islands and the end of American supremacy there.

This was the situation the Harding administration faced when it went into office on March 4, 1921. The Democratic Party, of which Mr. Wilson has been the leader, had always demanded Philippine independence. Mr. Harding's Republican Party, without formally committing itself, had always been believed to be strongly in favor of keeping the islands. The forces that brought about Mr. Harding's nomination may be said without disparagement to be generally sympathetic to great business and financial interests, and these interests, for adequate reasons to be explained hereafter, were keenly aroused against the surrender of American sovereignty in the Philippines. Nevertheless this surrender was unavoidable on the face value of the papers before Congress.

Accordingly one of President Harding's first acts was to appoint a special commission to visit the Philippines and investigate their status. Such an act could be regarded only as most significant. The commission was, in plain terms, to see if the Governor General and President Wilson had been justified in announcing that the time had come for the American withdrawal.

The commission consisted of Gen. Leonard Wood (an unsuccessful competitor for the Republican nomination for the Presidency in 1920) and Mr. W. Cameron Forbes, a former Governor General of the Philippines. General Wood also was no stranger to the islands, having been on active military duty there. The commission made a tour of the islands in the summer of 1921 and its report was made public in December. It found against Philippine independence on the main ground that the islanders were not yet so versed in the mysteries of self-government as successfully to manage their own affairs, although due credit and even warm praise were given to them for their rapid progress and demonstrated capacity. A concluding paragraph sums up thus:

"We feel that with all their many excellent qualities, the experience of the past eight years, during which they have had practical autonomy, has not been such as to justify the people of the United States relinquishing supervision of the government of the Philippine Islands, withdrawing their Army and Navy, and leaving the islands a prey to any powerful nation coveting their rich soil and potential commercial advantages."

The intense dissatisfaction with which the report was received in the islands was largely explained by the fact that it left undetermined the main, or, one might say, the only point at issue. As to whether there was or was not "a stable government" General Wood and Mr. Forbes offered no conclusion. Nothing was decided as to the accuracy of the former Governor General's certification on that point and nothing as to President Wilson's reasonableness in practically announcing Philippine independence. In the report the stability of the government was only twice referred to, and then only in a casual, not a determinative, way. The two references are:

"(1) We find there is a disquieting lack of confidence in the administration of justice, to an extent which constitutes a menace to the stability of the Government.

"(2) In conclusion, we are convinced that it would be a betrayal of the Philippine people, a misfortune to the American people, a distinct step backward in the path of progress, and a discreditable neglect of our national duty were we to withdraw from the islands and terminate our relationship and stable government."

On the majority of the island population the effect of this conclusion was far from reassuring. The Filipinos have a natural taste for pleasurable speech and at least a fair allotment of vanity. They did not fail to observe the many passages in the report, in which tribute was paid to their good qualities, their advance in education, their use of the arts and resources of civilization. But their disgust with the general verdict much outweighed their appreciation of its praise. When the report was made public the native leaders had much ado to prevent outbreaks of violence. Unfortunately news of these events did not reach the United States, which is still largely unaware of the native reactions.

The advocates of independence in the islands argued that the points raised by the commission were not involved in the dispute. In what they called the contract or covenant between the people of the Philippine Islands and the people of the United States nothing was said about the quality of justice to be administered in the courts, about efficient defense against foreign attack, about national duty, about the army and navy. Nothing was stipulated, except that the government to be established should be stable. The Filipinos underscored the fact that for five years their government had presented successfully all the ordinary attributes of stability, had maintained the national credit, had functioned adequately in all respects, carried on public improvements, passed laws and enforced them, effectively secured life and property. To meet any uncertainty as to the definition of "a stable government" they quoted that adopted by President McKinley as governing the course of the United States toward Cuba. He deemed a stable government to be "one capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity, and the security of its citizens as well as our own." Mr. E. Root, as Secretary of State in President Roosevelt's administration, defined "a stable government" in almost the same words, but added the insistence that there should be a popular mandate. He held that a stable government was one "elected by the suffrages of the people and supported by them, capable of maintaining order, and of fulfilling its international obligations." This definition has been since viewed as fundamental in the practices of the American State Department. The Filipino leaders contended that, judged by these definitions, they had established a stable government and fulfilled to the letter their part of the contract.

Their disappointment was the keener because for five years they had been led to believe that their hopes of nationality were on the way to solidify into fact. Since its inauguration, after the passage of the Jones Act, the Philippine Legislature had not failed at any session unanimously to pass resolutions demanding immediate independence, and these seemed to rouse no apparent dissent in America. In 1919 the legislature dispatched to Washington a commission of eminent natives to offer this demand and ask immediate action upon it. When the official report of the Governor General that the Philippines were ready for independence was followed by the formal statement to the same effect by President Wilson, the Filipinos could hardly be blamed if they took such utterances as final and dependable.

The Wood-Forbes report came to shatter these pleasant hopes and to aver what the Filipinos regarded as insufficient and disingenuous reasons. Resentment became outspoken. The legislature, with but one dissenting vote, adopted a protest. The native newspapers, many of which have considerable circulations, uttered a severe if measured condemnation. An émeute in the streets was prevented by the quick action of the leaders. The Nationalist Party, comprising more than two-thirds of the voters, met and, after deliberation, adopted immediate independence without protection by the United States as its definite policy. The newly elected chancellor of the national university delivered a fiery address, warning the youth of the islands that they must work for complete and self-sustained nationality. The legislature sent to the United States a new commission of natives to make representations against the report and to ask that no action be taken upon its recommendations. This agitation is still proceeding.

To the American element in the islands the Wood-Forbes verdict was hardly less irritating than to the Filipinos. In the American colony the feeling is strong and general against insular autonomy, a feeling that may be due in part to racial antagonism, but there was disappointment at the failure of the report to indicate any future status for the islands. For substantial and practical reasons this was ill suited to the colony's ideas and needs. It left in a state truly precarious a large part of the great American investment of the last 10 years, not because the existing government, or any potential government, would be hostile to such capital and to its returns, but because it left in entire doubt the future tariff policy of the islands. In the view of most of the colonists the easy and effective settlement would be a recommendation of the territorial form of government. This would be tantamount to a declaration of permanent annexation, with a temporary organization like that formerly provided for frontier States before they were ready for statehood, thus carrying with it the sure prospect of ultimate admission of the islands as a full-fledged State into the American Union. If there could be no finding in favor of a territorial government, the American business men had hoped that, at least, no uncertainty would be left about independence. If independence was to come at all they preferred to have it as quickly as possible; if not, they wished that fact to be set forth so plainly that there would be no excuse for the agitation and uncertainty that are now undeniably hampering business.

In dealing with the popular attitude toward independence it is necessary to observe some distinctions. All of one race and stock as they are, the Filipinos show many types; the educated native of the northern town is not easily included in our thinkings with the almost naked mountaineer or the far-away Moro of the Sulus. To say that the great majority of the populace favors independence must be interpreted as referring to the civilized Filipinos. No one could pretend that the wild Manobo or Bagobo of the thickets cares or knows anything about the question. It is undeniable that, if independence were granted, the new State would be obliged to carry these untutored savages as a liability in some such way as for nearly a century the American Republic was obliged to carry the savage red Indian, or as the Australian Commonwealth carries the bushmen. The Filipino leader points to these comparisons and asserts that the item is not more significant in one instance than in another. Moreover, the numbers of the wild men seem surprisingly small when compared with the rest. The census of 1918 gave the total population of the Archipelago as 10,350,730, of whom 9,463,731 were Christians and 886,999 non-Christians. On the basis of these figures and the assumption that civilization has attended upon Christianity, nothing appalling or impossible would seem to pertain to the balance between civilization and savagery. It is not fair, however, to class all the non-Christians as savages. Many of the Mohammedan Moros of the south have attained to a high order of civilization, and the number of really wild men running at large in the bush is small. The remnant of Negritos—the strange aboriginal people still surviving in the mountains—does not largely swell the total.

The Moros constitute the traditional problem of island government. They sit in the Philippine Legislature, join without a sign of fracture in the insular affairs, and have voted with their confrères for independence. Possibly the differences in religious faith lose their primitive edge before the advance of the public school, in which the Moro is showing an interest strange in a man of his creed. The Moros inhabit the department of Mindanao and Sulu, but even there are generally in no overwhelming preponderance. A census taken in 1920 showed its population to be 1,112,579, of which 589,633 were Christians and 522,946 were non-Christians.

Among the great Christian majority of the islands the desire for independence is unquestionable. The political parties have generally agreed in the demand for it and have only differed concerning the best means and time to win freedom. In the American colony of Manila the belief seems common that the agitation for independence is the sole creation of politicians, but this is not borne out by the fact that those representatives are the most popular who make themselves most conspicuous in the independence cause. "We find everywhere among the Christian Filipinos," said the Wood-Forbes report, "the desire for independence, generally under the protection of the United States." But, it added, "The non-Christians and Americans are for continuance of American control." The Americans in the islands number fewer than 7,000. Adding these to the total of non-Christians revealed by the census, it is apparent that the opposition to independence must be a very small minority.

The suffrage, however, is not universal. The so-called backward Provinces are temporarily excluded. Most of the inhabitants of the Moro regions do not vote. For this reason any statement of the attitude of the non-Christians must rest upon individual opinion alone. The whole subject of Moro sentiment seems too uncertain to justify confident assertion, though many leading Moros are committed to independence, and Rizal day—the national independence festival—is generally celebrated in the southern islands as in the northern. As to the Christian Filipinos, constituting, as has been seen, more than nine-tenths of the population, we are to remember that only a small proportion have the necessary franchise qualifications. Of these, in the 1919 election more aligned themselves with the Nationalist political party than with all the others together. The Nationalist is the party that has most persistently urged independence. But neither of the other two parties offered any opposition to it.

So far as a limited franchise and the representative form of government can furnish a popular mandate about anything, the mandate in this instance would seem to be competent. At each election the political party that most unwaveringly has stood for independence is returned to power. Year after year the legislature thus elected repeats its demand that the United States shall fulfill its promise. It appropriates money to be spent in furthering the cause of separation; the people yearly approve or acquiesce in this expenditure. Elsewhere under the like conditions the expression of the popular will would probably be deemed conclusive. With the competence of the legislature no fault is found. The Wood-Forbes Commission was favorably impressed. "We find the legislative chambers," says the report, "are conducted with dignity and decorum and are composed of representative men."

We should remark in passing that the independence movement in the Philippines has about it nothing that can be called seditious, and so far, at least, no flaw has appeared in the allegiance of the people to the United States. The most vehement agitator never injects into his harangue a charge of injustice or oppression. Affection for America is widespread and, so far as the alien visitor can determine, quite genuine, due in great measure to the really excellent school system the Americans introduced and maintained, and to the unexampled latitude of self-government provided in the Jones Act. Washington's Birthday and July 4 are celebrated throughout the islands with enthusiasm, and when the United States entered the Great War the Filipinos everywhere gave rather remarkable evidence of loyalty. Perhaps to this sense of gratitude may be ascribed part of the once common hope that independence might be granted in such terms as Cuba obtained, with American guaranties and protection—a hope slowly fading before the eyes of enlightened Filipinos. Independence with or without protection is now the slogan; a majority of the inhabitants are becoming well prepared to risk complete national separation.

The complement to this singular situation in the islands is the fact that, in the main, the people of the United States view the agitation without resentment and often with an expression of sympathy. Partly this expression is genuine; partly it is fidelity to history; partly it is weariness of the whole business. If by any possibility the Nation could go back to 1898 and rid itself of all its outlying possessions the average plain citizen would be well pleased. With regard to the Philippines, this indifference is rather astonishing in view of the fact that the question is of supreme importance to the future policy of this country and the status of the Pacific. But for a people of more than usual intelligence and mental alertness, the Americans are strangely uninformed about their subject dependencies. This explains in a way why so far the Filipinos have clamored for independence without winning American assent or arousing keen opposition.

For weighty reasons, however, one element in American society, small in numbers but of importance and power, is unable to imitate the general nonchalance. It is composed of the investors the substance of whose returns lie in or about the tariff relations between the United States and the islands. In the beginning of the American occupation the American import customs duties applied to Philippine goods as to others. In 1909 this condition was greatly modified on behalf of Philippine commodities, and in the tariff of 1913 practical free trade was established in these exchanges. All the standard products of the Philippines—tobacco, hemp, sugar, copra, and lumber—were placed in a position of great advantage compared with the like products from other regions of the Pacific. The assured profits stimulated the flow of capital and resulted in notable development of island industry, as the following statistics show:

In 1909 the total foreign trade of the Philippines was ₱18,069,000; in 1919 it had attained to ₱46,350,000. In 1907 exports of cigars were valued at only ₱212,676; in 1919, at ₱1,815,000. Most of this increase was absorbed by America, where the comparatively low prices under free trade made easy marketing for Philippine tobacco. In 1907 the exports of Manila cigars to America were only $2,175; in 1918 they had risen to 264,871,253. Exports of sugar rose from 141,568,420 tons in 1907 to 302,420,370 tons in 1918; of coconut oil (extracted from copra), from 819,625 kilos to 139,942,612 kilos; of hemp, from ₱3,937,000 worth to ₱16,926,000 worth in the same years. Exports of embroideries rose from a value of ₱17,600 in 1913 to a value of ₱691,000 in 1919. From 1912 to 1919 the quantity of lumber exported increased sixfold. The resources of the commercial banks increased from ₱6,000,000 in 1913 to ₱43,000,000 in 1920, and deposits in the savings banks from ₱282,000 to ₱492,000.

This rapid development took place under a condition of practical free trade. But if the Philippine Islands should secure their independence they would pass to the status of any other country foreign to the United States and the American tariff wall, now taken down for their behoof, would be restored against them. This could but spell huge disaster for much of the American capital invested in the islands since 1913. Philippine products would be subject to tariff duties averaging about 60 per cent, with the result that they would be largely excluded from the American market, whither two-thirds of the trade of the islands now goes. Obviously, the economic effects upon the islands would be, for a time at least, most unfortunate. A period of business depression might easily be predicted, lasting until trade could be adjusted to new bearings by the developing of new markets. The leaders of the independence movement to whom this prospect has been depicted are by no means unfamiliar with it. They declare that the islanders are prepared to accept the full measure of the temporary economic reverse, deeming it a price not too great for independence and relying upon the resources of their country and its relation to world needs to effect a swift recovery.

It is fairly safe to prophesy that, being committed to autonomy and actively enlisted for it, the Christian part of the population will not return upon that path. It is to this fact and its consequences that the people of the United States remain irresponsive. Always the demand for independence grows more vehement in the islands. If it resembles all other such movements heretofore in human experience, it will not always wear the pacific front it does now. If the Filipinos in the mass should become convinced that the promises of the Jones Act were made in bad faith, or that there was deliberate purpose to ignore them, the United States might find itself in a position where either it must retire before the threat of violence, or it must suppress by force of arms a people whose only offense in the eyes of the world would be that it had demanded the fulfillment of a covenant.

The consequences of an independent Philippines, with an all-native government, republican in form, might be momentous. One can hardly imagine that it could be established without working a profound impression upon far eastern conditions. It would be the first complete and functioning democracy in Asia; it would be the first attempt by any division of the Malay race at modern democratic self-government. If it should succeed, or even promise to succeed, there must needs be a sharp readjustment of the European view about the Asiatic and a sharp readjustment of policy toward him. He would be in court with an exhibit unassailable as evidence, and not likely to be of a sedative nature to many of the spectators. A Philippine republic would render difficult any prolonged delay of universal suffrage in Japan. It would probably hasten the unification and pacification of China. It would react upon the Koreans and might modify greatly the Japanese policy toward them. It would inevitably shape America's own foreign policy, for it would amount to a decision to retire finally from all attempts to construct an empire or to hold subject dependencies.

Yet to something of this kind all the present indications undeniably point. The Philippines can not much longer remain in the present state of merely provisional organization. If any thought is entertained anywhere that the people of the United States could be brought to consent to the sale of the islands or to the transfer of their sovereignty to any other power whatsoever, it can not be too quickly abandoned. The alternative to independence is to erect the islands into a territory of the United States, giving them the territorial form of government like that of Alaska and Hawaii, and announcing thus their permanent annexation. Supposing that the people of the islands could be brought to accept this dispensation, it is gravely to be doubted if the people of the United States could be argued into equal pliability. It would mean that eventually they must enlarge the boundaries of the United States across 8,000 miles of ocean to embrace a region in the alien Tropics—a region to the rest of the Union so antithetic in climate, products, people, conditions, and interests as to be forever hopelessly incongruous. Between these two courses, nevertheless, the United States must soon choose, and it is to be surmised that so far President Harding's administration has found no satisfactory answer to the most troublesome problem bequeathed by its predecessor.

SENATOR KING'S AMENDMENT INDORSED BY PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that on February 9 Senator WILLIAM H. KING, of Utah, one of the best friends of the Filipino people in the American Congress, made a speech on the floor of the Senate in which he discussed the Philippine question at considerable length.

In the course of his remarks he introduced an amendment to the Army bill reading as follows:

That in conformity with the act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916, the Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized to provide for a general election of delegates to a constitutional convention which shall prepare and formulate a constitution for an independent republican government for the Philippine Islands, and that upon the ratification and promulgation of said constitution and the election of the officers therein provided for and upon satisfactory proof that the government provided for under said constitution is organized and ready to function, the President of the United States shall recognize and proclaim the independence of the Philippine government under said constitution and shall notify the governments with which the United States is in diplomatic correspondence thereof, and shall invite said governments to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands; and that the President is directed to withdraw the military forces of the United States from said islands within six months after said proclamation recognizing the independence of said Philippine government.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the amendment did not reach a vote, but the news of the action of the Senator was cabled to the Philippine Islands and caused much enthusiasm there.

Senator KING's amendment was discussed on the floors of both houses of the Philippine Legislature, with the result that the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Philippine Senate concurring), That they express, and they hereby so express, their gratification upon receiving the information that Senator WILLIAM H. KING, of Utah, has proposed in the Senate of the United States that a provision providing for the immediate independence be included in the War Department appropriation bill; and

Resolved further, That the President and Congress of the United States be, and they hereby are, requested to approve said provision, which is in accordance with the aspirations of the Filipino people as expressed time and again by their constitutional representatives in the Philippine Legislature; and

Resolved finally, That the presiding officers of both houses of the Philippine Legislature be, and they are hereby, directed to transmit these resolutions to the Philippine Resident Commissioners at Washington with instructions to present the same to the President and Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present——

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13660.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from the Philippine Islands be permitted to revise and extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. He already has that permission. The gentleman from Michigan calls up a conference report. The Chair is mistaken. The Chair understood it was a conference report. The Chair understands it is a House bill with a Senate amendment in disagreement.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it a conference report?

The SPEAKER. It is not a conference report; it is a bill which has been to conference.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its amendment to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate, and the conferees be appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and to agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of this concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object for the present. I have a resolution from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is merely to complete this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 84.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate No. 24 to the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities, etc., be authorized to agree to striking out the following language, "at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LIQUOR SHIPMENTS TO DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution or offer a privileged motion. I wish to move to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of House Resolution 503.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is not in order to-day, Mr. Speaker. That is not a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. Let the gentleman state the ground of his privilege.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a resolution that was introduced more than seven days ago, and it has not been reported to the House; a resolution of inquiry, calling upon the Treasury Department for certain facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that unquestionably it is privileged, but the Chair also understands that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] claims the floor with a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have a resolution from the Committee on Rules which is of higher import.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will not argue the question of importance, but it is not of equal privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is of greater privilege.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the rules guarantee to every Member of the House the right to the consideration of a resolution of inquiry, and it is provided that if such a resolution of inquiry having been referred to a committee is not reported to the House within seven days it is privileged and the introducer may call it up at any time.

Now, the gentleman from Kansas suggests that a report from the Committee on Rules, providing a special order for the consideration of legislation, is preferential and should take precedence over the motion I have offered. I want to call the attention of the Speaker to the situation, which is that no report from the Committee on Rules has yet been presented to the House. The only question that is before the House at this time is the consideration of the motion that I have already offered to discharge the committee from the consideration of House Resolution 503. The gentleman from Kansas urges that, with that business pending before the House, he should have a preferential right over that and set it aside, and have the House consider the resolution which he proposes to offer, but has not as yet.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I had addressed the Speaker and the Speaker had recognized me when the gentleman from Michigan interjected this new motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it necessary to spend time on that. The Chair very often recognizes a person without knowing what motion that person is going to make. But that, the Chair thinks, does not give them any right. The question always is, Which gentleman has the motion of higher privilege? And every recognition of the Chair is provisional and subject to some other Member having a matter of higher privilege. The question on which the Chair would like to hear from the gentleman is, Which has the higher privilege—a resolution from the Committee on Rules or a motion to discharge a committee?

Mr. CRAMTON. The facts are these, Mr. Speaker, and if I was incorrect I will accept correction: My impression is that my resolution was presented to the House and the resolution of the gentleman from Kansas was not yet offered; and in case they were of equal privilege, then mine, of course, would have priority, having been first offered.

But in any event I further urge that mine is of higher privilege for the reason that we are approaching the end of a session, and if the Committee on Rules, which will govern the business of the House very largely in the next two weeks—very little will get up for consideration except through a rule from that committee—if the gentleman from Kansas can now set my resolution aside by offering a resolution to make in order this Navy bill, that may provide for one day's debate or five days' debate—the question of privilege would be the same—then they can follow that with another rule that will make some other bill in order and follow that with another, and in that way they can absolutely deny, under that situation, the right that a Member of the House has for the consideration of a resolution of inquiry. I urge, therefore, that for the protection of the rights of the Members of the House the resolution that I have offered is of a higher privilege than the other.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. LONDON. Is not this motion the only right that a Member has in the nature of an interpellation, in the nature of an inquiry, to a member of the Cabinet as to his activities?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is the only method that the Congress has to submit an inquiry to a Cabinet officer or an executive department, and of course it is initiated by a motion of an individual Member of the House; and if the point of order made by the gentleman from Kansas is sustained, then the way is open to gag the membership of the House and deny them any right to secure this information.

It may be said that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is in a small minority. There is a larger minority here also. The Committee on Rules is governed by the majority of the House, and that majority customarily is of the same political faith as the executive department heads; and if the point of order of the gentleman from Kansas is sustained, then the way is open to deny always to the minority any opportunity to submit a resolution of inquiry to an executive department. That is a most dangerous rule, I submit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Committee on Rules has no higher privilege and its reports are no more highly privileged than a report from the Committee on Appropriations; that is, a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations, or from the Committee on Ways and Means, or from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, under certain contingencies. So far as my observation has gone, it has always been the policy for the Chair, when these resolutions of inquiry are presented, after the reading of the Journal, as this was, and the conclusion of business on the Speaker's table, to give preference to a motion of this sort.

I do not know what is in the gentleman's resolution. I know nothing whatever about its merits; but if the gentleman's resolution could be set aside by a report from the Committee on Rules, it could also be set aside by a report from the Committee on Appropriations, or by a report from the Committee on Ways and Means, and the gentleman might never have a chance to exercise the privilege, which is guaranteed by the rules of the House, of calling up a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. ASWELL. It would nullify the rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will suggest to the gentleman that to sustain the point made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] would open the way to gag the minority in the House absolutely and prevent them presenting any inquiry calling upon any executive department for information.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is precisely the idea that I was trying to express.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. A question of personal privilege or a question of the privileges of the House is the only question that is privileged above the gentleman's motion. Is not that the case?

Mr. CRAMTON. That would be my impression.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's motion is privileged above every other matter of legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is of higher privilege than a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds no precedent on the matter except one by Speaker Reed in which he said, "This is a privileged question, but not a question of privilege." Now, if it were a question of privilege the Chair would be disposed to think that the reason it was privileged was because it affected the privileges of the House, but this seems to negative that. If it is a privileged question, it is, as the gentleman from Tennessee suggests——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A question of recognition.

The SPEAKER. It is on a level with a report from a privileged committee. Now, a report from the Committee on Rules always has precedence over that, because the rule expressly says that it shall always be in order to call up a report from the Committee on Rules. The Chair thinks the Committee on Rules has precedence, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to lay the appeal on the table. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt. The Chair thinks the better way would be to have it decided by tellers. Without objection, the Chair will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] to act as tellers. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to lay on the table the appeal of the gentleman from Michigan from the decision of the Chair.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 54.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-seven Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. As many as are in favor of laying the appeal on the table will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 127, not voting 133, as follows:

YEAS—166.

Abernethy	Arentz	Box	Campbell, Kans.
Ackerman	Bacharach	Britten	Campbell, Pa.
Anderson	Beedy	Burke	Cannon
Andrew, Mass.	Bird	Burtness	Chindblom
Anthony	Bixler	Burton	Clarke, N. Y.
Appleby	Bland, Va.	Butler	Clouse
Cole, Iowa	Hawes	McLaughlin, Pa.	Rosenbloom
Cole, Ohio	Henry	McPherson	Rouse
Colton	Hersey	MacGregor	Sanders, Ind.
Crago	Hickey	MacLafferty	Sanders, N. Y.
Crisp	Hicks	Magee	Shreve
Curry	Hill	Merritt	Sinnott
Dallinger	Hogan	Miller	Snyder
Darrow	Hukriede	Montague	Stafford
Deal	Hull	Moore, Ill.	Stedman
Denison	Humphrey, Nebr.	Moore, Va.	Stephens
Doughton	Ireland	Moores, Ind.	Swing
Drewry	Jefferis, Nebr.	Mott	Temple
Dunbar	Kendall	Nelson, Me.	Thompson
Dunn	Kincheloe	Nolan	Tilson
Elliott	Kissel	Norton	Timberlake
Ellis	Kline, N. Y.	Ogden	Tinkham
Fairfield	Kline, Pa.	Paige	Towner
Faust	Knutson	Parker, N. J.	Treadway
Fess	Kopp	Parker, N. Y.	Underhill
Focht	Kraus	Patterson, Mo.	Vaile
Fordney	Kreider	Patterson, N. J.	Vinson
Freeman	Kunz	Perlman	Voigt
Frothingham	Lampert	Petersen	Ward, N. Y.
Fuller	Langley	Purnell	Ward, N. C.
Funk	Larson, Minn.	Radcliffe	Wason
Gahn	Lawrence	Rainey, Ill.	Watson
Gallivan	Layton	Ramseyer	Webster
Gernerd	Lea, Calif.	Ransley	White, Me.
Gifford	Leatherwood	Reece	Wilson
Gorman	Lee, Ga.	Rhodes	Winslow
Graham, Ill.	Lehlbach	Riordan	Woods, Va.
Greene, Mass.	Linthicum	Roach	Wurzbach
Greene, Vt.	Luce	Robertson	Wyant
Griest	McCormick	Robsion	Yates
Hadley	McFadden	Rodenberg
Hardy, Colo.	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Rogers

NAYS—127.

Almon	Davis, Tenn.	Kelly, Pa.	Rucker
Andrews, Nebr.	Dickinson	Ketcham	Sanders, Tex.
Aswell	Dominick	Lanham	Sandlin
Atkeson	Dowell	Lankford	Scott, Tenn.
Bankhead	Driver	Larsen, Ga.	Shelton
Barbour	Evans	Little	Sinclair
Barkley	Favrot	Logan	Sisson
Beck	Fields	London	Smith, Idaho
Begg	Fish	Lowrey	Smithwick
Bell	Fisher	Lyon	Speaks
Benham	Fitzgerald	McDuffie	Steagall
Black	Foster	McKenzie	Strong, Kans.
Blanton	Fulmer	McLaughlin, Mich.	Summers, Wash.
Bowling	Garrett, Tenn.	McSwain	Sumners, Tex.
Briggs	Garrett, Tex.	Mapes	Swank
Brown, Tenn.	Gensman	Martin	Taylor, Tenn.
Browne, Wis.	Hammer	Michener	Tillman
Buchanan	Hardy, Tex.	Moore, Ohio	Tincher
Bulwinkle	Hayden	Morgan	Tucker
Byrnes, S. C.	Herrick	Murphy	Turner
Byrns, Tenn.	Hoch	Nelson, A. P.	Tyson
Carter	Hooker	Nelson, J. M.	Upshaw
Chalmers	Huddleston	Newton, Minn.	Weaver
Christopherson	Hudspeth	O'Connor	Williams, Ill.
Clague	Humphreys, Miss.	Oldfield	Williams, Tex.
Collier	Jacoway	Oliver	Williamson
Collins	James	Parks, Ark.	Wingo
Connally, Tex.	Jeffers, Ala.	Quin	Wise
Cooper, Ohio	Johnson, Miss.	Rankin	Woodruff
Cooper, Wis.	Jones, Tex.	Rayburn	Wright
Coughlin	Kearns	Reed, W. Va.	Young
Cramton	Kelley, Mich.	Ricketts

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Raker

NOT VOTING—133.

Ansorge	Frear	Lee, N. Y.	Scott, Mich.
Blakeney	Free	Lineberger	Sears
Bland, Ind.	French	Longworth	Shaw
Boies	Garner	Luhring	Siegel
Bond	Gilbert	McArthur	Slemp
Bowers	Glynn	McClintic	Smith, Mich.
Brand	Goldsborough	Madden	Snell
Brennan	Goodykoontz	Maloney	Sproul
Brooks, Ill.	Gould	Mansfield	Steenerson
Brooks, Pa.	Graham, Pa.	Mead	Stevenson
Burdick	Green, Iowa	Michaelson	Stiness
Cable	Griffin	Mills	Stoll
Cantrill	Haugen	Mondell	Strong, Pa.
Carew	Hawley	Morin	Sullivan
Chandler, N. Y.	Hays	Mudd	Sweet
Chandler, Okla.	Himes	Newton, Mo.	Tague
Clark, Fla.	Huck	O'Brien	Taylor, Ark.
Classon	Husted	Olpp	Taylor, Colo.
Cockran	Hutchinson	Overstreet	Taylor, N. J.
Codd	Johnson, Ky.	Park, Ga.	Ten Eyck
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Paul	Thomas
Copley	Johnson, Wash.	Perkins	Thorpe
Crowther	Jones, Pa.	Porter	Vestal
Cullen	Kahn	Pou	Volk
Dale	Keller	Pringey	Volstead
Davis, Minn.	Kennedy	Rainey, Ala.	Walters
Dempsey	Kiess	Reber	Wheeler
Drane	Kindred	Reed, N. Y.	White, Kans.
Dupré	King	Riddick	Wood, Ind.
Dyer	Kirkpatrick	Rose	Woodyard
Echols	Kitchin	Rossdale	Zihlman
Edmonds	Kleczka	Ryan
Fairchild	Knight	Sabath
Fenn	Lazaro	Schall

So the motion to lay the appeal on the table was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. Mondell with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Newton of Missouri with Mr. Brand.

Mr. Madden with Mr. Stevenson.
Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania with Mr. Dupré.
Mr. Snell with Mr. Cullen.
Mr. Longworth with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.
Mr. Dempsey with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Porter with Mr. Sears.
Mr. Kiess with Mr. Kindred.
Mr. Fenn with Mr. Goldsborough.
Mr. Crowther with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Davis of Minnesota with Mr. Thomas.
Mr. Morin with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Hawley with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.
Mr. Mudd with Mr. Tague.
Mr. Kahn with Mr. Mead.
Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. Raker.
Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Pou.
Mr. Johnson of Washington with Mr. Lazaro.
Mr. Boise with Mr. Carew.
Mr. Lineberger with Mr. McClintic.
Mr. King with Mr. Sabath.
Mr. Edmonds with Mr. Cantrill.
Mr. Olpp with Mr. Sullivan.
Mr. Brennan with Mr. Kitchin.
Mr. Hutchinson with Mr. Park of Georgia.
Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Gilbert.
Mr. Free with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.
Mr. Cable with Mr. Mansfield.
Mr. Cole of Ohio with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.
Mr. Kennedy with Mr. Stoll.
Mr. Perkins with Mr. Cockran.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Overstreet.
Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Griffin.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. CRAMTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. My parliamentary inquiry is this: Is the effect of the motion to lay the appeal on the table to carry with it the resolution itself?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair would like to somewhat modify the ruling that he made. The Chair at the time said that he was of the opinion that the Committee on Rules had the prior right. The Chair, on reflection, is more disposed to think that these are all questions of privilege, that they all stand on the same basis, and that it is entirely a matter of recognition by the Chair. Therefore the Chair thinks it was a matter of recognition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the Chair and the House indulge me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I voted against the motion to lay the appeal on the table, and I did it because I understood the Chair to base his ruling on the proposition that the resolution from the Committee on Rules was a matter of higher privilege. Of course, placing it on the ground of recognition, I can not differ from the Chair on that proposition.

Mr. FISH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that the Speaker stated that he waived the question of recognition in deciding the matter in the first instance?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not use that language, but he stated that he thought the Committee on Rules had the higher privilege.

Mr. FISH. But did not the Speaker state that he waived the question of recognition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees what the gentleman refers to, but the gentleman from New York must have misunderstood the Chair. That was upon a different point.

Mr. MICHENER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand it, this resolution goes back to the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. No; it is before the Judiciary Committee now.

Mr. MICHENER. That is a resolution that has never been called up before the Judiciary Committee. The gentleman from Michigan never mentioned it to me, and I am a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said, I want to say that the action I have taken to-day was no reflection on the Judiciary Committee, and I would have so stated when I had an opportunity in debate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 418. Joint resolution authorizing the use of public parks, reservations, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia; and the use of tents, cots, hospital appliances, flags, and other decorations, property of the United States, by the Almas Temple, Washington, D. C., 1923 Shrine Committee (Inc.), and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan 3,000 wooden folding chairs for the use of the United Confederate Veterans at their reunion to be held in New Orleans, La., on April 11, 12, and 13, 1923.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. FERNALD and Mr. SHEPPARD members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Commerce.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. STERLING and Mr. DIAL members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post Office Department.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. NORRIS and Mr. KENDRICK members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of the Interior.

NAVAL OMNIBUS BILL.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 510 (Rept. No. 1610).

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 4137. After general debate, which shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled between those for and those against the bill, said bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of a point of order House committee amendments recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs now in the bill, and such amendments for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the five-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with the committee amendments and such amendments to the committee amendments as may have been adopted (upon which a separate vote may be demanded), and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution brings before the House for consideration what is known as an omnibus bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. As I got the reading of the rule, nobody can offer an amendment to the bill save the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, that is not what the rule provides. Even the committee can not offer an independent amendment in addition to the committee amendments now on the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Our hands are tied also.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The omnibus bill is made up of a large number of bills considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I understand that the bill as now reported, containing the items that it does contain, has the unanimous report of that committee. It comes here with a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Do I understand that the rule provides that no amendment can be offered to an existing section of the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; it provides that existing sections in the bill may be considered as an original bill under the five-minute rule, and any germane amendment to them is in order.

Mr. CRAMTON. But not the addition of the new items to the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not the addition of new items, or what might be called new sections.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman states as a reason for not permitting amendments that the bill has the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I said nothing of the kind. When I yield to the gentleman, he must not misquote me.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood as his reason that it had the unanimous report of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is a fact, but not in the way the gentleman seems to have understood it.

Mr. BLANTON. A bill came here the other day with the unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary, and made it murder, triable in a Federal court, for anyone to oppose a Federal officer where death ensued.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, that is not a question, and I can not yield further.

Mr. BLANTON. So we have to watch these matters even where they have a unanimous report from a committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution provides for a limit of one hour for general debate, agreed upon by the Committee on Naval Affairs. The resolution is not opposed by anyone that I know of.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The rule, as read by the Clerk, seems to be somewhat different from the rule as printed. Will the gentleman from Kansas explain the effect of the change?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Naval Affairs amended their bill, in order to get a unanimous report from that committee, after this rule had been printed. The rule as read from the desk is the rule that was agreed to by the Committee on Rules. There was stricken from the resolution the words in line 9 "under clause 7 of Rule XVI." Later the words "now in the bill" were placed in the resolution.

Mr. DENISON. I have not the resolution before me, and I would like to have the gentleman state the effect of the change.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The effect of the change will prevent during the consideration of the bill any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any other Member of the House, from offering as an amendment to the bill subject matter that the committee took out of the bill in order to get a unanimous report from the committee—controverted matter not germane to items in the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The bill indicates that it has been reported three times to the House—on January 25, 1923, on February 6, 1923, and again on February 7, 1923. It has been so recommitted, as I understand it, in order that some new claims might be put upon it or some claim taken out.

The rule reported by the gentleman now prevents the House from adding any new items. What does the gentleman think of the advisability to send it back to the committee again? They might find something more that ought to be added or taken out. In other words, is it not a little premature to pass the bill at this time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; as the bill now stands it has the unanimous report of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is an unusual rule in that it limits the power of amendment that may be proposed even by the Committee on Naval Affairs reporting the bill. Ordinarily I do not favor rules of that kind, but the reason for it is this: The Committee on Naval Affairs took a number of subjects and put them into an omnibus bill. They were matters upon which the committee agreed unanimously. If that bill were thrown open to amendment, covering so wide a range of matters as it does cover, almost any proposition that might be offered might be held to be germane to the bill as a whole, and as a result controverted legislation might be proposed at this late stage of the session, which would eliminate the possibility of the Committee on Naval Affairs procuring legislation upon which it is unanimously agreed. For that reason, viewing it in the light of the time when the rule is proposed, within two weeks of the end of the session, I felt willing to agree to the rule which limited the power of amendment of the committee itself. Of course, any gentleman from the floor can offer an amendment to any section of the bill which is germane to that section.

I reserve the remainder of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives, by virtue of its authority and jurisdiction, is naturally the most powerful committee in the House. There is one matter that a great many Members of the House, directly and indirectly, have been endeavoring to secure some action upon by this powerful Committee on Rules for a number of weeks. We are now approaching the end of the present session of Congress. The matter to which I refer has long since passed beyond the stage of being a matter of local or sectional importance, and is now universally recognized as a proposition of very grave national concern, involving a great national policy. I refer to the proposition involving the disposition of the Muscle Shoals power and nitrate plants.

I have remained absolutely silent on this question during this entire session of Congress, although two units of this plant as a whole are located in my district, for the reason that heretofore action upon it was not possible. Great interest has been manifested in the final disposition of this question at this session of Congress not only on this side but by some prominent and leading Members on the majority side of the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] recently have voiced the expression upon this floor that they believed that this great question should be taken up and decided, as far as the House is concerned, at this session of Congress; and I now feel justified in calling upon the chairman of the Committee on Rules on this occasion, and I think that in view of the nature of this proposition and of its importance that he should answer an inquiry and let those of us who are interested in this question now know whether or not it is his purpose or intention to take action upon that problem within the immediate future in the Committee on Rules?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from Alabama know which one of the bills he is in favor of calling up in regard to Muscle Shoals?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I certainly do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Which one is it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I want to know which one of the bills the gentleman from Alabama is in favor of.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in favor of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT], which provides for the unconditional acceptance of the Ford offer.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That bill is not on the calendar.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I state to the gentleman what my private, individual views are upon this question. The chairman of the Committee on Rules ought to give to the House, especially in view of the fact that the acting chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, from which this bill originated, has requested it, a definite answer on this matter. I now ask if it is his individual purpose to give the Rules Committee an opportunity to decide whether or not it will give that matter consideration either upon the McKenzie bill or the Wright bill as a substitute therefor?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, the Rules Committee can always decide matters when it gets ready.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Ah, but the gentleman is evading the question, and he knows it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Rules Committee has already voted on the question once.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With what result?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, well, there is no question about the result.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long has it been since that vote was taken?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Within the last two weeks, I should say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Voted directly on the proposition of whether they would give consideration to this question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was the question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand the gentleman to mean to use that as a precedent for refusing to take up the matter again in the future?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the decision up to the present moment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to violate the proprieties at all——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was a public question. I do not think there was a question about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. At the last meeting of the Committee on Rules——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield the gentleman one minute more. The rule to provide for the consideration of this matter would have been adopted but for the fact that the chairman of the committee declined to lay the rule before the committee for action.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, what does the gentleman from Kansas have to say?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will answer at the proper time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to have an answer now, while I am interrogating the gentleman on this immediate proposal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is another matter before the House. I am representing the responsible majority of this House for legislation. I have reported a rule here for the consideration of a bill unanimously reported by a legislative committee of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I have the floor, and I want to ask the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee yielded me a minute.

The SPEAKER. That time has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining? Does the gentleman want to use the rest of his time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think, however, it is bad practice to introduce extraneous matters in the consideration of a question of agreeing to a rule.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], I would say that it is H. R. 11903 which was reported to the House by the Military Committee on June 5, 1922, introduced by Mr. MCKENZIE, acting chairman of the Military Committee, that we desire to be brought before the House for consideration by a rule from the Committee on Rules. Of course, we would expect the rule to provide for amendments, and it would be in order to offer as a substitute for that bill the bill introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT], which provides for an acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford, as modified and signed on the 31st day of May, 1922.

It is well known to the House that I am in favor of the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford, just as it was made and signed on the date I have just stated. Of course, the McKenzie bill is the only one on the calendar of the House and the only one which has been reported to the House by the Military Committee, and it is a rule on this bill that has been requested of the Rules Committee by the entire membership of the Military Committee, so there should not be any doubt or uncertainty about which bill is desired to be brought before the House for consideration by a rule from the Committee on Rules.

The committee spent five and a half months' time in holding hearings on this subject and reported a bill. There are more people interested in and demanding the consideration of this subject by Congress than any other question pending in Congress. The Ford offer has the indorsement of all the farmers, Mississippi Valley Association, American Legion, and various labor organizations, and they are unable to understand why it is that the people's Representatives in this House can not be allowed to consider and vote upon it. Only a few days ago Mr. MADDEN and Mr. GRAHAM, of Illinois, and Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio, and also Mr. MCKENZIE, of Illinois, all prominent and influential Republican leaders, declared on the floor of the House that the Muscle Shoals legislation should be considered and disposed of at this session. I most earnestly ask and recommend that the Committee on Rules report to the House without further delay a rule providing for the consideration of this question and give us an opportunity to vote upon it. I believe that every fair-minded man will agree that this should be done, whether he is in favor of or opposed to the Ford offer.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I may as well use my time. Sometimes, driven to desperation, we have to introduce these extraneous matters because we can not get them in in any other way. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill upon the calendar which undertakes to dispose of the Muscle Shoals proposition, and that bill includes every proposition included in the Ford offer, except the interests of the Government at the Gorgas steam plant and the transmission line leading to Muscle Shoals.

That bill was introduced by the present acting Republican chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, Mr. MCKENZIE, of Illinois, and was reported out by that committee. The bill has had the support of the gentleman from Illinois on the floor of the House. Its immediate consideration or its early consideration has been advocated by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, in the most powerful and clearest analysis of any financial proposition that has ever been discussed in this Chamber.

The development of Muscle Shoals has been indorsed on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who said, if my memory serves me right, that he would be guided in the main by the conclusions arrived at by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. MADDEN. It has the support of a large majority of the Republican membership of the Military Affairs Committee, which reported it favorably. It has the support, I know, of a large per cent of the Republican membership of this House, and practically the unanimous support of the Democratic membership of the House.

Not only that, but the bill has the support of the agricultural interests of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Canadian line to the Mexican border. It has more support behind it than any other proposition relating to agriculture that has come before this House in many years, or possibly more than any other proposition that ever came before this House.

There is, however, some very strong and powerful opposition to the bill. Let us examine briefly the source of this opposition.

We find the first opposition comes from the Alabama Power Co., an association of southern power companies, and also of the American Cyanamid Co., a Canadian institution. They oppose the measure, in the main, because they realize the efficacy of the contention of Edison and Swan and Doctor Whitney, the representative of the Department of Agriculture who appeared before the committee, that by the process which it is proposed to put into operation and use at Muscle Shoals the price of commercial fertilizer could be reduced to the American farmer by one-half. They are in the fertilizer business or the business of manufacturing ingredients that go into fertilizers.

There are also arrayed against the bill the American manufacturers of fertilizers. Their president, Mr. McDowell, appeared before the committee in opposition to the proposition. But he, by the way, because of his knowledge of the subject and because of his honesty, made a very valuable witness for the Ford proposition before he closed his testimony.

Who else do we find against the proposition? Why, we find the great steel interests of America opposed to it, because it is believed—and I grant there is ground for the belief—that a part of the power derived from Muscle Shoals may be turned into the manufacture of electric-furnace steel. Therefore we have the United States Steel Trust throwing its influence against the Ford proposition.

Another source of opposition comes from the American manufacturers of automobiles, because it is a well-known fact that Ford controls the automobile markets of America.

Still another source of opposition comes from the International Harvester Trust. True, its power is not so great as that of the Steel Trust and the combined efforts of the automobile manufacturers, but it is worth something, possibly a vote in another place in this Capitol. We find them against it because Ford controls the price of farm tractors. When he reduced the price of the Fordson tractor the International Harvester Co. was forced to follow suit.

There are other interests arrayed against the Ford proposal in the United States. One of these is the American Aluminum Co., the former president and leading spirit of which is the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon. That company has a plant about 100 miles above Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River. Mr. Ford will manufacture aluminum at Muscle Shoals for use in his cars and will therefore no longer be a customer of the American Aluminum Co.; hence the opposition of that concern.

In opposition to the Ford proposal also is found the American securities brokers. A representative of a New York brokerage business appeared before the committee in opposition to the Ford offer and in support of the proposition of the Alabama Power Co. He frankly admitted before the committee that in event the Alabama Power Co. should secure a lease on Muscle Shoals that he would hope that his firm would be shown some preference in the handling of the securities. I asked him if he expected to handle any securities for Mr. Ford in the event his offer should be accepted, and he admitted that he did not.

Next in opposition come the American importers of Chilian nitrates who filched from the Government during the war $134,000,000 in excess profits. The very fact of their opposition should strengthen the proposition submitted by Mr. Ford.

And last, but not least, the Newberry element of the Republican Party, who know that it was Henry Ford, who started and caused to be conducted the Federal investigation of the Newberry election scandal in Michigan, which figured more extensively in the repudiation of the Republican Party at the polls in the last election than any other single issue in the campaign. It is fair to say, however, that not all of the Republicans of the country or even of the State of Michigan belong to the Newberry element, which is evidenced by the fact that Michigan elected a Democratic Senator to succeed Senator TOWNSEND, the leader of Newberry's defense in the Senate contest.

These are among the principal opponents of the Ford offer for operation of Muscle Shoals. I have shown who favors the bill for the development of Muscle Shoals, the truck farmers of the East, the grain growers of the Northwest, the fruit growers of the West and South, and the cotton growers of the South; in fact, the farmers of America of every class and section. In addition to them, the consumers of food products stand behind this legislation.

Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], chairman of the Committee on Rules, whose committee has the power to bring the Muscle Shoals proposition before the House and which is devoting its time to the consideration and report of rules making in order bills of little or no importance to the country, what he expects to do with the Muscle Shoals proposition?

Further procrastination on the part of the chairman of the Rules Committee may place him in the position of having his name added to the list of the opponents of the Ford proposition. If he desires to support the cause of the American producers and consumers of food products, he will act without further delay and report this measure to the House. The sentiment among the farmers throughout the United States and among the consumers likewise is unanimously in favor of immediate adoption of this legislation.

Shall the special interests be favored, or shall the agricultural interests of the country be recognized by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and his Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the bill because it is in violation of clause 5 of Rule XXI in a number of particulars which I want to point out to the Speaker.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill is not under discussion.

Mr. BLANTON. The rule provides that the point of order may be made at any time when the bill is up for consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not up for consideration yet.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if the point of order is sustained it would save the time in passing on the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think you can now make a point of order on the bill. You can not tell whether the rule is going to be adopted or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have always been able to use what ability and time I have upon business matters in the House that are immediately before the House for consideration. I would like to have an academic discussion of Muscle Shoals at some time. That is the only thing that a special rule from the Committee on Rules could accomplish, so far as that subject is now concerned. The Committee on Military Affairs is made up of 21 members, and only 2 of them are in favor of the proposition that has been urged here this morning so eloquently by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], so that it would only be introducing an academic question here for a discussion that, it seems to me, we have not time to indulge in at present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; always.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Committee on Rules will bring in a rule for the consideration of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and give this House an opportunity to vote upon substitutes or amendments to that bill, does not the gentleman think we could then have concrete action on the whole question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Rules has power enough, within the proper exercise of its powers. It should in no event become a legislative committee.

The gentleman from Alabama has already referred to the enormous power of that committee. I hope he does not urge us also to become a legislative committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman does not answer my question. He evades it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I evade nothing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think probably in my own good time I shall discuss, and probably in a more pointed way than the gentleman from Alabama would enjoy, the questions involved in the matter in which he expresses so much interest in his district. For the present, the matter under consideration having the unanimous report of the legislative committee interested in it and the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules, I move the previous question and ask for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill is in violation of clause 5 of Rule XXI of this House in the following particulars——

The SPEAKER. In order to bring the bill up, will the gentleman allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to go into Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I believe under the rule I have the authority to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering S. 4137.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 4137) to authorize the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes a point of order against the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Because of the following provisions, which are in violation of clause 5 of Rule XXI. On page 17, line 24, section 17 provides—

That the Paymaster General of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to make reimbursement to any individual, firm, association, company, or corporation for money advanced on behalf of the Government during the late war to any officer or enlisted man of the naval service on account of pay, if upon presentation of evidence satisfactory to himself it is established that such individual, firm, association, company, or corporation has not heretofore received reimbursement in any way for the money so advanced: Provided, That the total amount for the purpose of reimbursement shall not exceed the sum of $35,000.

I submit that that, if passed, will be an authorization for the paymaster to pay out of present appropriations as much as $35,000 for a purpose which is in violation of clause 5 of Rule XXI.

The SPEAKER. That is one of the committee amendments, is it not?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But the committee amendment is made a part of this bill by the rule.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. It becomes a part of the bill by the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Senate bill is in order with committee amendments. One of the committee amendments is what the gentleman has read, and the rule provides that those committee amendments shall be considered without the intervention of a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. As against clause 5 of Rule XXI?

Mr. BUTLER. As against any rule.

The SPEAKER. The rule says as against all points of order.

Mr. BLANTON. There are other parts of the bill that are also in violation of clause 5. If the rule covers them and makes them in order, I do not care to take up any time.

The SPEAKER. It covers all amendments.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, that was the very purpose of having the rule worded in that way.

Mr. BLANTON. Are sections 7 and 8 committee amendments?

The SPEAKER. It is all one amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. A part of the same amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is all one amendment. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Chair puts that motion, shall we have the hour's time divided equally, one half to be controlled by my colleague [Mr. VINSON] and the other half by myself? I am not sure we shall use it, but I ask unanimous consent that the hour may be so divided.

Mr. BLANTON. I for one am against this bill and I want some time to speak against it. Can we be sure of some fair division of the time?

Mr. BUTLER. My friend knows I never ask any man whether he is for or against a proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. But now is the time for us who are against the bill to get our rights.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the hour be equally divided between the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and himself. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. If I can get some time——

Mr. BUTLER. I will give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. VINSON. I will give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 4137.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with for the following reason: There are 23 different subjects in this omnibus bill, and when we reach the sections under the five-minute rule we will be glad to try to answer any questions that may be asked of us.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is recognized for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with my friend from Texas and I agree with the statement made by our friend from Tennessee and all the other gentlemen who have commented upon this rule. It is a little violent. In other words, it brings us to a focus, and we will not be allowed to wander very far in the consideration of the bill.

The Navy Department asked us to report in this bill 65 or 75 different measures. We went through them with the greatest care, taking from them only those provisions upon which we could all agree. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is entirely right. This bill has been here before. It has been here many times, and men who are familiar with naval legislation, like my friend from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], will discover that it is the same sheep in sheep's clothing—a good deal of it. I have argued certain provisions of this bill twice in the House already. They have passed unanimously. They are the first two or three sections of the bill. The first contains five paragraphs. They are intended for the enlisted men of the service which I will endeavor to explain when we get under the five-minute rule. On July 28, 1921, we had considered in this House an omnibus bill. Some of the sections went out on the objection of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], who led the opposition. They were abandoned. Finally the balance of these sections were considered and adopted by the committee down to the last one. Feeling, as we did, that the House was not in favor of increasing the expenses of the ships at that time, the measure was permitted to stand over and did stand over for one year. Then one afternoon I moved that the committee consider the omnibus bill, and they did unanimously vote to pass it on to the Senate. It has remained in the Senate until this time. The Senate added a number of amendments and we have gone through them with great care, some of them we have agreed to, and others we have disagreed to, and they are not here. Some of the provisions of this bill—I should say every provision in this bill—I believe has been recommended by the department. It was our purpose in preparing it to assist the service, as in our judgment the service needed it at this time. There has been no legislation I think for the Navy for two or three years, and therefore we have come to a period when it is absolutely necessary that something should be done in the way of legislation to maintain the service.

Now the first three sections of the bill relate to where men receive $50 or $60 a month, and the pay is being checked against them where they were overpaid by construction of laws by the Comptroller of the United States Treasury. Therefore we feel it is necessary to pass this bill, hoping in the end it will become a law to relieve these men.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I notice on page 18 of the report it states that some of these claims were for the reasons that are embodied in the proposed legislation. It speaks of the Railroad Administration having raised wages and the shops of the Dubuque Boat & Boiler Works. Work had to be increased, with a consequent loss to them. Is it not practically true that every contractor had to go up against the same experience, and if the Government attempts to reimburse in all these cases where is the end going to be?

Mr. BUTLER. I am delighted to have a controversy with the gentleman, because it is always agreeable, but I confess I can not answer his question and I am going to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I thought my friend and I would be entirely in accord.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer the gentleman. We realize that the word "contractor" is like a red flag to a bull in both Houses of Congress. But the bill as now reported has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and instead of applying to contractors in the general sense it applies to shipbuilders. Ninety-nine per cent of the claims affected by this bill are of shipbuilders. In one instance the builders of the battleship Idaho have a million dollars awaiting them in the United States Treasury. The Secretary of the Navy desires to pay this amount to the New York Shipbuilding Co., but the comptroller says that this can not be done, and shipbuilders are powerless to collect; they have no redress under the law. They must come to Congress. Unless this legislation is passed before March 4 next the million dollars awaiting this company in the Treasury can not be paid out even over the Secretary's signature. This is not a contractor's relief bill; it is a shipbuilders' relief bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not know anything about the Idaho case, but it strikes me as unfortunate to give the Navy Department the right to say that because wages are raised in a certain locality the Government should reimburse the contractors.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is correct; but the bill does not confer any special power on the Secretary of the Navy, but authorizes him to make an investigation, and then directs the Secretary to report to Congress through the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VINSON. If the gentleman will yield, I will state that the Secretary is to investigate these claims, and no claim for alleged losses on account of increase of wages can be allowed unless they furnish proof that they have complied with the orders issued by the Macy Board or other governmental boards.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who led the strong opposition to this section of the bill and who is thoroughly familiar with every part of it will agree with me that the teeth have been taken out of it. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] asked that the subject, after being adjudicated in some particulars, should be referred to the proper congressional committee for further examination.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the bill as now reported is in line with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I agreed on as the proper way to proceed. I know that if it is not altered in conference there is no danger in it at all.

Mr. BUTLER. It is certainly very harmless, so harmless it is almost laughable. Nevertheless, we have to make a start. It is impossible, my friends, for us at this time to make any exact estimate. If gentlemen will give me attention, I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Minnesota, who will make a good speech. We have endeavored in every line of this bill to keep in touch with the record that was obtained in Congress in the way of prescribing pay to the officers and the men in the service. And in order that we might accomplish that purpose and not infringe on the rule, we had the advice of seven or eight of the most distinguished men in the service who were able to inform us. We have reported here to the House—at least we have it as a part of our report—the exact case of every one of these provisions, so that we are not attempting to impose upon the House in any way. There is no effort made to do that. It is true that this is sort of a patchwork bill, but it is necessary to take this measure just as you find it in order to get any legislation at all. I would rather see everything fail and go to the winds, be thrown aside, than that one or two sections of the bill should fail. Men of 20 years' service, who volunteered upon the request of the department and left, upon its request, to accept more important duties, to command little ships at war, when they came back and returned to their places have been reported as men of first enlistment and have lost all benefit of their years of service. They are now being checked against; and these are the provisions that I am going to stand for, let come what will to the others.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. With respect to the matter brought up by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON], the gentleman from Pennsylvania will remember that after the war we passed a law known as the Dent law.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; the gentleman voted for it, and so did I.

Mr. McKENZIE. We passed it with a great deal of apprehension.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not.

Mr. McKENZIE. And the abuses that grew out of that law were, of course, something terrific.

Mr. BUTLER. I voted for it cheerfully, because I relied upon my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], and if the bill is a bad one, he is to blame for it and not I.

Mr. McKENZIE. I voted for it although I thought it was a bad bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, I simply followed the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is this bill merely to be a revival of the Dent bill so far as the Navy is concerned?

Mr. BUTLER. No; it is not like it at all. It is not any more like the Dent bill than a goat is like an elephant. I am not enamored of that provision because, as I said, it is so harmless, so childlike, that I think it is practically useless.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman is sure that it will not out-Dent the Dent law?

Mr. BUTLER. They can do nothing more than report the matter to the Budget, and then go to the Committee on Appropriations and that committee may not appropriate anything at all.

Mr. McKENZIE. And still the gentleman is a little suspicious about it.

Mr. BUTLER. It does not accomplish a whole lot, but it is better than nothing.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think it ought to be said to the House that of the 24 provisions in the bill, all have been at one time or another reported to the House by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and every section of the bill has the unanimous approval of that committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and I will supplement what my friend says by saying this: There is no attempt whatever to put anything over on this House. These bills have all been reported at some time and the reports are of record. These are simply the measures that have been hanging on for almost two years and we have put them together in a string, and we are going to ask you to vote for this string as you find it, because you have voted for nearly three-fourths of these cases on other measures before.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this Congress will adjourn within a few days, and its committees and activities, of course, will cease with the life of the Congress. We are appropriating at the present time something like a half billion of dollars annually, which is being disbursed by the Veterans' Bureau. There are now pending before the various committees of the House a large number of resolutions proposing investigations by the House of the activities of the Veterans' Bureau. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], as long ago as September, 1922, introduced such a resolution, and other gentlemen have introduced them, but this House has taken no action and has shown no disposition to go into the affairs of the bureau.

We all know there has been widespread complaint in respect to the activities of the bureau. There has been charges that the purchases of hospitals in some instances and of sites have been very irregular. There have been charges that in the matter of the purchase of supplies there have been irregularities, and there have been wholesale charges of inefficiency and of waste and extravagance in the bureau. My contention is that Congress does not perform all of its duties when it merely appropriates a half billion dollars for this work. Its duty goes further and requires that so far as possible Congress shall see to it that such activities are properly administered.

A short time ago Colonel Forbes, the director of the bureau, went to Europe. It was given out that his visit to Europe had nothing to do with a prospective resignation. Prior to his going there had been a great deal of rumor about a prospective shake-up in the Veterans' Bureau. After he reached Europe the White House gave out a statement that it was probable that Colonel Forbes, upon his return, would find his health in such condition that he would feel it necessary to resign from the directorship of the bureau.

When he went to Europe it was stated that he had no intention of resigning, but after having visited Europe for his health it then became apparent to the White House that he would probably resign upon his return, and to-day's press dispatches carry a report that Director Forbes has resigned by cable.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. How long did he have his health treated in Europe before he decided to resign or to telegraph his resignation?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am sorry that I can not give the gentleman that exact information, but the rumor prior to his going that there was to be a shake-up in the bureau, then his going to Europe and the subsequent report from the White House that he intended to resign on account of his health when he returned, and now his actual resignation, if true, all bear an apparent relationship to each other. There must be some reason for his resignation.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not for a moment. There must be something the matter with the colonel's health or something the matter with the health of the bureau. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like to know if the gentleman has any charges that he wants to make against the management of this bureau under Colonel Forbes, and if he has, why does he not state them?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am not appearing as a prosecutor. I do not know——

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentleman is appearing as the mouthpiece of the discontent against that bureau.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I shall yield to the gentleman when I want to yield, and if the gentleman insists on my yielding when I do not want to yield, I will have to invoke the rules of the House. No; I do not know because if I knew absolutely I would go and lay them before the grand jury of the District of Columbia or in whatever district the proper jurisdiction might lie, but I am not unwilling that Congress shall hear the facts, and I have introduced a resolution providing for a joint inquiry by the Senate and the House during the recess, and Congress through that committee will have plenty of time to investigate the bureau. The joint resolution will have the force of a statute, but a resolution of this House will die when this House goes out of session on the 4th day of March.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me one more minute?

Mr. VINSON. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Now, gentlemen, let me ask the gentleman from Iowa, who seems unduly disturbed about the desire to investigate, Why is the gentleman from Iowa so much disturbed? If there is nothing wrong in the bureau or out of the bureau, the gentleman from Iowa ought not to wince at an investigation of the bureau. We are the ones who are responsible; we are responsible to the people of the United States, and I do not want this House to sit here and let the Senate conduct an ex parte investigation by a committee of two Senators, which will go out of existence on the 4th day of March, and then let it go out to the world that the bureau has been investigated. But the investigation ought to be conducted by both Houses, because we are the Representatives here of the people, and this House ought not to shirk its responsibility always and let the Senate do things alone that ought to be done by the Congress. I believe this matter ought to be gone into when the committee of Congress has the time, because it will then have the time to properly do this work, and if there is something wrong we shall know it, and if there is nothing wrong we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that there is nothing wrong. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. VINSON. I also yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, under the rule which we have adopted and the rules of the House, not a single Member of Congress, besides the committee, will be able to change one word of this bill proposed——

Mr. HICKS. Oh, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not a single amendment will be permitted to be offered from the floor by a Member of Congress who is not on this committee.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute, I have not the time now.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman wants to make a fair statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman offer an amendment under the rule?

Mr. HICKS. Why, certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman——

Mr. HICKS. Why, certainly, I have two or three to offer.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee can.

Mr. HICKS. Anybody can.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, in my judgment, the rule restricts otherwise.

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will read the rule he will find that it does not speak otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to my friend I have these amendments to offer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to vote for such rules as long as I am a Member of Congress, and I think I will be here for a while——

Mr. KNUTSON. I hope so.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to vote for any rule such as the one which just passed this House, and I am not going to vote for any piece of legislation that is made in order by any such restrictive rule as long as I am a Member of the House. I am not going to vote to make of myself and my colleagues mere rubber stamps——

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Or open-mouthed mocking birds which have to swallow everything that the committee sticks down our throats. I regret I can not yield. I have not the time. I am not going to gag and hog tie myself in any such way.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. You may vote for such rules if you want to, but I am going to reserve to myself the right to pass upon legislation for which I am held responsible to the people of my district and to the country.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will not yield to the gentleman because I have not the time.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman has time to interpret the rule correctly, and the gentleman has not the right to interpret it incorrectly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio must not interrupt without the permission of the Member speaking. The gentleman from Ohio is out of order.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let the gentleman tell what the rule is.

Mr. FIELDS. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is nobody around here who interprets the rule that way, and I want the gentleman to interpret the rule the way the rule is framed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is out of order and will take his seat.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chairman will not take all these interruptions out of my time, if you please.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the Chairman of the Committee on Rules, when presenting this rule for passage, stated from the floor several times, "Why, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs." That should be sufficient! His intimation was that it being a unanimous report from a committee, it should be accepted as all sufficient and perfect by the membership of the House without investigation and consideration.

I have learned something about "unanimous reports" from committees since I have been in Congress. I have learned that we can not always accept them. That is why I investigate them all for myself. Why, just the other day here in the House, there was brought before us for passage on unanimous consent day, from the Unanimous-Consent Calendar, when bills are sometimes passed in three minutes time, a bill from the great Committee on the Judiciary, a committee of lawyers and judges, who are presumed to know the law, and are presumed not to bring any proposed law before us for passage that is ridiculous. The gentleman from Kansas, with equal propriety, could have then arisen and said: "This bill has a unanimous report from the committee," for in fact it did have a unanimous report from the great Committee on the Judiciary. Yet the bill was ridiculous, for it provided that should any citizen engage in an altercation with a Federal agent or officer, and such Federal agent or officer should die, such citizen was guilty of murder, and should be tried and punished for murder in a Federal court, regardless of the facts or circumstances. It did not require any of the ingredients of murder to be connected with the altercation, such as is required by the laws of every State in the Union. It did not require malice aforethought, express or implied. It did not require premeditation. It did not require a design to kill. But if some Federal agent went to the home of some citizen, wholly unknown to such citizen, and told such citizen that he was an officer, and then by insults or unwarranted conduct exasperated such citizen to engage in an altercation with him, and death ensued to such officer, such citizen would have been guilty of murder, by the provisions of such bill recommended for passage by a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary. And if it had not been for my objection, which I made, or the objection from some other Member, that bill might have passed under unanimous consent, without any argument, just by merely reading it and passing it, Members not knowing anything about it. That is the way lots of bills pass that become the law of the land.

It pays to watch these bills. That is why I take time to watch them. That is why I spend hours in my office at night looking into bills that may come up, affecting the interests of the people.

This bill contains 21 pages. Do you know what it proposes? It proposes to increase the cost of the battleship Colorado $600,000 of the people's money. It proposes to increase the cost of the scout cruisers Nos. 9 and 10, $150,000 of the people's money. It proposes to increase the cost of the destroyer tender No. 3, $1,500,000 of the people's money. It proposes to increase the expense that we are to go on our 13 capital ships, naming them, to the extent of $6,500,000. To be exact, so that I may not be unfair in any way, let me quote these provisions from the bill, to wit:

TO INCREASE THE AUTHORIZED COST OF CERTAIN VESSELS NOW BUILDING FOR THE NAVY.

SEC. 7. That the limits of cost of the vessels heretofore authorized and herein below enumerated are increased as follows: Battleship Colorado, from $17,000,000 to $17,600,000; scout cruisers numbered 9 and 10, from $8,250,000 to $8,400,000 each; and destroyer tender numbered 3, from $3,400,000 to $4,500,000.

REPAIRS AND CHANGES TO CAPITAL SHIPS.

SEC. 8. That the restrictions contained in the acts of March 2, 1907, and August 29, 1916, as to the amount that may be expended for repairs and changes to capital ships shall not apply to such sums as the Congress may from time to time appropriate for modernization, by increasing the elevation and range of turret guns, of the following-named battleships: Florida, Utah, Arkansas, Wyoming, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Oklahoma, Nevada, New York, Texas, Mississippi, Idaho, and New Mexico: Provided, That the cost of such increase in the elevation and range of such turret guns shall not exceed the sum of $6,500,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Is that carrying out your idea of the reduction of armaments which is understood to be the policy of our Government? Are you in favor of thus wasting additional money on battleships which may soon be scrapped and become worthless?

I would like to help out our friends who belong to these shipbuilding corporations. I see our amiable and likable friend, the manager of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, in the gallery now. I think as much of him as you gentlemen do. I would like to help out his corporation to the extent of some of these millions if it were not taking it out of the pockets of the tax-burdened people of this land.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will my friend yield for one short question?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not time to yield, I regret to say. I want to tell you something about your bill, your 21-page omnibus bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. Unfortunately the gentleman does not understand the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I like the gentleman from Illinois. I am with him on many propositions. And while we now disagree I am still smiling at him. [Laughter.] I think that I understand the English language. Let me show you another provision here in this bill. Here is the kind of a bill that is brought in under a rule where we shall not be permitted to change the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." Here under the head of "United States Navy Band," now stationed at the navy yard, Washington, is this provision:

That hereafter the band now stationed at the navy yard, Washington, D. C., and known as the Navy Yard Band shall be designated as the United States Navy Band, and the leader of this band shall receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy.

And then it provides for a lot of other salaries.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that question, on the band question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio can not interrupt the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. To be exact, I want to quote this section from the bill, to wit:

UNITED STATES NAVY BAND.

SEC. 22. That hereafter the band now stationed at the navy yard, Washington, D. C., and known as the Navy Yard Band, shall be designated as the United States Navy Band, and the leader of this band shall receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy: Provided, That all service as an enlisted man in the naval service shall be counted in computing longevity increases for pay of this leader: Provided further, That no back pay or allowances shall be allowed to this leader by reason of the passage of this act: And provided further, That hereafter during concert tours approved by the President members of the United States Navy Band shall suffer no loss of allowances.

In what way are the people of the United States, who are now heavily tax burdened, interested in paying the salaries and expenses of a United States Navy Band to make concert tours over the United States under the direction of the President? The people now are more concerned about getting coal during this prolonged blizzard.

But now let me quote from the bill the provision about the Marine Band. This provision in the bill is as follows:

MARINE BAND.

SEC. 14. That the band of the United States Marine Corps shall consist of 1 leader whose pay and allowances shall be those of a captain in the Marine Corps; 1 second leader whose pay shall be $200 per month and who shall have the allowances of a sergeant major; 10 principal musicians whose pay shall be $150 per month; 25 first-class musicians whose pay shall be $125 per month; 20 second-class musicians whose pay shall be $100 per month; and 10 third-class musicians whose pay shall be $85 per month; such musicians of the band to have the allowances of a sergeant: Provided, That the second leader and musicians of the band shall receive the same increases for length of service and the same enlistment allowance or gratuity for reenlisting as is now or may hereafter be provided for other enlisted men of the Marine Corps: Provided further, That the pay authorized herein for the second leader and the musicians of the band shall be effective from July 1, 1922, and shall apply in computing the pay of former members of the band now on the retired list: Provided further, That in the event of promotion of the second leader, or a musician of the band to leader of the band, all service as such second leader, or as such musician of the band, or both, shall be counted in computing longevity increase in pay: And provided further, That hereafter during concert tours approved by the President, members of the Marine Band shall suffer no loss of allowances.

This is the society band.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. It is the band to which distinguished reference was made in noted correspondence out to the Northwest a short time ago; the band that furnishes music at the big receptions in Washington for the high society leaders in this country; and your people in Oklahoma, MANUEL, are paying the bills. [Laughter.] I am not in favor of any such legislation coming before this House under special rule.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I love my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEPHENS. Are you not in favor of music?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, if I were the music of the gentleman would make me sick. [Laughter.] I have all the confidence in the world in my good friend from Pennsylvania, and——

Mr. BUTLER. I would not do anything to break it——

Mr. BLANTON. I would do anything in the world personally to please him. But he is so kind-hearted that when these fellows come before his committee to raise the pay of this high-society band he can not turn them down. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, turning all this noise aside, if you pass this bill the members of the band will receive less money than they ever did. This is the old figure that the comptroller ruled out.

Mr. BLANTON. My friend will not deny that this is the society band in Washington?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether it is or not. I am not a member of society, except the great, big, human society.

Mr. BLANTON. But this is the band that plays for the receptions at the White House?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; it does; and good music, too.

Mr. BLANTON. And for the receptions of the Cabinet officers and the receptions of Members of the House and Senate when they have their receptions here in Washington.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to yield to my friend from California.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I want to ask the gentleman what kind of music does he think the White House ought to have? Should they just tie a tin can to Laddie Boy's tail and run him around the lawn? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of having music there when the President wants it, and letting the President pay for it out of the $75,000 and other big allowances that the people pay him every year.

Mr. STEPHENS. Have they not had that music ever since the Constitution was adopted and the Government was founded, or is this anything new?

Mr. BLANTON. I love insistence. I love a man to be persistent, and therefore I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is the establishing of this band a new matter, or has it been in existence ever since the Government was founded?

Mr. BLANTON. This is so important that you have to let our friend PHIL in the closing days of the session, as an important service, bring in a bill of this kind under rule. This is the crowning effort of PHIL's life. If he can just pass such legislation as this, he will go home to Kansas feeling like his service here has been worth while.

Mr. BRITTEN. Now, will my friend yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me one-half minute?

Mr. BUTLER. If I have it I will. I do not see how I can divide time which I have not got. I will ask the Chair how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Eleven minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I will give the gentleman one-half minute out of that, because I have promised to yield 10 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. BRITTEN. I thank the gentleman. For the benefit of the House, because many Members come and go during a debate of this kind, I should like to suggest to my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that I am sure he always tries to be fair. When he refers to the New York Shipbuilding Co. and the building of the battleship Idaho, I should like to say to him that I hold in my hand a copy of a telegram from the Secretary of the Navy to the New York Shipbuilding Co. sent during the war, telling that company to "Expedite the completion of the battleship Idaho and we will pay you for any increases in cost of construction. The shipbuilding company is directed to submit increases to the department for approval." The increase amounted to about $1,000,000. Congress appropriated that money. It is lying in the Treasury. Is not the gentleman from Texas desirous of having that money go to the contractors, where it belongs, under conditions of that kind?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. VINSON. I also yield to him five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, several days ago the press carried a statement that there is a food shortage of over 2,500,000 tons in Europe and owing to the unrest and disturbed conditions prevailing on that continent the countries where the shortage is most acute can not go into the markets of the world and replenish their larders. The military operations now being conducted by France is primarily responsible for our failure to dispose of the large surplus stocks of foodstuffs which we have on hand. Millions of bushels of potatoes were allowed to rot in the ground last fall because there was no market for them. Our farmers were compelled to sell their crops last year for considerably below the cost of production. All this because our European markets have been largely destroyed, and there can be no ground to hope for an improvement until certain countries in Europe go to work instead of sitting around waiting for impossible reparations.

I make these preliminary observations to show that we are vitally interested in the welfare and stability of Europe and that we should no longer remain indifferent to what is going on over there if we are to retain a semblance of prosperity in this country.

The subjects of reparations and the invasion of the Ruhr are two burning topics at present. In the January issue of the Forum appeared a very sane and thoughtful article by Dr. Henry W. Temple entitled, "The reparations crisis," from which I quote:

Three things have brought Europe to the verge of economic ruin: The loss of man power and of capital during the four years of war, certain crushing and unworkable provisions of the peace treaty, and the continuing fears and jealousies of governments and peoples which have perpetuated old hatreds and created new ones. It is true that the present crisis arises out of the differences of opinion between the British Government and the French Government concerning Germany's willingness or ability to meet the reparations payments and the measures that ought to be taken to collect from the unwilling or bankrupt debtor.

Now let us see what Doctor Temple says about what Germany had paid to the Allies up to December 31, 1920:

On January 23, 1921, the Reparation Commission issued a statement showing that prior to December 31, 1920, Germany had delivered, in payment of the preliminary 20,000,000,000 gold marks, the following ships and commodities:

Coal, estimated at 17,818,840 tons; sulphate of ammonia, 19,000 tons; steamers, sailing vessels, and trawlers, 2,054,729 tons gross; river craft and material, 38,730 tons; live stock, 360,176 beasts; seeds, 6,882,588 kilos; dyes and dyestuffs, 10,787,827 kilos; pharmaceutical products, 57,823 kilos; rolling stock (locomotives), 4,571; rolling stock (freight cars), 129,555; motor lorries, 5,000; railway material, 140,000 tons; agricultural machinery, machines, and implements, 131,505. In addition, the commission's statement showed that Germany had delivered the submarine cables under German control, of which only those privately owned were to be credited to reparations. The statement of the Reparation Commission further said that the list did not include certain other deliveries for which figures were not yet completely determined. In addition to these deliveries there were others not to be credited to the payment of the 20,000,000,000 gold marks, but which were in the nature of restitutions to France and Belgium for agricultural material, industrial material, locomotives, and freight cars to compensate for those seized by Germany in territory belonging to France and Belgium.

Conflicting estimates were placed upon the value of the payments in kind, but there is no doubt that they fell far short of the 20,000,000,000 gold marks required.

Let me say, by way of digression, that in traveling from Berlin to Cologne I did not see a single cow, and the children of Germany are undernourished for the want of milk. The Allies have taken their cows from them.

In fact about everything that has been produced in Germany since the time of the armistice has been taken away from them. When I was over there they could not operate all of their factories because they did not have coal enough. The Allies were taking two-thirds of the coal that was produced.

Doctor Temple estimates that the total value of reparations paid by Germany is less than 20,000,000,000 gold marks. I have here before me a statement prepared by the German Embassy which shows that Germany has paid to date in round figures about 40,000,000,000 gold marks. And then they talk about her being an unwilling debtor.

Mr. NORTON. That would be about $10,000,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; that would be about $10,000,000,000. I will insert the figures furnished by the embassy.

DETAILED STATEMENT PREPARED BY THE GERMAN EMBASSY OF REPARATION PAYMENTS AND DELIVERIES MADE BY GERMANY UP TO MAY 1, 1922.

I. Delivery of property, etc., existing at time of conclusion of peace:
1. Property of Reich and States in Germany and abroad	Gold marks. 4,710,000,000
2. Saar mines	1,100,000,000
3. Cables	85,500,000
4. Goods left behind in territories formerly occupied by German armies	3,000,000,000
5. Railroad material delivered under the armistice	1,626,000,000
6. Merchant marine	7,310,300,000
7. River boats	78,000,000
8. Shares of Morokkau States Bank	650,000
9. German property liquidated in allied countries	11,700,000,000
10. Transfer of German claims against former allies of Germany	7,000,000,000
		36,610,450,000
II. Deliveries of goods produced after conclusion of peace:	Gold marks.
1. Coal, coke, and by-products	475,000,000
2. Dyestuffs and chemical-pharmaceutic products	44,000,000
3. Animals	104,000,000
4. Deliveries for reconstruction of devastated regions	30,000,000
		630,000,000
III. Cash payments:
1. For redemption of scrap material (arms, munitions, engines, etc., destroyed under treaty)	26,000,000
2. Diversa	10,000,000
		36,000,000
Total		37,299,450,000

REPARATION PAYMENTS MADE BY GERMANY AFTER MAY 1, 1922, UNTIL JULY 31, 1922.

	Gold marks.
1. Cash payments	1,498,950,000

(One billion four hundred and forty-six million payments in foreign valuta; payments in consequence of recovery act, 52,000,000; diversa, 950,000.)

	Gold marks.
2. Delivery in kind	1,194,000,000

(Railroad material in ceded territories, 501,500,000; river boats, 32,000,000; animals, 86,500,000; coal, coke, and by-products, 409,000,000; dyestuffs and chemical-pharmaceutic products, 23,000,000; reconstruction deliveries for devastated regions, 100,000,000; deliveries under recovery act, 42,000,000.)

PAYMENTS OTHER THAN REPARATION PAYMENTS MADE BY GERMANY UNDER THE VERSAILLES TREATY SINCE THE ARMISTICE UNTIL JULY 31, 1922.

	Paper marks.
1. Clearing payments	22,411,000,000
2. Occupation army	14,000,000,000
3. Interallied commissions	2,900,000,000
4. Restitutions and substitutions (animals, engines, and other material, delivery of war material)	6,340,000,000
5. Guaranty payments to guaranty committee	8,375,000,000
	49,026,000,000

On May 10, 1921, Germany, under pressure, accepted the estimate made by the Reparations Commission of the additional reparations which the commission fixed at the sum of 132,000,000,000 gold marks (about $33,000,000,000).

That all of the Allies do not approve of the Ruhr invasion is proven by the following from the same article:

Of the proposal to occupy the Ruhr Valley the British Prime Minister said to the House of Commons: "We can not look with equanimity upon any action which seems to us likely or which we believe will have the effect not of producing reparations but making them more difficult to get, perhaps making them impossible altogether." The Prime Minister continued: "I believe, and think that almost everyone believes, that the terrible trouble in Europe is that there is no hope of any solution unless France and we get together. I am perfectly sure of this, and I and the Government which I represent will be acting according to the wishes of the whole nation if we make clear that the difference is more serious than a difference between Governments. The difference likely to arise is the difference between the public opinion of two countries, and we are looking from the point of view of maintaining good relations. That makes it more dangerous than if the only question were the difference of opinion between individuals and Governments, and that is the reason, I am sure, we at home and the French Government will utilize the time that still remains to try to find some common method to deal with this problem."

Continuing, Doctor Temple says:

The British Premier recognizes that the German Government has allowed a tremendous inflation of its currency to take place, which has the effect in itself of making it impossible for Germany to meet any claims for reparations. He says also that the French go further and say that this was deliberately done by Germany, but he adds: "Honestly, I can not, myself, take that view; and this is the reason: It is perfectly true that by that method of passive resistance they can avoid forever paying any indemnity, but it only means what is very like suicide for Germany. I can hardly believe that any sane government would deliberately adopt that course."

And mark further these words by Doctor Temple:

Even in this statement of the differences between his own opinion and that of the French Government we may observe some progress toward agreement. It is only a few weeks ago that many persons in France and even observant travelers in Germany were divided in opinion as to whether Germany was unable to pay or was really prosperous.

How true is this observation by Doctor Temple:

Payment of immense sums by one nation to another, whether in reparation for war damages or for credit upon war loans, can not be made at once. They must be waited for with long patience. This sum owed by Germany is larger than the total owed to the United States by the 20 European nations. If the victors, who among them have already received from Germany more than 1,000,000,000 gold marks and the several billion marks in value represented by the payments in kind mentioned above, are unable to pay even the interest on eleven and one-half billions, it would appear reasonable that Germany may be unable to pay any large part of the reparations, amounting to a still greater sum. It will be generally recognized in America that there would be no injustice in collecting from Germany the whole of the 132,000,000,000 of gold marks ($33,000,000,000), named by the Reparation Commission as necessary to cover the damage for which Germany is responsible, if collection were possible. But if attempts at immediate collection by force would precipitate ruin that would affect not only Germany but western Europe and America as well, then it is to be devoutly wished that the conference adjourned at London because of disagreement between France and Great Britain may be resumed later with better hope of reasonable adjustment.

Prior to the war Germany was one of our best customers. In 1913 we exported to her goods and raw materials in excess of $350,000,000. She would again assume that rôle were she given a fair opportunity to engage in manufacture and commerce. That she should rebuild the devastated regions and pay a reasonable reparation for the damage which she wrought no sane man would deny, but when the terms imposed upon her by the victors in the treaty of Versailles are far beyond her ability to pay, she is justified in proclaiming her inability to meet the imposed obligations. Mr. Boyden, the American observer in Europe, has stated his belief that the terms are impossible for Germany to meet; likewise has the British member of the Reparation Commission so declared. These men are both financial and economic experts; indeed, Mr. Boyden, who was first appointed by the late Wilson administration, has shown such a wonderful grasp of the situation in Europe that he is being continued on by President Harding.

All who have studied the situation in Europe must be agreed that the time has come for us to break our long and inexplicable silence. We have every right to speak our opinion at this time. We played a very important part in the winning of the war. Without us it is doubtful if the Allies could have won. It was our man power and almost inexhaustible wealth and resources in necessary materials that made victory for the Allies possible.

In a message delivered to a joint session of Congress President Wilson stated that we were not fighting the German people but the German military machine and the reigning family. That statement found a responsive echo in the breasts of the American people. The Hohenzollerns have been driven from the country and the mighty German military machine has been utterly destroyed, yet there is not peace. France feigns fear that somewhere in Germany there are vast stores of armament and munitions ready for instant use for another war, yet we have been assured by the several allied commissions which had charge of the transfer of war materials after the war that everything has been delivered up. Many eminent military men are agreed that the next war will be fought and settled in the air, yet Germany has not a single airplane suitable for that purpose, while France has to-day by far the largest number of military airplanes of any nation on earth. The cold fact is that France is seeking to dismember the German Republic and render it not only harmless from a military standpoint but also economically. The world knows this, and France is not deceiving anyone but herself. It is the birth rate in Germany that is worrying France. Fifty years ago both countries had about 38,000,000 souls each. To-day Germany has 68,000,000, while France has about the same number as in 1870. There is the crux of the whole thing. France would prefer to have Germany remain in default of her reparation payments so that she may continue to have a semblance of an excuse for occupying the Ruhr, without which Germany will sink into helplessness and her people into economic slavery. Do we, the American people, want to see this happen? I think not, and if I am not mistaken the foreign policy of this country will be a very important issue in the campaign of next year.

Did we go to war to break down a vast and menacing military machine only to have another set up in its place? I think not; yet France had on September 1 a standing army of 750,000 men, all armed to the hilt. Her 1923 budget calls for an army of 690,000. A disarmed and defenseless nation has been invaded with all the severity and rigor of unadulterated militarism. Of the allied powers that cooperated to render Germany helpless, Great Britain alone has protested. How much longer will we stand aside and permit our sacred pledges and promises made prior to the armistice to be ruthlessly violated?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I can not yield. I have only a little time left. The American people are good sportsmen, and do not sympathize with the rapacious and underhanded diplomacy now being carried on in Europe, and some day the Europeans will be made to realize it.

From the signing of the armistice France has been doing everything in her power to goad and crush the pride of the German people. She sent thousands of Senegalese, Arab, and other African troops into occupied Germany, and the crimes and outrages that these brutes committed would cause a feeling of revolt among the American people did they but know. Last fall the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] upon his return from a trip to Europe intimated that these troops had been removed. At that time I challenged his statement. The Adjutant General's office informs me that there are about 20,000 African troops now on the Rhine. A press dispatch contained in the Washington Star for January 28 reads in part—I read:

> The same dispatches report considerable recklessness on the part of the French Algerian cavalry since a state of siege was proclaimed—at Treves—the cavalrymen riding through the streets at breakneck speed and menacing civilians.

Far be it from me to attempt to justify the acts committed by the Germans during the war, but I will say that every fiendish act performed by them probably has its parallel in other wars for which the Germans were in no way responsible. If my memory serves me correctly, France instigated and encouraged the Thirty Years' War, which laid Germany in waste from one end to the other and reduced her population from 18,000,000 souls to less than one-half. Was it not the French who under Napoleon marched from one end of Europe to the other, killing, looting, burning, and outraging? Was it not the British who during the Napoleonic war sailed into the harbor of Copenhagen and destroyed the Danish fleet at a time when that small and weak country was neutral? Did not the English also establish a blockade about Norway in 1812 when she feared that Napoleon would return from his Russian campaign by way of the Scandinavian peninsula, and did not several hundred thousand Norwegians die of starvation as a result of that blockade—and was not Norway strictly a neutral country at the time? Was it not the British who took captives of war during the Indian mutiny and tied them in front of the muzzles of cannon and blew them to pieces? Did not General Sheridan make his boast that when he got through with the Shenandoah Valley a crow would have to carry its rations in flying across that fair territory? Did not General Sherman lay waste a strip of country some 30 miles wide in his march to the sea? Did not the South have its Andersonville and Libby prisons? Was it not France who invited the leading powers of Europe to intervene in behalf of the Confederacy when we were striving with might and main to preserve the Union, and did not she take advantage of our stress to set up a monarchy in Mexico in violation of the Monroe doctrine? Worst of all, did not the Belgians commit the most inhuman atrocities upon the people of the Kongo, who were utterly helpless, and was it not necessary for the great powers to protest their actions and demand that they cease?

I am not criticizing any of these acts. All of them may have been necessary for military reasons. I merely refer to them to show that other peoples in other wars also have used methods which do not conform to our ideas of civilization. War is what General Sherman said it was.

When I was a boy back in the early nineties all national political campaigns were predicated upon the Civil War, and politicians went about the country waving the bloody shirt and inflaming the public mind at a time when all sober and thinking people were trying to bind up the wounds of that tragic conflict. For 30 years these men kept themselves in power by appealing to the baser in men's nature. I dare say the same methods were employed in Southern States.

We must continue to live together in this old world of ours for an indefinite period, and how much better it would be for all of us if those who seek to keep open the wounds of war were relegated to the rear. It is water that has gone over the wheel and there is nothing to be gained by continual appeal to the hates and prejudices of mankind.

Mr. Chairman, the United States of America comes nearer to enjoying the confidence of the European countries than any other nation. In that position a sacred duty rests upon us. We should immediately call the great powers of the earth together in Washington for an economic conference and a commission should be appointed by that conference to determine just what Germany can pay and yet keep going. We must not permit her to be destroyed. Her people are of the great Nordic race, and when the inevitable hour comes when the white and yellow races come to a death grapple for supremacy a strong and virile Germany will be of inestimable assistance—yea, she will be indispensable.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, in order that I may separate myself entirely from the views expressed by the gentleman who has just made this speech [Mr. KNUTSON], I wish to say that I yielded to him 10 minutes, and he was entitled to that time. I did not know on what subject he was about to speak, because I never ask a gentleman that, but I want to say here and now that I do not in any way agree with him. [Applause.] My sympathies are all with France, and I want to see France collect the money that Germany owes her, as France in 1873 willingly paid her indemnity to Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I occupy the same position as that occupied by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. I, too, yielded to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] five minutes, but my sympathy is entirely with France. On the battlefields of France the blood of my brother was spilled, and under no condition is my sympathy with Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I am sorry that I have not the time.

Mr. Chairman, as stated by the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the Senate bill now under consideration, with the various committee amendments, has been given most careful consideration and after hearings of many weeks the committee unanimously indorses and supports this bill.

As the bill has been on the calendar only for a few days, and probably in the rush of time many Members who desire to do so may not have had an opportunity to carefully investigate the various amendments and to read the hearings, therefore in the time allotted to me I shall in a brief manner discuss a few of these sections so when they are reached under the five-minute rule the Members will be fully cognizant of what they are.

Section 1 of the bill merely authorizes the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard.

Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 have heretofore passed the House but failed to receive consideration in the Senate, therefore I will not at this time discuss these various sections.

Section 7 provides for the increased cost of construction of the battleship Colorado from $17,000,000 to $17,600,000, and for the increased cost of two scout cruisers Nos. 9 and 10, known as the Concord and Richmond, from $8,250,000 to $8,400,000 each; and the increased cost of destroyer tender, known as the Dobbin, from $3,400,000 to $4,500,000. This section merely makes in order an appropriation for the increased cost of these vessels.

The battleship Colorado is a part of the 1916 building program and one of the ships under construction that the conference and treaty permitted to be completed. The contract was made in January, 1917, at an authorized cost of $13,380,000. To speed up the construction during the war, in July, 1917, the original form of the contract as awarded was changed to that of a cost-plus 10 per cent contract. By various acts of Congress the authorized cost has been increased from $13,380,000 to $17,000,000. Up to February 1 there had been expended under the contract $16,400,000, and at the present rate of progress the Navy Department advised the committee that the expenditure of $17,000,000, the present limit of cost, will be reached in either April or May of this year. On January 1 the Colorado was 95 per cent completed, and it is the expectation of the department if granted this additional cost of construction to have the ship completed by September.

Now, the thought will naturally occur as to the reason for this increased cost of $600,000. To quote the language of Assistant Secretary Roosevelt:

> The reason why it is necessary to increase the limit of cost comes, roughly, under two heads: The principal head is the fact that it is being built under a cost-plus contract, and not under a fixed-sum contract. * * * Last year the fullest appropriations were not available to push all the vessels at top speed, and, furthermore, the shipyards themselves had very little work. We had to reduce the direct moneys spent for labor because we did not have them, and the indirect cost does not reduce proportionately; in other words, when you slow down a little on construction work your overhead does not come down proportionately with the slowing down of the work, the result being that the total expense on account of the vessel builds up or augments. The best illustration I can give of what I mean is this: We appeared before the Committee on Appropriations to discuss our desire for an increased appropriation to be used in constructing the scout cruisers, and we explained to them that if we only had the sum designated we would have to continue the work on those scout cruisers at one-third of the normal rate of progress, and on account of the reasons I have given you, if we should continue the work at one-third the normal rate of progress those scout cruisers will cost approximately $1,000,000 more when completed.
>
> Now, the reason why the cost of the Colorado has gone up this additional $600,000 is in main due to the fact that we have had to slow down to a certain extent, and to the fact that there was no other work in the yard, added to the fact that it was a cost-plus contract. Those things have run the cost of the Colorado up, and the same thing generally applies to scout cruisers 9 and 10. * * *

The construction is continuing under the terms of the cost-plus contract. However, there has been a change in between there from a cost-plus 10 per cent contract to a cost-plus fixed-fee contract. The cost-plus 10 per cent contract was changed in 1920 to cost plus a fixed fee, which was $1,350,000. By the change from the cost-plus 10 per cent contract to the cost plus a fixed-fee contract there has been a saving of $410,000.

The $17,000,000, the now authorized cost, will be expended by April or May of this year, and the ship is 95 per cent completed. It would be folly on the part of Congress to withhold the additional appropriation of $600,000 needed to complete the ship. We have now invested in the ship $17,000,000, and if this authorization does not go through, work on the Colorado will cease and it will have to stand in status quo until Congress does supply the additional money to complete it.

Therefore, from a business standpoint there is but one thing to do, and that is to authorize the appropriation of the money to complete the ship. What is said with reference to the Colorado is equally true in regard to the scout cruisers and the destroyer tender.

Under the law as provided for in the acts of 1907 and 1916, the department is restricted in making changes or repairs to an expenditure of not over $300,000.

Section 8 is for the purpose of removing that restriction in one particular only, and that is in the increasing of the elevation and range of the turret guns on 13 of the capital ships.

It is estimated that it will cost approximately $500,000 to increase the range of the turret guns on each of the 13 ships, and this section is an authorization for an appropriation of $6,500,000 for that work. The elevation of the turret guns is now 15° and it is proposed to raise the elevation to 30°.

The Colorado and West Virginia are still to be completed, and the California, Tennessee, and Maryland are now in service. Being new ships, there is no modernization required on them, but it is essential on the 13 other ships that this modernization be authorized. However, there are a great many things in addition to the elevation of the turret guns necessary to be done to modernize the ships to put them on an equality with the vessels of other nations that participated in the Washington conference.

It will be necessary later on to require additional deck protection against airplane bombs; they also require additional submarine protection in the form of blisters—that is, additional steel plates laid along the side below the water line with a certain air space between them and the hull of the vessels. They require that as a protection against torpedoes. Most of these things which I have enumerated have already been done on the British ships and are being done on the Japanese ships. They are entirely within the purview of the provisions of the treaty.

The changes with reference to the blisters for torpedo protection and the sheathing of the deck against aero bombs is not contemplated at this time, but later on these additions must be added to the ships to place them on an equal parity with the ships of Japan and Great Britain.

The department has not estimated the amount it will ultimately cost for this work. At this time it is of the utmost importance that our capital ships should be placed on an equality with other navies in the strength of individual ships with reference to elevation of the guns, which elevation does not contravene the terms of the treaty.

The increased elevation is not a change in the general type of mounting but merely a modification of existing mounts which will permit the elevation and range of 13 of our ships to be made similar to that which the 5 new ships now have, thereby increasing the fleet range from 22,000 yards to 32,000 yards.

It is incumbent upon us to devote our energy toward maintaining all of our vessels in the highest state of efficiency, and to do so it is imperative that the range of the entire fleet be increased.

If funds become available at this session of Congress, it is estimated that material for the first three vessels can be assembled by November of this year, that material for three other vessels will be assembled three months later, and that material for three other vessels will be assembled and ready for installation by November 1, 1924.

It is estimated that the work to be done on each vessel can be completed during the time allowed for its regular overhaul.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that had we carried out the 1916 building program as laid down, we would have had 15 of the finest ships that ever could sail the sea; they would have been absolutely perfect in every detail; they would have been ships of the latest design and the latest improved methods and equaled by no ships in the world. But these ships by the Washington conference were ordered to be scrapped, and it is essential that we modernize the capital ships that we agreed to keep, though they had been in commission for a great many years, and endeavor to place them, ship for ship, as far as possible, on an equality with those of either Great Britain or Japan.

Four of our capital ships—the Florida, Utah, Wyoming, and Arizona—have 12-inch guns; 11 of our capital ships have 14-inch guns; 3 of the capital ships have 16-inch guns.

Five of the British ships have 13½-inch guns; 13 of the British ships have 15-inch guns. Four of the battle cruisers of Japan have 14-inch guns, 2 battleships have 16-inch guns, and 5 battleships have 14-inch guns.

For one, I feel that if Congress should fail to authorize this modernization of the ships which we have agreed to keep we would be derelict in our duty, for at all times the American Navy must be kept up to the highest point of efficiency, and it is of vital importance that they be kept on an equal footing with those of the nations that agreed to the limitation of armament.

Section 10 provides a new method of promotion, elimination, and retirement of officers of the Marine Corps. Both the Army and Navy have already by legislation adopted some system of eliminating the inefficient. In the Army it has been accomplished by classifying all officers in various grades and relegating them to the retired list on a graded rate of pay.

In the Navy promotion by selection has been in effect since August 29, 1916, this system being combined with an age and grade retirement. The Staff Corps of the Navy has had a system of promotion by selection since July 4, 1918. The Marine Corps still adheres to the system of examination adopted on July 28, 1892.

There are four qualifications for promotion—mental, moral, physical, and professional.

The examining board, in accordance with the law as it now stands, has two alternatives—one is to promote and the other is to dismiss.

The basis of the proposed section is to permit the examining board instead of two alternatives the third alternative of retiring officers in the grade they occupy when they come up for promotion and gives the board the right to simply pass the less efficient over.

The Marine Corps in presenting this section has taken three things under careful consideration. The first object of the bill is to promote the efficiency of the Marine Corps; the second thing is that the corps does not want to adopt an expensive system; they always keep in mind economy. The third, they did not want to adopt a system that would do injustice to an individual.

The less efficient officer, who fails of promotion, provided he has served over 10 years, will be kept in his grade until he reaches a certain age, at which time he will be retired.

An officer may successfully pass the examination, mentally, physically, and morally, but before he is entitled to promotion the board that examines him must certify that there is sufficient evidence that the officer is fully qualified professionally. In determining his professional qualifications his service record is taken into consideration; that is, the daily reports, the method by which he handles his troops, and his qualification for leadership, and so forth.

They have in the Marine Corps a large number of officers who have served as enlisted men. This proposed measure will equitably protect them. In other words, if they are unable to pass the examination they will not be kicked out; they will stay in their present grade and be placed on a retired list when they reach a certain age. These officers rendered valuable service to the country during the World War. When the war came on the commandant of the Marine Corps went over the list of noncommissioned officers who had served long and faithfully and gave them commissions. Many of them may not have had the advantage of education and might not be able to pass the examination, and if the law of 1892 is still adhered to there would be but two alternatives—either promote or dismiss—but under this proposed law if they could not pass the examination for advancement they will remain in their grade if they have served over 10 years.

Under the law to-day when an officer is found unfit professionally he has the right to appear before the examining board. Under this proposed section that right is denied him, for the reason that it is the intention of the Marine Corps to have a central board to conduct the examinations, and the central board will have before it the service record of the officer, which on its face will disclose his professional qualifications, but if the officer is found morally unfit he still has the right under the act of 1892 as well as this proposed law to appear before the board in person.

The retiring age is 50 years for lieutenant colonels, 45 years for majors, captains, and first and second lieutenants.

If an officer who has had less than 10 years' service fails to be promoted after he has had two examinations, he is honorably discharged from the service with one year's pay, but if the officer has had over 10 years' service and has been examined twice and each time failed to pass, he is not dismissed from the service but holds his present grade and is retired upon reaching a certain age, with 2½ per cent for each year of total active service, not to exceed 75 per cent.

There is another phase of this to which I desire to call your attention—that is, with regard to the heads of staff departments. The present law, with regard to the heads of the staff departments, requires that all appointments shall be made for a term of four years from the colonels of the department concerned. The number of permanent officers in these staff corps is rapidly decreasing. At the present time there are two colonels in the adjutant and inspector's department, two colonels in the examining department, and one colonel in the paymaster department. If a vacancy should occur in any of these departments, the President's opportunity for choice would be very limited. In the paymaster department he would have no alternative. He would have to appoint one man whether that man is qualified or not. Even though that officer be not qualified, the President under the existing law would have to appoint him.

In the case of two colonels, it might be that neither was qualified, but the President would have to appoint one of them.

This proposed section authorizes a board of officers, consisting of the major general commandant of the Marine Corps, the heads of the three staff departments, and one other general officer, to establish an eligible list for the staff department. This board would make up a list of all officers holding permanent commissions in the different staff departments. If it happened that none of them was eligible, then it would make a list from the line officers or other staff officers of the Marine Corps, and from this eligible list the President would make his appointment.

Section 11 provides for the relief of contractors, subcontractors, and material men who have sustained losses by reason of some Government orders. At the outset I am cognizant of the fact that whenever legislation of this character has heretofore been brought before the House for consideration it has met with strenuous opposition.

There can be no doubt that a certain amount of prejudice has grown up in the House against legislation for the relief of any kind of contractors who sustained losses on account of Government orders or for any other reason during the war. In my opinion, a certain amount of that prejudice has been engendered due to the fact that heretofore we have delegated to various departments full settlement of the claims, but nowhere in this section has the Secretary of the Navy or anyone acting for him authority to settle any claims that might be filed in accordance with this section. Congress retains absolutely for itself full and complete jurisdiction over the claims.

Now let us briefly see what is provided for by this legislation for the relief of contractors. During the war, from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, certain acts done and certain orders issued by various Government agencies caused losses to contractors, subcontractors, and material men in the performance of fixed-price contracts with the Navy Department that were entered into during said period or prior to the declaration of war for fulfillment after the date we entered the war. I want to emphasize and impress this fact upon you, that this section does not seek to legalize informal contracts. It only applies to contracts, legal in form, entered into by the Navy Department with the various contractors. Nor does the section authorize any appropriation whatsoever for the liquidation of any contract; it merely authorizes an investigation of the claim. Any contractor, subcontractor, or material man who in the performance of a fixed-price contract with the Navy Department sustained a loss, occasioned by certain orders and under certain conditions to which I will hereafter call your attention, is permitted by this section, provided the claimant meets with certain requirements, to have his claim investigated by the Secretary.

All that the Secretary can do is to make investigations in accordance with the various provisions of this section and make a report, through the Director of the Budget, of his proceedings and findings to Congress for appropriation on or before January 2, 1924.

The claim must be filed in writing and verified under oath within six months after the passage of this bill.

In determining the loss on any contract entered into prior to April 6, 1917, the Secretary can only investigate such part of the uncompleted contract as was affected by the interference of the Government or some Government agent.

If the claim is for alleged losses based on account of increase in wages, before the Secretary can consider it it must be established by proof to his satisfaction that the contractor complied with the orders issued by the Macy Board or other Government boards and actually paid his employees the award ordered by said board.

The Secretary is precluded from considering any claim on account of losses that will, taken together with the claimant's net profit on his entire volume of business on account of contracts with the Government during the period mentioned, make claimant's net profit exceed 6 per cent of such volume of business.

The Secretary can not consider any claim under which the prime contractor shall have given a full, final, qualified or unqualified release to the Government. He shall have the right to summon witnesses and examine them on oath and to examine the income-tax return of the claimant.

Therefore you can readily see that all necessary safeguard has been provided for the protection of the Government in considering these claims. The Secretary is given a right to waive the claim of the Government for liquidated damages whereby the delays were occasioned by some governmental order or governmental agency.

This section is so drafted that the Secretary of the Navy is empowered to do nothing more than ascertain and report to Congress the facts bearing on the merits of the claim, and Congress is left free, without any obligation having been imposed on the Government, to decide for itself upon the merits of each and every case presented and determine whether any reimbursement should be made to the claimants; and if so, how much in every case.

In view of the limitations placed in this bill, there are but few claims that can be considered, for no contractor who has given a qualified receipt to the Government can have his claim considered.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer to the Treasury Department, for the use of the Coast Guard, such vessel or vessels of the Navy, with their outfits and armaments, as can be spared by the Navy and as are adapted to the use of the Coast Guard.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 2, after the word "Navy," insert the words "not exceeding three in number."

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word as to the committee amendment. This first section of the bill has not only the indorsement of but is asked for by the Treasury and Navy Departments. It happens that the Navy has 50 or 60 mine layers and mine sweepers the majority of which are not in actual commission. On the other hand, the Coast Guard has need each year, on an average, of about one additional vessel to replace those which are wearing out. They have at the present time some 26 vessels that can go to sea. The request was made for authority to allow the Navy to transfer to the Coast Guard from time to time such vessels as might be available for which they might have need. The Coast Guard has appropriation, however, only sufficient to utilize not more than one additional vessel, and rather than provide, on the one hand, an indefinite authority which might continue it years in the future without returning to Congress for authority, and in order, on the other hand, to avoid the necessity of obliging them to come immediately to Congress in case a particular vessel was destroyed, or an additional vessel was needed in an emergency, the arrangement was made to restrict the number of vessels which can be transferred from the Navy to the Coast Guard to a number not exceeding three, which under all conditions would provide all the Coast Guard may need for the next three years.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment, for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee whether the Coast Guard made any specific request of the Navy for any certain number of vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. The Coast Guard is very desirous of having transferred to its service a boat called the Red Wing. We do not know anything about her except that she is 1 of 60 boats now tied up, many of them rusting and rotting. It will cost the Coast Guard from $500,000 to $700,000 to build the kind of boat they want, and the Coast Guard wants this particular Red Wing and perhaps one or two more of the same kind. The Coast Guard needs a boat or two which will cost from $500,000 to $700,000 to build, and this will cost them nothing except a trifle under $20,000 to put in repair. It was thought that we were making good use of Government property in authorizing the transfer. We had some discussion in respect to the number. The bill came to us from the Senate without limitation as to number, and some of us thought that we better limit it to three boats, and therefore we limited it to three boats.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not understand that the Coast Guard asked unlimited authority.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; the Coast Guard was satisfied with one boat.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is my understanding from consultation with members of either the Coast Guard or the Navy some two years ago that the Coast Guard could make very efficient use of some of the mine-sweeping vessels that are not being used by the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. That is it exactly, and this is one of them.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If that is the case and the vessels are not in use by the Navy, why should they not be turned over to the Coast Guard?

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. We have given them two more than they have asked for. They want only one at the present time; they have appropriation for only one, and could make use of one, and we have given them three, which in the ordinary course of time will make for two additional replacements in the coming years.

Mr. HICKS. The reason we limited it to three vessels is so the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Congress will have a check upon the vessels being transferred out of the Navy Department.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But the Coast Guard could take care of these vessels every bit as well as the Navy.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. We desire to be liberal with the Coast Guard and gave them three instead of the one they asked for.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is what I wanted to inquire about. I stand with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] in his regard for the Coast Guard.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, our affection for it is very strong.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And if they had requested more than three I should want to see them get them.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. They asked for only one, and we gave them three.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with what the gentleman says in regard to our admiration for the Coast Guard. One reason why the Coast Guard can not use more than the number we have given is because their appropriations will not permit of it.

Mr. BRIGGS. They were thoroughly satisfied with the allotment made in the bill.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The Coast Guard is thoroughly satisfied. The Coast Guard comes to us knowing that the latchstring is always out, because we think very much of the Coast Guard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Some of us did not know the uses to which these boats were to be put, and, therefore, as the gentleman can well imagine some questions were asked and that information was elicited.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the Navy turn over these ships or a single ship in a navigable condition?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes. It will require perhaps some $15,000 to $20,000 to put the ship in perfect condition for the Coast Guard's use. These are mine sweepers and they will have to be refitted to a certain extent. Otherwise the boats are in fine condition.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And that will be done by the Navy?

Mr. BUTLER. That will be done. They have the appropriation and do not want any money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the second committee amendment by section.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL RESERVE.

SEC. 2. That all men transferred from the regular Navy to the Fleet Naval Reserve, who have heretofore reenlisted or may hereafter reenlist in the Navy, shall, from the date of reenlistment, be credited with pay at the same rate, exclusive of retainer pay, that they were receiving when on active duty in the Navy as members of the Fleet Naval Reserve prior to date of reenlistment in the Navy, and shall be required to serve under their reenlistment only such time as added to the time served in the enlistment in which serving when transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve and the time of active service in the Navy while members of the Fleet Naval Reserve shall equal four years, when they shall be entitled to be discharged by reason of expiration of enlistment.

That any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who has been discharged to enable him to be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve as a commissioned or warrant officer, and who has heretofore reenlisted in the Navy or who may hereafter reenlist in the Navy within four months from the date of termination of his service as an officer in the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve, shall be restored to the grade, rank, or rating held by him at time of discharge from the Navy to permit enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve, and he shall be entitled from the date he has heretofore so reenlisted, or may hereafter reenlist, to the same rate of pay, including subsequent increases therein, as he was receiving at time of discharge from the Navy to permit enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and shall be required to serve under such reenlistment only for such time as, added to the unexpired portion of the enlistment from which discharged and his active service in the Naval Reserve Force, shall equal four years, when he shall be entitled to be discharged by reason of expiration of enlistment.

That any member of the Fleet Naval Reserve, transferred thereto after 16 or 20 years' service in the Navy, who has heretofore been discharged therefrom to accept temporary appointment as an officer in the Regular Navy shall, upon the revocation of temporary appointment as an officer, be deemed to have reverted to his former status in the Fleet Naval Reserve, and shall be entitled to retainer pay at the same rate he was receiving prior to discharge from the Fleet Naval Reserve from the date he is herein deemed to have reverted to his former status therein: Provided, That reenlistment in the Navy following revocation of temporary appointment as an officer shall not deprive him of the benefits of this section and he shall be entitled to receive the pay, including retainer pay, authorized for members of the Fleet Naval Reserve when on active duty during the period served under enlistment.

That enlisted men of the Navy who were discharged at expiration of enlistment and had completed 16 or 20 years' service at time of discharge, and were thereafter enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force and assigned provisional rank as warrant or commissioned officers, shall be deemed to have been transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve on date of discharge from the Navy, and then to have been transferred to the class of the Naval Reserve Force in which they were given provisional assignment as warrant or commissioned officers: Provided, That they shall be entitled to receive the same pay, allowances, and other benefits from and after the date said transfer to the Fleet Naval Reserve is herein deemed to have been made as is provided by law for men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve.

That any enlisted man who was discharged from the Navy to enable him to be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force in a commissioned rank, who was thereafter at his own request reduced to the same rating in the Naval Reserve Force as held by him at the time of his discharge from the Navy, and transferred to the regular Navy to serve the unexpired portion of his enrollment, in accordance with the act approved July 11, 1919, shall be entitled, from the date he was so transferred and so long as he shall continue in the naval service, to the same rate of pay and other benefits that would have been received by him if he had not been discharged from the Navy to permit enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer one or two amendments to these paragraphs. I move to amend, on page 2, line 9, by striking out the words "or may hereafter reenlist."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 2, line 9, after the word "enlisted," strike out the words "or may hereafter reenlist."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I presume the reading of these sections conveys very little, if anything, to the membership as to what they really are. We have wrestled with the matter day after day and hour after hour. We have gone over the matter and all we can do is to depend upon the men in whom we have great confidence, tell them what we want done, and have them write the provision. These five paragraphs read to you, forming section 2, have one object and one only, and that is to restore the enlisted force of the Navy to the place that the enlisted force had when it was transferred at different periods during the war. Some of these enlisted men who have been for 16 or 20 years in the service were taken and given temporary rank elsewhere, and Congress provided within a few months after the expiration of the war that they should lose their temporary rank and go back to the grades they once held.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. The result has been—in one minute I will yield—that many of these men have lost all the advantage they have had under the law in what is known as longevity pay. That is practically all there is in these five paragraphs—it puts them back where they were. They have been checked against, some of these poor fellows, for two years, or since the decision of 1919 and 1921, and it is almost impossible for some of them to get a living out of it. The bill was introduced three years ago. We wrote the legislation two years ago and it remained unpassed up to this hour. This House did its duty, in my judgment, and passed with considerable promptness the legislation almost one year ago, and we ask that the committee put these sections in this bill so that in the event the bill becomes a law these enlisted men may have proper care taken of them.

Mr. HICKS. If the chairman will yield one moment to me——

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I think probably it will help the committee if he will make the statement that these provisions he is now referring to passed this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union almost a year ago, and we are now rehashing the same thing.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; it is the third time I have endeavored to explain them. Three times have I spoken in ignorance. We had the assistance of eight men in whom we had the greatest confidence—experts—and among them the gentleman who sits here by me. There is no better in the United States than John Pugh in reference to these matters of legislation. It must be written just so it will get by, to use the ordinary expression, the Comptroller General, and therefore they have to be written in sentences which to me have no verbs in them and no subject, but they do mean something, and they mean exactly what they are intended to mean. Now, in reference to anybody asking a question, I propose to go very slowly, because I do not know whether I shall speak truthfully if I do; but you passed this twice before unanimously and agreed it was right, and we all agreed that we should take care of these men. This Navy ran up from a few hundred thousand to five or six hundred thousand. We did not have the officers. We went down to these warrant officers, in whom I have taken great interest all my life. It was hoped that they may reach the warrant grades, but they were advanced to take places on small boats and sent out, and when they returned to their places they found the chairs were there to sit in but the table was empty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to have two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I just wish to suggest to my good friend from Pennsylvania that if he will explain to the members of this committee the distinction or difference between the Naval Reserve Force and what we call the Naval Reserve officer, we might have a chance to understand some of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. My good friend, I do not know anything about the laws of the Medes and Persians, but I will endeavor to tell you. There are six of these classes. We know under certain conditions where men are transferred in the regular service. They were in those classes when the war broke out. We took them from the particular classes and put them in the regular service, and then we promoted them to be officers, first and second lieutenants, as the gentleman understands it, in the Army; and then when the war was over we asked them to step back to the places provided for them, and they went back and they found they had lost their longevity, and we endeavored to cover them by these paragraphs. This first paragraph covers 150 men; the second paragraph covers 200 men; and the third, fourth, and fifth—well, the fourth two cases and the fifth one case, and it is necessary to have all this writing in order to provide for these enlisted men.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; if I can be as successful as I was in answering the other.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that a man who has served in the Navy for three or four or five or six years and goes out of the Navy he may join the Naval Reserve Force?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Either as an enlisted man or as an officer in the naval force; he could go into the Naval Reserve, but he must have either 16 years or 20 years——

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. If he has had 16 years he will be retired on one-third pay, and if he had 20 years he is retired under this reserve on half pay.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right.

Mr. STEPHENS. The real distinction is that in the Naval Reserve they are not retired and in the Fleet Naval Reserve they are all retired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have five minutes more. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. If these men have served 16 years they are entitled, as my friend says, to go into the Naval Reserve. They are men on the seacoast, and under the law of 1916 they are permitted to go into the Fleet Reserve. If they have served 16 years they are entitled to a certain portion of that pay. They have gone back into civil life; yes, but with a rope on. In one hour you can bring those men back and put them on the ships. They are old men, but they are of long experience, so valuable that it can not be computed. If they served 20 years they will get one-half of the pay they were receiving, and under immediate call they must come back in the same class.

In the Naval Reserve it is different. Some of these men get but $1 a month. Perhaps that has been repealed. But the only class of those reserves that draw substantial sums of money are those old fellows who have served 16 years. These are the men to whom you go while they are in civil life and ask them to come back into the Navy. They come back into the regular service as enlisted men, as before, and then they find themselves without any place. In many instances they have been held to have been men of first enlistment only. That is not fair.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I presume the gentleman is familiar with the decision by the Comptroller General of the United States, given under date of August 7, 1922, in reference to the retainer pay of members of the Navy transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve prior to July 1, 1922?

Mr. BUTLER. I will be pleased if my friend will tell me what it means.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] is more familiar than any of us with the pay bill, the act of June 10, 1922. In that act it was sought to provide that the members of the Navy who had been transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve should be entitled to the pay now being received, as was the language of the act. Does this bill do anything to cure the effect of the decision of the Comptroller General of August 7, 1922, when he held that that did not mean what it said, but meant something different?

Mr. BUTLER. He said it meant something different, and we propose to make it right; we propose that the compensation they should receive is the compensation they were entitled to when they went into the other service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The pay being received is the pay Congress intended them to receive at the time the act went into effect?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say this: That the joint committee on the service pay bill felt that we did not have jurisdiction to change the law affecting the Fleet Naval Reserve. Therefore we simply enacted the pay bill without undertaking in any way to revise the law on the Fleet Naval Reserve. But it does not follow that I do not feel that the law ought to be revised, but we can not do it in this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did not that act of June 10, 1922, provide that these transferred members of the Navy to the Fleet Naval Reserve should receive the pay now being received by them?

Mr. McKENZIE. It was not intended to disturb them in any way.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then can the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] tell me whether that situation is reached by this amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. It was the decision of the comptroller to which the gentleman refers that added a great deal of confusion here. The very question the gentleman asked me we have asked of the people who wrote this measure and the men who have criticized it, and the men who have offered it have made some amendments in it that will cover the case to which the gentleman refers.

Furthermore, we are assured by the officers of the Navy, who are so anxious to have this done for the men—and they are always kind and good to the men—that if these five paragraphs are passed as they are, it will restore everything to these men that they had when they were transferred to different branches of the service. That is all they ask. And furthermore, it was provided in this bill, in the preparation of which our friend from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] had an important part, that the pay of these people should not be reduced, and therefore it was held by the comptroller in the decision that a conflict had occurred between the pay bill and the act of Congress, and therefore they were not entitled to the pay. I repeat, if you pass these five paragraphs I believe it will remedy the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I have another amendment to offer.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I gather from a hurried reading of the section and from the committee report that these men to whom the section refers, because of the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, have lost the benefits accruing to them by reason of their long service, on account of having accepted positions during the war in which they rendered more valuable service to the Government for the period of the war than they would have rendered in the places that they occupied prior to the war and at the beginning of the war.

Mr. BUTLER. You are right.

Mr. FIELDS. If I am not right in my construction, I would be glad to be corrected.

The Navy was built up very rapidly to meet the military needs of the country. Necessarily the department was forced to turn in every direction, to exhaust every available resource to find men of experience and training to fill the places of greater responsibility. Here were men who had rendered many years of service in their respective grades or ranks, and because of the experience gained during these years of service they were able to render more valuable service in more advanced positions than in the positions they were then filling. I imagine they would have been regarded as unpatriotic had they failed to respond to the calls of the Government to assume greater responsibilities for which their long service had fitted them. But by doing that and by a subsequent ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury they are now deprived of the benefits earned by them by reason of their long service. That is a most unfortunate situation in which to place them. It would be most unfair for the Congress to refuse or fail to correct that condition.

I have observed, Mr. Chairman, that it is not difficult for the man away up on the high rungs of the ladder to have disabilities removed or inequities corrected that are detrimental to him, but it sometimes happens, and too often, I fear, in the rush of legislative matters, that the man down at the bottom or, to use the phrase common in the English language, "the under dog" is forgotten. This is a provision which undertakes to restore the rights of the under man, and I congratulate the chairman of the Naval Committee and his committee on bringing this matter before the House in an effort to correct this injustice to these patriotic men who rendered valuable service before the war and more valuable service during the war by accepting these advanced positions which separated them from their former positions, from which they are to-day separated. The bill ought to be enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 2, line 10, after the word "pay," insert the following: "including subsequent increases therein."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 2, line 13, after the word "Navy," change the comma to a period and strike out the language beginning with the word "and" down to and including line 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 2, lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "or who may hereafter reenlist in the Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 3, line 9, after the word "force," change the comma to a period and strike out the language beginning with the word "and" down to and including line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 4, line 9, after the word "force," insert the following: "Within four months from date of discharge from the Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to the provision at the bottom of page 3:

Provided, That reenlistment in the Navy following revocation of temporary appointment as an officer shall not deprive him of the benefits of this section, and he shall be entitled to receive the pay, including retainer pay, authorized for members of the Fleet Naval Reserve when on active duty during the period served under enlistment.

Does not that mean that he will receive double pay?

Mr. BUTLER. No; it does not. The gentleman ought to know that I would not be in favor of anything like that. Will the gentleman please give me the page and line?

Mr. HULL. At the bottom of page 3, the provision beginning in line 25.

Mr. BUTLER. It says:

Provided, That reenlistment in the Navy following revocation of temporary appointment as an officer shall not deprive him—

That is, where he goes back and reenlists—

shall not deprive him of the benefits of this section, and he shall be entitled to receive the pay, including retainer pay, authorized for members of the Fleet Naval Reserve when on active duty during the period served under enlistment.

I do not believe the language is absolutely necessary, because I think he would get it anyhow, but it was written in there so as to make sure he would be entitled to the provisions of the act.

Mr. HULL. Would the gentleman object to striking out that language? I think it means double pay.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the gentleman will not ask to have it stricken out. It does not in any way increase the pay of the men. I would have to go and consult the authorities and sit down and reflect for some time before I would consent to have the language stricken out of the bill, language which I have been assured is absolutely necessary so that they may pass the comptroller the next time.

Mr. HULL. I am perfectly honest about this; I think it means that you will pay them twice.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, then, this bill some time or other will go to conference. It may be this year and it may be next year, and it may not be before the gentleman and I are dead, but if it goes to conference while I am alive and one of the conferees I will not forget the question which the gentleman has put to me; and if it does do what the gentleman says, I will ask the conferees to take it out.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I take it that this proviso is needed to take care of men in the Fleet Naval Reserve who are appointed temporary officers, and when the revocation of the appointments come they go back into the Naval Reserve. If they serve as officers, they ought not to be deprived of the benefit of this section.

Mr. HULL. I am sure it goes a good deal further than that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think not; it simply puts the temporary officer before he goes back to the fleet naval service in the same position as the others.

Mr. HICKS. I believe there are about 20 men affected by this provision.

Mr. HULL. I understand that there are only two or three; but, anyhow, they ought not to receive double pay.

Mr. HICKS. They are not going to get double pay.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement? I want to call attention to the words in line 4, page 4, "when on active duty during the period served under enlistment." As I understand that, it means members of the Fleet Naval Reserve.

Mr. BRITTEN. During the time of their reenlistment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. After their reenlistment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. I am not going to move to strike it out, but I do want to call attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that, in my opinion, that language will mean double pay. I know the committee does not want to provide for double pay, but on the assurance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that in the future some time he will analyze the language and see that it is corrected if it does provide for double pay I will let the matter go as it is. But I am pretty sure I am right.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: On page 5, line 4, before the words "the same," insert the word "meaning," and after the word "same," insert the words "thing, though different," so that the amendment will read "meaning the same thing, though different."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, sometimes things apparently different mean the same thing. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio, my colleague, Mr. STEPHENS, and myself apparently were at a divergence of opinion and yet both of our positions meant the same thing.

This amendment we are now considering follows the first eight lines of the bill. All that is left of the Senate bill are those eight lines. This one is the first section of the House amendment and runs from the top of page 2 to the middle of page 5, and yet it is a part of one amendment. I took the position that no man in this House would be able to change this bill by amendment—that is, no Member not on this committee. My good friend from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS] took issue and said that the rule permitted amendments. So it does, but the other rules of the House will preclude us fellows from amending it. He was right as to the specific language of the rule. Under the rules of the House the chairman has charge of the debate under the five-minute rule. The only amendment that can be offered to each part of the committee amendment must be germane to that part of the amendment. It must not change the purpose of the committee. It must not change the purpose of that committee amendment. It must be germane to the bill and to that part of the amendment.

My good friend from Pennsylvania, while he will permit me to offer a pro forma amendment to explain my position, if I offer a substantial amendment or attempt to do it, as a good chairman of the committee, if he knew I was going to do that, he would get up and after he had spoken five minutes—and he is entitled to recognition first and offers an amendment and speaks to it—another member of the committee then speaks to it. There has been 10 minutes debate on it and he gets up and exercises the right under the rules of the House to move to close debate.

Who can stop it? Nobody. He would summon to his help the membership of the 170 Republican majority and could pass everything over.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield? I know he wants to be fair.

Mr. BLANTON. While the gentleman from Ohio and I were at apparent divergence, yet we both meant practically the same thing.

Mr. HICKS. As a matter of fact, the rule of germaneness pertains to all amendments offered to any bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but I want to tell the gentleman something. A lot of propositions are put into this bill that are absolutely unrelated to each other. There is no continuity between them. It is just a bunch of bills put into an omnibus bill, and they are read by sections, though all are parts of one committee amendment. We take them up seriatim. The chairman is in charge of the whole matter, and we have no chance on earth to change it. There are three different sections to this bill in direct disaccord with the rules of the House, and I could have stopped consideration of the bill under ordinary circumstances by reason of that fact, but because of the rule that we adopted they are made in order and we have to accept them and consider them. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], always honest and frank, said: "Yes; but this was the only way to pass this bill." He admitted that it is a very stringent rule, that it cuts us down pretty tight, but said that they were going to force it down just this one time because they want to get the bill passed. That is about the substance of what he said. I do not blame him a bit if he wants it passed in that way, but I do not believe in passing legislation in that way. I want to see every man in the House stand on an equal footing, with a right to be heard, with a right to place the stamp of his personal approval or disapproval upon any measure, and the right to stand up when he does not think it right and to tell you why. You can not do that under the rule, because I am sure that if we attempted to do anything of that kind my good friend would move to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] frequently makes extravagant statements, but I think I have never known him to be so absolutely wrong as he is about this rule. In the first place, the first part of the rule simply makes in order the consideration of this bill under the regular rules of the House. The necessity for the second paragraph, that it shall be in order to consider without the intervention of a point of order under clause 7 of Rule XVI, and so forth, as in the original bill, is to protect the House from the individual Member, like my good friend from Texas, who always takes advantage whenever he can and objects to a matter on a point of order, because it is not in order, because it is not germane to the whole bill. If gentlemen will read section 7 of Rule XVI they will find that that is exactly what it does:

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert; and no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

All this rule does is to preclude the individual from making a point of order to committee amendments because they are not germane to the main title of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, that part of the rule has been stricken out.

Mr. BEGG. I understand, but that is the only purpose of this part of the rule.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this entire discussion is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained; and the gentlemen will proceed in order.

Mr. BEGG. I have said all that I want to say upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offered is but a pro forma amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHARGE OF DESERTION.

SEC. 3. That in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President that a commissioned or warrant officer or an enlisted man with the charge of desertion now standing against him on the rolls and records of the Navy or Marine Corps has since such charge was entered served honorably in the war with the German Government, either in the military or naval forces of the Allies or in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or in other branches of the military service of the United States prior to November 11, 1918, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cause an entry to be made on said rolls and records of the Navy or Marine Corps, relieving said officer or enlisted man of all the disabilities which he had heretofore or would hereafter suffer by virtue of said charge of desertion thus appearing against him; and upon such action being taken by the President such officer or enlisted man shall be regarded as having been honorably discharged on the date the charge of desertion was entered against him: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall operate to entitle any officer or enlisted man to back pay or allowances of any kind.

Mr. McPHERSON rose.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that Mr. McPHERSON is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs and is entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. It is a matter of recognition in the hands of the presiding officer.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to be entirely civil to the Chair, but will the Chair permit me to make an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield for that purpose?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, I did not know that the gentleman from Kentucky has been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: Page 5, line 13, after the word "Corps" insert "or any officer or enlisted man of the Army of the United States with the charge of desertion standing against him on the rolls and records of the Army."

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to strike out the paragraph at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is a perfecting amendment and takes precedence of that motion.

Mr. VINSON. Why could not the gentleman just insert the word "Army"?

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, this refers only to those with the charge of desertion standing against them on the records and rolls of the Navy or the Marine Corps and, therefore, I must get my amendment in the form in which it is in order to complete it. Mr. Chairman, without referring to the merits of the section as drawn, I believe every Member of the House will agree with me that if we are to remove the disabilities of the men who are charged with desertion upon the records and rolls of the Navy and the Marine Corps, who later rendered service in the World War, the same section should likewise apply to men against whom the charge of desertion stands on the records and rolls of the Army and who afterwards served in the World War. If my amendment should be rejected the House would be making fish of one and fowl of the other. If my amendment should be rejected, the House would be taking the position that the men who deserted from the Navy are better than those who deserted from the Army, or that the men who deserted from the Army should not be entitled to the same privileges given to the men who deserted from the Navy.

I realize that the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, is surrendering some of its jurisdiction by one of its members offering this amendment from the floor, but there is no jealousy with me in respect to the jurisdiction of my committee when justice to human beings is involved. I would rather surrender the jurisdiction of my committee to report this bill to the House than have a provision carried in the bill discriminating against the men who were charged with desertion from the Army in favor of men who are charged with desertion from the Navy.

They should all be treated alike. If we are to extend relief to the man who is charged with desertion from the Navy and who afterwards served in the World War, there is no reason why the same relief should not be extended to the man who was charged with desertion in the Army and who likewise served in the World War. In other words they should all be put on the same footing, and we should not make fish of one and fowl of the other, and I therefore hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. DREWRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I will.

Mr. DREWRY. Will not the gentleman accomplish his purpose if he puts the word "Army" in front of the words "Navy or Marine Corps"? Would not putting that in two places accomplish the same thing?

Mr. FIELDS. No; because further down we have a provision here which says, "against whose record the charge of desertion stands on the rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps."

Mr. DREWRY. The gentleman could make two amendments by using the word "Army."

Mr. FIELDS. The way I have offered it will clarify it so there will be no question about it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, as far as I know no member of the Naval Committee has any objection to including the Army in this provision of the bill, and I do not believe that any serious objection can be lodged against the bill either with or without the amendment. Both in the Army and Navy mere absence for a given length of time is denoted desertion. It may or may not be, and we are all familiar with the fact that under the present law there is no way by which the charge of desertion against a soldier can be removed and he be relieved of disabilities that he incurs thereby save by act of Congress. Now, we have had in the Navy, and I have no doubt many in the Army, prior to our entering the war with Germany men who deserted from the Navy and enlisted in the Army of the Allies—in the Canadian Army, in the English Army, and perhaps in the French Army. These men have rendered good service and they were honorably discharged, and instead of keeping the cumbrous method of relieving men of charges of desertion we in this bill determine that it is wise and better to leave it to the President of the United States, who, having each individual case before him, can determine the question. Men in the Spanish-American War deserted from the Navy, and in 1914 or 1915 and 1916 they enlisted in our own Army thereafter or in the English Army or in the French Army or the army of the Allies and rendered honorable service, and instead of having the cumbrous method of having to come to Congress and secure the passage of a special act, we leave it to the President of the United States, through the officers he would employ, to determine on each particular case whether or not it was a fact that that man had rendered honorable service which should entitle him to have this charge of desertion removed. How many cases do you believe Congress has passed special acts to rectify such cases since the Civil War, since the Spanish-American War? I remember one case which merely illustrates the cumbrous method now of employing the Congress to pass a special bill to remove this charge of desertion. I remember a boy during the Civil War who ran away from home over in Ohio and enlisted on one of the ships of war operating on the Mississippi River. He was 13 years old. His mother heard about him, got a letter from the Governor of Ohio, she went down and hunted up the ship around about Memphis somewhere, and took the small fellow by the hand and led him away back home.

He is now a man of about 70 years of age. He was charged with desertion, as he had to be, and the only method of removing that charge was by act of Congress. Under this law which we are endeavoring to pass now we will authorize the President upon hearing the facts in that case to remove the charge of such a case as that old man and give him the benefit of his service and the place he had won for himself. Now, a man makes a mistake. He deserts from the Navy or deserts from the Army in 1914, answering the appeal to get into the army of the Allies and fight the cause in which America afterwards engaged with her heart and soul, and he has a charge of desertion back of him.

We thought and we believe that the President of the United States ought to be able to rectify that matter, that that man ought not to be compelled to come to the Congress and submit to the cumbrous method that now exists for that purpose. He can try each individual case. It is not a law of amity. It is not a law that wipes out all such cases and restores to an honorable status all men charged with desertion, but it leaves it to the President to consider each one by itself and award relief in the case that appeals to his conscience and judgment as being meritorious.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will permit, I understand the Navy Department records show that one night there were some 35 deserted from the Brooklyn Navy Yard and went over to Canada and enlisted.

Mr. McPHERSON. Hundreds of men left our Navy, and we have many hundreds more, perhaps, who deserted to the United States Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. Not feloniously, but they deserted because of the causes that were at stake and involved in this war, and which appealed to them to take part in the conflict.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it proposed to establish a board whose duty it is to pass upon these cases?

Mr. McPHERSON. We leave it to the President to use such means as he might see fit to employ.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is not the gentleman fearful that if you leave it to the President, who has more duties now, with these duties that have been put upon him by the Congress, than he can attend to—is not the gentleman fearful that he would refer it to the military authorities, and we would be longer about getting the stain removed from these soldiers than we would by an act of Congress?

Mr. McPHERSON. The committee has not anticipated that the President would do this personally, and we felt perfectly safe in trusting to his judgment and wisdom in selecting the proper forum or board or body that would determine the merits of these cases.

Mr. MILLER. That is, in the face of the view of the Congress, of the congressional sentiment?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. If we pass this law, what distinction is there between the soldier boy or the boy who serves in the Navy faithfully and well, remembering his country and serving his time out—what distinction is there between that kind of a boy and a boy who deserted the colors, perhaps, in the face of the enemy?

Mr. McPHERSON. We think there is this difference between those men: The President of the United States would not remove the charge of desertion against the young man in the case you propose.

Mr. McKENZIE. But if the Congress of the United States enacts this section of this law, the Congress of the United States, so far as Congress is concerned, is taking the position that a deserter is entitled to as much consideration at the hands of this Congress as the boy who fought through to the finish.

Mr. McPHERSON. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment.

Mr. CRAGO rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be recognized. The Clerk will report the modified amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment, modified, offered by Mr. FIELDS: Page 5, line 13, before the word "Navy," insert the word "Army"; and on page 5, line 20, before the word "Navy," insert the word "Army."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] is recognized.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section, and I do this because of the familiarity I have had with cases of this kind arising in the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the section.

Mr. CRAGO. I think I have spent perhaps as much time as any other member of the committee in trying to do justice to these cases, many of which appeal to one's deepest sympathy. We have gone into them time and again, month after month, and we have done justice, as we think, in many cases.

But I want to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that in passing legislation of this kind Congress is simply abrogating its prerogative to a committee or a board appointed by the Executive to consider these cases in the Army and in the Navy. It is possible under the provisions of this section, if there have been cases where commissioned officers of the Army or the Navy during the war with Spain deserted the colors and went to Europe and were caught in the draft of England or France and served in one of those armies and received honorable discharges, in such cases, automatically, if the cases happened to come to this proposed committee or this board, that committee or board would have it in its power to give them all the benefits of an honorable discharge from our Army or our Navy.

I think that is going too far. I sympathize very much with many of these young men who have yielded to temptation in a moment of weakness, and the strongest words I ever attempted to address to our boys when in the service were some such words as these: "Boys, do not give up. When you think you can not hang on just hang on a little while longer." [Applause.]

Many of these cases arose in the late war, as has been described by gentlemen who have preceded me; but many cases were vicious, and I do not believe that Congress should abrogate its powers for all time and declare that for all time application for the removal of the charge of desertion from the Army and the Navy shall be passed upon by a board of officers consisting of officers of the Army or Navy rather than having each case stand on its own bottom, on its own merits, and come before this House—come before Congress.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Would the gentleman be in favor of the section if the words "voluntary service" were added to it? The gentleman has mentioned a case where a man was picked up in a draft by the French or the English.

Mr. CRAGO. I do not think a man should be excused for desertion from the Army or Navy of the United States by going into the Army of France or of England. I do not think we should abrogate our powers, even though the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs wanted to do it. If you had all these cases before this House after hearings and investigations, so that you would know the facts in each case, I probably would vote for such a bill. But I do not want any general opening of the door along this line or any general abrogation of the powers of Congress to control this matter of desertion from the Army and Navy. It is one of those things which, once started, you can not stop. It destroys the morale, it destroys the strength, of these arms of our service whenever we make desertions easy and so freely pardon them.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Our attention has been called to cases of this character, for instance: A boy had enlisted in the Navy, and he expected to get into action on the other side. Of course, the Navy got into action over there much more slowly than did the Marine Corps and certain branches of the Army. These youngsters in many cases quit the Navy and deserted and volunteered in the Army, and fought creditably in the Army. Their records now show that they are deserters. It is cases of that kind that we desire to correct.

Mr. CRAGO. That boy, such as the gentleman describes, had the right to request a transfer from the Navy to the Marine Corps or to the Army. Failing to do that or being refused this, it was his duty as an American sailor to stay in the place where he was assigned to duty. We are not going to allow the men in the ranks to dictate the policy of our Government in time of war, are we?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman think that the young lads who wanted to jump the fence and do service intended to desert? No. All they wanted was to get to the front.

Mr. CRAGO. In all those cases I think you will find me doing everything I know how to correct those records, just as I have been trying to do it all these years.

Mr. BUTLER. I never yet reported anything that somebody did not take exception to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, may I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is not this an invitation to the personnel of the Army and Navy to undertake to override the statutes and to select what part of the service or what part of the Army or Navy they will serve in?

Mr. CRAGO. The remarks of my colleague from Pennsylvania might lead to that conclusion.

Mr. STEVENSON. If a young man had deserted from the American Army or Navy and gone into the army of the Allies, and we should condone his shortcomings here, would not that be an invitation to him and to others like him to say, "We will serve where we want to and when we get ready"?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. McPHERSON. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, is he not?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. McPHERSON. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, have you had a case to look up where you have had to go through the reports of various committees in various Congresses, reports made to this House with reference to removing the charges of desertion from the records of soldiers in various wars, to see how many years such bills were pending before the committees of Congress?

Mr. CRAGO. I will say to the gentleman that the path has not been easy, and I have trodden that path as much as anyone. I have tried to get action on many of these bills. But the House can change that at any time they want to. They can make it easier to get action, and that is what I would rather do than take down the bars and surrender our prerogatives in that respect, and turn this matter over to a commission of the Executive. [Applause].

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SWING. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it will affect the morale of the Army or Navy any more to have the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy exercise discretion in desertion cases than it would to have Congress extend leniency?

Mr. CRAGO. It would not be the action of the Commander in Chief. It would be the machinery that he puts in motion, and that machinery has grown so complicated that I am afraid of it, and you are afraid of it, and you do not know where it will stop.

Mr. SWING. Does the gentleman think a board of Regular Army officers would be unduly lenient in a case of desertion?

Mr. CRAGO. There is nothing in the act that says anything about a board of Regular Army officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I doubt whether I could report anything here that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] would not take exception to, and therefore he need not ask me to report anything. I will ask him to tell me how he would amend this.

Mr. CRAGO. My motion is to strike it out entirely.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman has given years of study to this question and he has reported nothing on this subject.

Mr. CRAGO. If the House sees proper to adopt my amendment, that is a very easy way of getting action.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no use in lecturing us. The gentleman has studied this a long time, and he and I have talked about it. I have reported this. The gentleman has reported nothing, and he has proposed no remedy.

Mr. CRAGO. My motion is to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. That is dead easy. Any man who can read and write can do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAGO. I can not make them do it if they do not want to.

Mr. HILL. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] and am in favor of striking out this paragraph.

Mr. CRAGO. I am glad the gentleman says that. I have so high a regard for the chairman of this committee and all its members that I have a natural hesitancy in opposing any part of the bill, which contains many good features, but I thought it my duty to give the House my ideas on the subject, and then it is for the House to act.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I trust the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] will not prevail. This is a very meritorious section. It is one that is entitled to the most serious consideration on the part of the committee. It should be enacted, and relief should be afforded to these men who have served their country, whether in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps, who left one branch of the service and fought gallantly for the country in another branch of the service. The records of the Navy Department show that a great many boys deserted the Navy and joined the Army of the United States or else joined the armies of the Allies. In a great many instances those boys were killed upon the battle field. In the records of the Navy Department their names are carried as deserters. All of those boys gave their lives and made the supreme sacrifice for their country. Where is the man who will say that boys of that character should be carried on the rolls of their country as deserters?

Mr. DENISON. Suppose they were killed on the battle field before we got into the war?

Mr. VINSON. Then they gave their lives in a cause in which hundreds of thousands of our other boys made sacrifices.

Mr. DENISON. They offered their lives for the other country and not for this country. Does the gentleman think we ought to pension them?

Mr. VINSON. We propose to leave it entirely in the discretion of the President. It is entirely in the jurisdiction of the President, and anyone who knows anything about the views of the Naval and Military Establishments with reference to recommendations in cases of desertion knows well enough that it is very seldom that the department recommends the removal of a charge of desertion in any case unless it is exceptional and most meritorious, and that is the kind which this seeks to remove.

Mr. BUTLER. The President has to approve these bills.

Mr. VINSON. When we pass a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion and to give a boy an honorable discharge, before that bill becomes a law the President must approve the act of Congress removing that charge of desertion. Instead of doing it piecemeal, it should be given to the department to let the department use its discretion to remove the charge of desertion in a meritorious case.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. Has the word "allies" a legal and specific meaning?

Mr. VINSON. It may not have a legal meaning in the gentleman's mind, but to the average layman it means those who fought with America in the Great War.

Mr. LONDON. I know, but you are drafting a law, and, legally, the other powers that fought with the United States were known as the associated powers. They were not known as allies but as associated powers.

Mr. VINSON. I have in mind particularly a case where a Navy boy was serving on the battleship Georgia. He deserted and joined the United States Army. He charged four machine guns. He captured three of them, and in a heroic effort to capture the last he was killed. That boy is carried on the records of his country as a deserter. So, I hope the gentleman's motion to strike out the section will not prevail.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes? Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I dislike very much to ever say anything about the war and what I saw; but I realize that to-morrow or the next day, when that American citizen, a fugitive from justice, Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, reads the words of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] that he, Bergdoll, and all the white-livered, yellow-streaked race like him, will applaud and say, "The American Congress is in favor of us now." [Applause.]

I realize also that that same crowd, when they see the resolution of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], which was carried in the press this morning, will applaud vociferously; and I, for one, am not willing to stand in this House and applaud the nation whose army murdered and ravished women in order that their imperialistic ideas might control the earth. [Applause.] I am not willing that sympathy should go to Germany and at the same time forget the sufferings of France. The gentleman from Minnesota stated that he saw no cattle on his travel from Berlin to some other place in Germany. I, too, have seen suffering. I have seen a man of the Eighty-ninth Division, a young officer, the first morning I was at the front, a man who went out with his patrol and captured a German patrol, and the German officer hollered "Kamerad, kamerad!" The American was disarmed by these words, and the German drove a machete in his face and the young man from the West was brutally murdered.

The gentleman from Minnesota said that all war is hellish. Yes; but this war was more hellish than the rest. We were the first American troops to get into a town in northern France after the armistice. A woman was in this occupied area, where the American Red Cross sent food to the French people, and yet for three months she and her two children had nothing but potatoes to eat, without even salt to put on them. The coffee, the sugar, the flour sent from this country were not turned over by the Imperial German Government to the occupied territory in northern France, but were used for their own army.

I am telling you these things not to stir your blood but in order that you may not forget our ally, France, and that you may remember her sufferings. In the words of the great recessional, "Lord, God of hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget."

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentlemen what position, if any, the gentleman from Minnesota occupies with his brothers across the aisle?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I will say that while the gentleman from Minnesota is the whip of the Republican Party, yet I know that these men on the Republican side are Americans, and are as patriotic as you and I, and they do not approve of his speech any more than I do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] wish to be recognized?

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky wish some time?

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a motion to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] has not been reported. The pending question is the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FIELDS. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] had made a motion, and I want to oppose that motion.

Mr. BRITTEN. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] had made his motion.

Mr. CRAGO. The motion has not been reported.

Mr. FIELDS. I trust that I may be permitted to discuss the motion. If not, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's own amendment is pending.

Mr. FIELDS. I shall discuss the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have no sympathy for the man who runs away from the military or the naval service to get away from a fight. But I want to impress on you gentlemen of the House that there is a vast difference between the man who deserts the colors to get away from a fight and the man who deserts one branch of the service because it is not engaged in actual hostilities and goes to another branch of the service where he can actually get into a fight.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The statement was made that many brave boys left the Navy and joined the Marine Corps because the Navy was not active in this fight. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he favors granting a man who deserted from the Army and the Marine Corps to go into the Navy the benefits of this legislation?

Mr. FIELDS. We know how rigid the heads of the departments are in matters of this kind, and I judge that they will not abuse any powers delegated to them by Congress in removing the charge of desertion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], I infer from his remarks, contends that Congress would establish a new precedent by delegating to the executive branch of the Government authority to deal with these cases. After the Civil War Congress enacted a statute—I do not recall the date at this time—giving to the War Department broad latitude in dealing with cases of desertion. Yet that statute did not cover all of the meritorious cases, and during my service on the Military Affairs Committee and for one or two sessions while my side was in control of the House I was chairman of the subcommittee on desertions and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], and one other gentleman from my side constituted the personnel of that subcommittee. We set ourselves to the task of going into these cases and making a favorable report upon all meritorious ones. We almost worked our eyes out for months and months. We reported many bills to the House and we rejected many of them, and not one that we reported to the House favorably has ever been enacted into law. They either failed of consideration in the House or at the other end of the Capitol. There were cases of merit. In the Civil War many men were separated from the service by reason of circumstances not under their control. They or their representatives have been knocking at the doors of Congress for years and years, but because of the congested condition of the calendar little progress has been made in correcting their records, and because of the remote possibility of the enactment of legislation of this kind no progress will be made in the future in handling these matters as private bills. I have in mind a case where a man was captured by the enemy and later escaped from prison. He was unable to reach his own command, but he enlisted in another organization and served to the end of the war. Yet to-day that man stands with desertion charged against him on the records of the War Department.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I want to know why the gentleman's amendment was not broad enough to be general rather than to limit it to this?

Mr. FIELDS. I wish it was. I have a thought that I desire to give now for the consideration of the membership. We know how impossible it is to get consideration of these bills, and I believe there should be a commission or a tribunal of some kind created to clean up the records and once and for all settle this controverted question.

Men who are charged with desertion by reason of circumstances beyond their control should have that charge removed. Those who deserted should not have it removed and their cases should be passed on definitely and a favorable or an adverse report made upon each case according to its merits. I want to say in closing that there is a vast difference between a man who runs from a fight and the man who runs to a fight. I therefore trust that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the paragraph will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The only observation I care to make on this paragraph is this: Escape from punishment that follows desertion ought to be at all times difficult to obtain. There are more cases, I am sure, where the punishment ought to follow than there are cases where to have the punishment follow would bring about an injustice. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that in this war, in order to fill all of the places, we resorted to the draft, and when the Navy assigned a boy, even though this assignment took him to an old ship down in Cuba, the responsibility resting on the shoulders of that boy was just as great as that resting upon the shoulders of the boy on the battle field. Disregarding the desire of the boy entirely in time of warfare, the records need only go to his duty to his Government, and the boy who treats that duty lightly can not be excused because he is but 18 or 19 years of age, because almost every hero who came out of the war was of that age, and the boy who had the courage to face the guns on the battle field probably did not have any more courage and did not do any more courageous thing than the boy who had the courage to stay at his post of duty, even though it were drudgery. I believe that the general disavowal of the crime by an act of Congress in future times would only bring trouble for the American Army officers in maintaining discipline. The most needed requirement of a man in the Army is that he be so disciplined that he forgets self and obeys orders.

The man who deserts is the man who has not yet learned those requirements of discipline to the point where he can submerge his own ideas, but wants to take things into his own hands, and I for one want to make it a difficult proposition to have a man excused from the charge of desertion.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not proposed to relieve anybody from desertion unless he is entitled to it, and that goes to the President of the United States. I ask my good friend not to be too hard on some of these lads who jumped from one battleship to another in order to get into the fight.

Mr. BEGG. And I want to turn that around and ask my good friend this question: Let us suppose that some branch of the service was so distasteful that you could not get men to serve on it voluntarily, and boys were drafted and assigned to that service.

Does he have the choice of going where he may be shot down or go to the mess tent, and the mess tent might be as necessary as to carry a gun?

Mr. BUTLER. Just as important.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose he should desert, would it excuse him?

Mr. BUTLER. It is harder to get volunteers for the mess tents than——

Mr. BEGG. I do not question it; that is the point I am making, but you are willing to excuse the man who deserts——

Mr. BUTLER. This is entirely in the discretion of the President of the United States on the facts given to him whether or not he considers he should be relieved. I do not want my friend to be too hard on these.

Mr. FIELDS. This was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BEGG. Oh, yes; but I think the crime of desertion is serious enough to warrant making it a most difficult proposition to excuse it.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman assume, when he says that it would not be difficult to have the charge of desertion removed, that it would be easier if it was left in the discretion of the President of the United States?

Mr. BEGG. I assume this: I can go before any board and by pressure get across something and make it appear just easier than I can get it through this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not make this for the purpose of cutting off this debate, but has not debate been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The limit of time has been fixed and the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Iowa were to have half of the time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret I can not agree with my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania on the Military Affairs Committee, for whose opinion I have great respect, as to this matter. I find myself in complete accord with the committee. The only trouble is that the committee, in my opinion, did not go far enough in authorizing the charge of desertion to be corrected. So far as I know, this is the only country that refuses its Army and Navy the authority to correct the records when they find that they themselves have made the error, and it is the only war for which we have not passed that kind of a measure. Now, the trouble is that even though they find their records are in error, and they admit it, they will not correct them, and a man who is charged with desertion has to come to Congress—and thousands of cases die before Congress acts on them.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman will recall the law of 1887, which was enacted for the purpose of correcting military records, made it necessary for a man to apply within a certain length of time, and there was no man now applying for a pension as a veteran of the Civil War but who could have taken advantage of that law.

Mr. HULL. That is all right, but there are cases to-day, and the gentleman from Washington advocates those cases in the Military Affairs Committee, of trying to correct records by legislative enactment, and they fail because you can not get them through, and they are just cases, and the gentleman from Washington knows it.

Mr. MILLER. And they have to be pretty good cases to get past me, too.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is where there has been some mistake about the man deserting; but when we put men in the Navy or in the Army and they decide that they are not going to serve, but they are going to serve in the French or English Army or Navy, that is real desertion. Is not that desertion?

Mr. HULL. It might and it might not be.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is not that the law?

Mr. HULL. I know this, that case after case tried to enlist. I found one case where in the Battle of Gettysburg a man was charged with desertion, and the facts were—and they proved it to the War Department—that the man never deserted; he was taken prisoner, escaped during the battle from where he was taken prisoner and joined under a provost marshal and fought through the battle, and his own regiment had disappeared and he joined another regiment and fought through the war and received an honorable discharge; and yet they will not correct the original discharge.

Mr. STEVENSON. The law did not permit; that is not the thing that this bill provides for. It specially says where he deserted from one force and went to another.

Mr. HULL. I say this bill does not go far enough.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that this legislation proposes to give a distinguished service cross to a deserter, and if that is true what is the difference——

Mr. HULL. No; that is not true. This simply permits the President of the United States—and I may say to the gentleman that those gentlemen are never very soft-hearted; the most of them are hard-boiled, and he knows it; they do not pass a case that is justly charged with desertion, and they never will.

Mr. BUTLER. I propose that the committee amend this paragraph, if agreeable, by providing that this desertion accrued during the World War, so we will not have to deal with any of the other cases but confine it entirely to the World War.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAGO: Page 5, beginning with line 8, strike out all of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 39.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands tellers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] tell us how long he proposes to sit?

Mr. BUTLER. We will rise pretty soon.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my demand for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his demand for tellers.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes were 17 and the noes were 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TO CREDIT CERTAIN OFFICERS WITH ACTIVE DUTY PERFORMED SINCE RETIREMENT.

SEC. 4. That all retired commissioned and warrant officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps who served on active duty in the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States during the war with Germany shall be credited with all active duty performed since retirement during the period from April 6, 1917, to March 3, 1921, in the computation of their longevity pay.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD on some matters pertaining to this bill. I have been working on some tables which I think will be of interest to the Members, and I have been able to educe some things that I do not think have been published before. I therefore want to have my remarks printed to-night so as to be published in the RECORD in the morning, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated, in the usual 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, this bill, among other things, authorizes the modernization of 13 of our older battleships, namely, the Idaho, Mississippi, New Mexico, Arizona, Pennsylvania, Nevada, Oklahoma, Texas, New York, Wyoming, Arkansas, Florida, and Utah. The five latest vessels of the Navy—the Colorado and West Virginia, still to be completed, and the California, Tennessee, and Maryland—will require very little, if any, modernization. These alterations are made necessary in order to keep our Navy on a parity with other powers which have or which are modernizing their ships. It is felt that these changes do not violate the provisions of the conference treaty, which states that—

"No retained capital ships or aircraft carriers shall be reconstructed except for the purpose of providing means of defense against air and submarine attack, and subject to the following rules: The contracting parties may for that purpose equip existing tonnage with bulge or blister or antiair-attack deck protection, providing the increase of displacement thus effected does not exceed 3,000 tons displacement for each ship. No alteration in side armor, in calibre, number, or general type of mounting of main armament shall be permitted." (Ch. 2, pt. 3, sec. I, par. D, naval treaty.)

At the present time it is proposed to increase the range of our guns by giving them an additional elevation without changing the general type of mounting. The cost of these changes for increased gun elevations is about $6,500,000 for the 13 ships. Later on it is contemplated to stiffen the decks and to add blisters for protection against submarine attack. These alterations will cost probably in the neighborhood of $25,000,000 in addition to the gun elevations. Similar changes are going on in the British fleet and also in the Japanese fleet, and it is considered that these alterations come within the purview of the provisions of the treaty. Let me quote in this connection Secretary Denby when he says: "We think that our Navy should be put on a parity with the navy of Japan and Great Britain in the strength of the individual ships, and the only way to do that is to elevate the guns by such necessary structural changes as do not contravene the terms of the treaty; by adding additional sheathing on the decks to protect the vessels against airplane attack; by putting on blisters to protect the vessel against submarine attack and later on by increasing the calibre of the guns for antiaircraft use."

Personally, I feel it is our duty to proceed at once with this program of modernization of our ships in order that our vessels may equal the ships of other powers. Whatever size Navy we have should be an efficient Navy, a Navy, ship for ship, the equal of any navy on the seas. Whether or not the 1916 year program had been completed, or whether or not the Washington conference had been held, the fact remains that the ships we have should be equipped with all modern improvements and given the maximum of strength and protection. They should represent the last word in naval construction and efficiency.

The battle range of these 13 ships at present is about 22,000 yards. By giving the guns an elevation of 30 degrees our battle range will then be 32,000 yards, and with the roll of the ship after the first salvo is fired the range might be raised to 35,000 yards.

The necessity for modernizing our capital ships is apparent if we wish to preserve that ratio of strength which was allotted to us under the terms of the limitation of naval armaments treaty. The longer we delay putting this modernization into effect the greater will be the disparity in the ratios and the more extensive will be the work when it is once undertaken. When the delegates agreed to a limitation in capital ships the plan adopted for limitation was the American proposal. In order that it may be clearly understood what the American proposal meant, it is necessary to understand also the plan under which our Navy was being developed. So long as construction in capital ships was not limited it was more efficient for us to build new ships than it was to attempt an unlimited modernization of the older dreadnoughts. It must be realized further that our country had never reached the position attained by some other countries, where we could say that we had practically reached the limit of capital-ship construction. Therefore our naval policy always looked forward to an increase in number of our capital ships rather than the adoption of any other plan. It is important to remember that this policy is sound so long as a country is inferior in actual numbers of major fighting ships. In following this plan to its logical conclusion it is evident that the moneys appropriated should go to new construction, as it was more important that we should attain a position where we had superiority in numbers or at least equality in numbers, rather than to spend these appropriations in making over older tonnage. However, Great Britain, who has already attained superiority in numbers of capital fighting ships, was not confronted with the problem which faced us. Great Britain had only to maintain the superiority in numbers which she already had attained, and after that to devote her attention to seeing that what she already had was kept in the pink of condition. Therefore, during the last war she had already started on a campaign of modernizing the older capital ships. This work has been gradually progressing, and was in progress at the time the conference was called. For new construction Great Britain had made only a modest estimate, and at the time our conference met the keels of her new Hoods had not been laid. Japan, on the other hand, was faced with a problem similar to ours, and while her ships under construction were few, compared to ours, her projected building program was extensive. So, therefore, when under the terms of our proposal all of the capital ships under construction of the navies of the United States, Great Britain, and Japan were to be scrapped, it was the American naval construction policy in capital ships which was also scrapped. It is not to be understood that this was wrong. It was eminently the correct policy to pursue. One of the main, if not the main, objects of the conference was to restore amicable relations with Japan, secure stability in the western Pacific, and remove causes for friction, of which unlimited competition in capital-ship construction was one of the most potent. These results the conference accomplished. However, in so doing we are faced with other practical problems. Before accepting in toto our plan, in the discussion which resulted, it was found necessary to make provisions for modernizing the existing capital-ship tonnage to meet the improved methods of modern warfare, principally in the direction of providing adequate defense against torpedo and air attack. When this clause was introduced it coincided more closely with the British policy for modernization of older ships than it did with our policy of laying down new capital ships. Great Britain has been systematically proceeding along the lines which she started during the war. In doing this she has violated none of the terms of the treaty agreed to. But it is to be remembered that any modernization is a step in advance and makes the ship modernized a better fighting ship and one of greater value in its ability to maintain its position in the line.

The number of ships which have had bulges, torpedo protection, and improvements in the method of gun elevations is probably about 10 in the British service, and as much as £500,000 have been spent on a single ship. No matter how equal the ratios may be one year, if one country adopts a policy of modernizing her ships, and another country does not spend any money in keeping her ships up to date, no ratio will remain equal for any length of time. And if the United States is to attempt to maintain the ratio assigned to her, it will be necessary for us to spend a certain amount of money in keeping up to date the capital ships which are allowed to us under the terms of the treaty. Nothing more is asked than that we shall be allowed to modernize our existing capital-ship tonnage as other countries have done before us.

The steps indicated for us to take now are:

"(1) To increase the range of all turret guns of our retained capital ship fleet to 30°, which will give us a battle range corresponding to foreign practice.

"(2) To increase the antiaircraft deck protection of the six oldest of our retained capital ships to correspond with present foreign practice regarding ships constructed at about the same time.

"(3) To add blisters and other protective means to the underwater bodies of 13 of our retained capital ships and the necessary protection to the very great existing torpedo menace. This addition of blisters will, in the case of the coal burners, require also for their protection conversion to oil burners."

These steps are necessary if we are to maintain anything approaching the standard of a capital ship navy second to none.

Let me quote the following statement made by Admiral McVay, of the Bureau of Ordnance:

"That part of the policy of the Navy Department relating to the modernization of the capital ships, and which comes under the cognizance of the Bureau of Ordnance, consists of increasing the elevation of turret guns and improving ballistics of some of the major-calibre guns.

"The increased elevation is not a change in the general type of mounting, being merely a modification of existing mounts which will permit the elevation and range of 13 of our capital ships to be made similar to that which the 5 later ships now have, thereby increasing the "fleet range." These changes are similar to those already made or contemplated by other naval powers, and they will enable us, so far as ordnance is concerned, to bring our fleet up to required standards.

"Unless these changes are made our guns will be outranged by those of other powers, so that it is incumbent upon us not only to make the changes outlined but to do the work at as early a date as is possible. The ordnance aboard these ships is satisfactory, even though the vessels themselves were completed several years ago; but increased ranges at which modern battles are fought, due to improvements in fire-control methods, including spotting by airplanes, have demonstrated the necessity for modifying our installations to meet present long-range requirements such as were not considered essential prior to the late war.

"Representatives of the Navy who have preceded me have been questioned regarding the plans to modify existing ships, and I might add to their statements that it has always been our policy to maintain material up to standard, to which end we are constantly testing projects and then placing them in service, provided this is warranted.

"The six and a half millions to modernize the ships, so far as the Bureau of Ordnance is concerned, is a relatively small amount as compared with that which would have been required to complete those vessels designated for scrapping under the treaty for the limitation of armaments, being only a little over 6 per cent of the saving effected. Except for the treaty, $102,000,000 would have been required to complete ordnance material designated for scrapping; and now it is going to cost us but $6,500,000 to modernize existing ships as far as the Bureau of Ordnance is concerned.

"It must also be borne in mind that these ships are to last for many years, during which time they can not be replaced by new construction, except in case of loss or accidental destruction. It therefore is incumbent upon us to devote our energies toward maintaining all of our vessels in the highest state of efficiency."

In this connection let me quote from President Roosevelt, who in writing to one of his sons on May 12, 1907, said: "I want still more to see our Navy maintained at the highest point of efficiency, for it is the real keeper of the peace."

Mr. Speaker, much has been written in reference to the Washington conference. With few exceptions the comments have been favorable and complimentary. The importance of these treaties from the financial standpoint can not be challenged; yet above any economic consideration is the accomplished fact of international agreements conceived in the spirit of amity, pledging the great powers of the earth to compacts of friendship and conciliation. Distrust and prejudice have been superseded by respect and confidence; programs of competitive battleship construction, inaugurated by jealousy and suspicion, have given way to covenants of cooperation, inspired by candor and justice. These treaties can not be assessed in dollars or measured by budget standards alone. The benefits they will render mankind rest upon good will and the avowed determination that misunderstandings shall be considered in frankness and in fairness with the consciousness that peace, not war nor the suggestion of war, is the guide for an advancing civilization.

President Harding, whose vision of world needs and sympathy for struggling humanity inspired him to call the conference, eloquently set forth its accomplishment on the day of its final adjournment when, in bidding farewell to the delegates, he said:

"This conference has wrought a truly great achievement. It is hazardous sometimes to speak in superlatives, and I will be restrained. But I will say, with every confidence, that the faith plighted here to-day, kept in national honor, will mark the beginning of a new and better epoch in human progress.

"Stripped to the simplest fact, what is the spectacle which has inspired a new hope for the world? Gathered about this table nine great nations of the world—not all, to be sure, but those most directly concerned with the problems at hand—have met and have conferred on questions of great import and common concern, on problems menacing their peaceful relationship, on burdens threatening a common peril. In the revealing light of the public opinion of the world, without surrender of sovereignty, without impaired nationality or affronted national pride, a solution has been found in unanimity and to-day's adjournment is marked by rejoicing in the things accomplished. If the world has hungered for new assurance, it may feast at the banquet which the conference has spread.

"It has been the fortune of this conference to sit in a day far enough removed from war's bitterness, yet near enough to war's horrors, to gain the benefit of both the hatred of war and the yearning for peace. Too often heretofore the decades following such gatherings have been marked by the difficult undoing of their decisions. But your achievement is supreme because no seed of conflict has been sown, no reaction in regret or resentment ever can justify resort to arms.

"It little matters what we appraise as the outstanding accomplishments. Any one of them alone would have justified the conference. But the whole achievement has so cleared the atmosphere that it will seem like breathing the refreshing air of a new morn of promise.

"You have written the first deliberate and effective expression of great powers in the consciousness of peace, of war's utter futility, and challenged the sanity of competitive preparation for each other's destruction. You have halted folly and lifted burdens, and revealed to the world that the one sure way to recover from the sorrow and ruin and staggering obligations of a world war is to end the strife in preparation for more of it and turn human energies to the constructiveness of peace.

"No intrigue, no offensive or defensive alliances, no involvements have wrought your agreements, but reasoning with each other to common understanding has made new relationships among Governments and peoples, new securities for peace, and new opportunities for achievement and attending happiness.

"Here have been established the contacts of reason, here have come the inevitable understandings of face-to-face exchanges when passion does not inflame. The very atmosphere shamed national selfishness into retreat. Viewpoints were exchanged, differences composed, and you came to understand how common, after all, are human aspirations; how alike, indeed, and how easily reconcilable are our national aspirations; how sane and simple and satisfying to seek the relationships of peace and security.

"When you first met, I told you of our America's thought to seek less of armament and none of war; that we sought nothing which is another's, and we were unafraid, but that we wished to join you in doing that finer and nobler thing which no nation can do alone. We rejoice in that accomplishment."

As there has been a good deal of discussion and much inaccurate information adduced in relation to the tonnage to be scrapped under the Washington conference treaties, permit me to give these figures which I am confident are correct. Much of the confusion is probably due to the fact that the standards of measurement of ship tonnage differ in each country.

Under the original American proposal, figured by the United States standard of measurement, the tonnage to be destroyed was:

	Tons.
United States	845,740
Great Britain	583,375
Japan	448,928

Under the treaty agreement the tonnage to be scrapped is as follows:

	Tons.
United States	733,540
Great Britain	500,000
Japan	325,440

This computation is based on the scrapping of the North Dakota and Delaware upon the completion of the Colorado and West Virginia for the United States Navy, and upon the scrapping of four King George V class of ships upon the completion of the two new Hoods for the British Navy.

The original American proposal contemplated a "stop now" program in capital-ship construction for the United States, Great Britain, and Japan on the 5-5-3 basis. On this basis the United States was to terminate construction on all capital ships laid down. Great Britain was to stop work on the four new Hoods contemplated, on which sums of money had been spent but no keels laid. Japan was to end work on ships already under construction and was to discard her paper program. The 1916 program for the American Navy contemplated the construction of 10 battleships and 6 battle cruisers of heavy type and large size, and in addition the building of a large number of smaller war vessels. The estimated total cost of these 16 capital ships to completion was $525,000,000, which amount would have been exceeded had they been built under war and post-war conditions. Of this program, the Maryland was in commission at the time of the conference and will not be scrapped. The American proposal contemplated the destruction of the remaining 15 capital ships being built under the program. We had expended or obligated ourselves to spend approximately $332,000,000 on these unfinished capital ships. As the treaty permits the retention of the West Virginia and Colorado and of two battle cruisers for conversion into airplane carriers, all four of which were included in the 1916 program, the amounts expended upon these ships should be deducted from the $332,000,000 in order to determine the cost involved in scrapping these unfinished vessels. As this expenditure is about $90,000,000, the net total of money expended on ships under construction which are to be broken up is approximately $242,000,000.

It is provided in the treaty, which shall remain in force until December 31, 1936, that capital ships, other than aircraft carriers in existence or building on November 12, 1921, shall not be replaced by new construction until 20 years after their completion. The keels of such new construction may be laid down not earlier than 17 years from the date of the completion of the ships to be replaced, but this replacement tonnage shall not be commenced before November 12, 1931. Article 4 of the treaty is the naval ratio agreement and it gives in standard displacement tonnages the aggregates for capital-ship replacements as follows:

	Tons.	Ratio.
United States	525,000	5
Great Britain	525,000	5
France	175,000	1.75
Italy	175,000	1.75
Japan	315,000	3

In making any comparison between navies, other elements besides tonnage should be considered. In this discussion of the relative strength of the several navies, there is no thought of hostility or prejudice—nothing but kindly feeling toward all the fleets, for it is my hope that armed conflict shall never mar the cordial relationships now so happily established. In the matter of speed it is evident that Great Britain in some of her ships, and Japen in all of hers, have some advantage over vessels of the American Navy, especially in battle cruisers, a type of ship about which there has been much controversy. In battle cruisers their greater speed means a reduction in their fighting and defensive power. As many experts feel that in the final decision in battle the test will be strength against strength, this sacrifice of staying qualities for increased speed may not be justified. In considering the relative values of battleships and battle cruisers let us assume a hypothetical case in which a fleet composed of both battle cruisers and battleships comes into conflict with a fleet consisting of battleships only. Would these cruisers be sent out to destroy commerce or would they be kept with the fleet? If they became commerce raiders, the main fighting fleet on the day of battle would have that less number of capital ships. If they remained with the main fleet, owing to the fact that they do not possess the same fighting value as the battleship, they might not be strong enough to lie in the line to receive the blows of an all-battleship fleet, and would therefore be of small value. It should be borne in mind that the original American proposal set limits on the 5–5–3 ratio not only to capital ships but to all types of ships, including cruisers. In this particular department—namely cruisers—the United States is very weak relatively both to Japan and Great Britain. While the battle cruisers would probably not be built by us or by any other country that contemplated fleet action, yet the battle cruiser as a type must be reckoned with in any sea operations which contemplate maneuvers similar to those conducted by a cavalry or quick-moving land force before the two main armies come in contact with each other. In other words, the battle cruiser, particularly if it be augmented by numbers of fast light cruisers, will always be a menace to the lines of communications of even a very superior fighting force. Practically the only counter to such operations is to be yourself at least equally strong. Therefore for the United States this means the building up of our light cruiser strength until it is on a parity in the established ratio with the capital ships which we retain under the treaty provisions. Particularly in these modern days, when vast numbers and forces are used, the strength of the military body is substantially that of its supply line, and in a very great measure the same holds true of naval forces.

In the capital-ship class Great Britain has four battle cruisers of large tonnage and high speed, Japan has 4, while the United States has none. Under our 1916 program we were constructing 6 of this type of vessel, but they will all be scrapped under the treaty, with the exception that 2 of them will be converted into airplane carriers. Of light cruisers, from 3,000 to 8,000 tons, the construction of which is not limited by the conference, we are building 10, with a displacement of 75,000 tons, armed with 6-inch guns and capable of speeding at 33 knots. Great Britain has 40, with a total tonnage of 161,690, and Japan has 10, with a total displacement of 51,100 tons, with speeds of 27 knots and better. Great Britain is also building 2, totaling 15,100 tons and Japan has under construction 11, totaling 66,520 tons.

Of the heavier class of cruiser, not exceeding 10,000 tons, and permitted by the treaty without numerical or total tonnage limitation, Great Britain has 4 with a total displacement of 56,700 tons, capable of cruising at 27 knots. Two of this number, the Courageous and Glorious, are 32-knot vessels of 18,600 tons, armed with four 15-inch guns. These ships are in excess of the tonnage permitted for new auxiliary vessels. Owing to the fact that their armor is only 3 inches in thickness, they were not included in the capital-ship class, although both in tonnage and in they c..ne within the specifications. We have nothing to offset offset these heavier-class cruisers, nor have we any under construction. It is noted that in this class Great Britain is building 2, with a total tonnage of 19,500, and Japan 4, totaling 40,000 tons. These will all have a speed of 27 knots or more and be armed with 8-inch guns.

In cruisers, therefore, of 3,000 tons and better, of modern type the United States has built or is building 10, with a total tonnage of 75,000; Japan has 25, with a total tonnage of 157,730; and Great Britain 48, with a total tonnage of 252,990 tons.

Naval experts insist that we can not have a well-rounded fleet as long as we are deficient in this class of vessels. They describe the functions of the light cruisers as—

First. The service of information, scouting; in other words, searching for the enemy fleet and finding out what it is doing.

Second. Screening; that is, guarding our fleet against surprise and keeping off the enemy scouts.

Third. In battle, supporting our destroyers in their torpedo attacks against enemy battleships and beating off the enemy destroyers attempting to torpedo our battleships.

Fourth. Operating against enemy shipping and protecting our own shipping against enemy raiders.

In view of the very unsatisfactory situation of our Navy in regard to cruisers, the question naturally presents itself, Why have we neglected to build vessels of this type while we constructed large numbers of destroyers? These destroyers, it must be remembered, were constructed during the war, when all efforts were directed to the one object of checking the submarine and thereby making possible the transportation of men and supplies to Europe. We all remember when the belief was common that the outcome of the World War was dependent upon American troops reaching the front and being maintained and in transporting supplies to Great Britain to enable her people to hold out until our Army could be thrown into the conflict. The destroyer was unquestionably the most effective weapon for use against the submarine, and all our energies were directed to building these ships to protect transports and cargo vessels. During the war Great Britain concentrated more upon the building of cruisers than upon destroyers, and since the Washington Conference the naval thought of Great Britain and Japan has favored the construction of these light cruisers. It is clearly evident that the United States, if we are to have a well-balanced fleet, must lay down a large number of fast cruisers.

The General Board of the United States Navy, composed entirely of experienced experts, recently rendered an opinion that, in view of the limit of 18 capital ships for the United States Navy, the best policy would be to retain battleships in preference to battle cruisers. With a specific limit placed on capital ships, it is more than probable that the fleets of the future of all nations will be composed of ships possessing the maximum of strength, and, therefore, if this is to become the policy, the death knell of the present battle cruisers has been sounded.

In any reference to speed, it is only fair to mention the fact that it is the speed of the slowest ship in a fleet which determines the speed of that fleet. Eight of the British ships are rated at 21 knots, and while the Queen Elizabeth type ships have a speed of 25 knots, yet to maintain their position in the line the speed of 21 knots, which is the speed of the American fleet, can not be exceeded, so the question of speed is not of primary importance in any comparison between the British and American fleets. In comparison with the Japanese fleet the advantage of speed lies with their ships, but to gain this speed they have sacrificed armor and thereby made their ships more vulnerable and less able to withstand bombardment. In this connection it is well to note that the average thickness of the armor on Japanese ships is less than 11 inches, on British ships it is 12½ inches, while on American ships the average thickness is 14½ inches.

It is but fair to mention that under the treaty the total number of guns carried on the United States battleships is 192 against 166 for Great Britain and 96 for Japan, and that therefor the salvos of fire are very much greater in the American Navy. Another item of interest is the fact that we have 7 ships armed with 14-inch guns of 50 calibre, as compared with the 15-inch and 13½-inch guns of 42 and 45 calibre carried by the British. This brings the range of our smaller guns up to the range of the larger British guns. It may be fairly stated that in ordnance and armor the United States battleships are equal, if not superior, to the ordnance and armor of the British ships, and greatly superior to that of the Japanese ships.

As I have frequently been asked the weight of projectiles and the ranges of guns, it may be of value to give a quick method for ascertaining these measurements, which are applicable to our own guns. For the weight of the shell of any gun, take the diameter of the bore of the gun in inches and cube it. Divide this by 2 and the result will be the weight in pounds of the shell. For a 5-inch shell, 12½ pounds should be subtracted from the result of the division. For the range, take the diameter of the bore of the gun in inches and multiply by 1½. The result will be the number of miles the shell will carry. Of course the results are only an approximation, but in the weight of the shell the calculation will be nearly accurate.

The following tables give the ships which may be retained by the several nations under the Washington Conference treaties:

Ships which may be retained by the United States.
(American standard of measurement.)

Name.	Commissioned.	Tonnage.	Main battery.	Speed.	Date of replacement.
			No. Ins.	Knots.
Maryland	1921	32,600	8 16	21	1941
California	1921	32,300	12 14	21	1941
Tennessee	1920	32,300	12 14	21	1940
Idaho	1919	32,000	12 14	21	1939
New Mexico	1918	32,000	12 14	21	1939
Mississippi	1917	32,000	12 14	21	1938
Arizona	1916	31,400	12 14	21	1937
Pennsylvania	1916	31,400	12 14	21	1937
Oklahoma	1916	27,500	10 14	20½	1936
Nevada	1916	27,500	10 14	20½	1936
New York	1914	27,000	10 14	21½	1935
Texas	1914	27,000	10 14	21	1935
Arkansas	1912	26,000	12 12	21	1935
Wyoming	1912	26,000	12 12	21	1934
Florida	1911	21,825	10 12	22	1934
Utah	1911	21,825	10 12	21	1934
North Dakota	1910	20,000	10 12	21	To be scrapped.
Delaware	1910	20,000	10 12	21½	To be scrapped.
Total		500,650

On the completion of the West Virginia and Colorado, to be replaced in 1942, each with a displacement of 32,600 tons and carrying eight 16-inch guns, the North Dakota and Delaware are to be scrapped. This will then give to the United States Navy a tonnage of 525,850, and we will then possess 3 ships equipped with 16-inch guns, 11 ships with 14-inch guns, and 4 ships with 12-inch guns. Our 18 ships will then carry twenty-four 16-inch guns, one hundred and twenty-four 14-inch guns, and forty-four 12-inch guns, or a grand total of 192 guns capable of delivering a broadside of metal weighing 262,280 pounds. At present our 18 ships can deliver a broadside weighing 246,680 pounds.

Ships which may be retained by Great Britain.
(British standard of measurement.)

Name.	Commissioned.	Tonnage.	Main battery.	Speed.
			No. Ins.	Knots.
Royal Sovereign	1916	25,750	8 15	23
Royal Oak	1916	25,750	8 15	23
Revenge	1916	25,750	8 15	23
Resolution	1916	25,750	8 15	23
Ramilles	1917	25,750	8 15	23
Malaya	1916	27,500	8 15	25
Valiant	1916	27,500	8 15	25
Barham	1916	27,500	8 15	25
Queen Elizabeth	1916	27,500	8 15	25
Warspite	1916	27,500	8 15	25
Benbow	1914	25,000	10 13.5	21
Emperor of India	1914	25,000	10 13.5	21
Iron Duke	1914	25,000	10 13.5	21
Marlborough	1914	25,000	10 13.5	21
Hood	1920	[1] 41,200	8 15	31
Renown	1916	[1] 26,500	6 15	31
Repulse	1916	[1] 26,500	6 15	31
Tiger	1914	[1] 28,500	8 13.5	30
Thunderer	1912	22,500	10 13.5	21
King George V	1912	23,000	10 13.5	21
Ajax	1913	23,000	10 13.5	21
Centurion	1913	23,000	10 13.5	21
Total		580,450

[1] Battle cruisers.

On the completion of the two new Hoods, each with a displacement of 35,000 tons and equipped with, probably, nine 16-inch guns, the Thunderer, King George V, Ajax, and Centurion will be scrapped. This will then give to the British Navy a tonnage of 558,950, and they will have 2 ships carrying 16-inch guns, 13 carrying 15-inch guns, and 5 carrying 13.5-inch guns. The 20 British ships will then carry eighteen 16-inch guns (assuming this size gun is placed on the new Hoods), one hundred 15-inch guns, and forty-eight 13.5-inch guns, a total of 166 guns, capable of delivering a broadside of metal weighing 299,520 pounds. At present the 22 British ships can deliver a broadside weighing 315,200 pounds. Assuming that the battle cruisers might not be a part of the fleet on the day of battle, the total weight of metal thrown would be reduced 49,600 pounds.

Ships which may be retained by Japan.
(Japanese standard of measurement.)

Name.	Commissioned.	Tonnage.	Main battery.	Speed.
			No. Ins.	Knots.
Mutsu	1921	33,800	8 16	23
Nagato	1920	33,800	8 16	23.5
Hyuga	1918	31,260	12 14	23
Ise	1917	31,260	12 14	23
Yamashiro	1917	30,600	12 14	23
Fu-So	1915	30,600	12 14	23
Kirishima	1913	[1] 27,500	8 14	27
Haruna	1913	[1] 27,500	8 14	27
Hiyei	1913	[1] 27,500	8 14	27
Kongo	1913	[1] 27,500	8 14	27
Total		301,320

[1] Battle cruisers.

Japan will have 2 ships carrying 16-inch guns and 8 carrying 14-inch guns. The 10 Japanese ships will carry sixteen 16-inch guns and eighty 14-inch guns, a total of 96 guns, capable of delivering a broadside of metal weighing 160,649 pounds. If Japan should not engage her cruisers in fleet battle, the weight of metal thrown by these ships, 43,900 pounds, would be deductible.

It has frequently been stated that the two Hoods allowed the British Navy are to be super Hoods, but this is an error. It is true Great Britain had planned the construction of a vessel having a displacement of approximately 50,000 tons, to be armed with a large number of 16-inch guns. This type of vessel has been abandoned and the two Hoods to be built will be vessels not exceeding 35,000 tons displacement and armed with not over 10 16-inch guns. As Great Britain has at this time no guns of this calibre, it may develop that 15-inch guns will be utilized on the two Hoods.

As there has been discussion in regard to the different methods of computing tonnage, it may clarify the subject to state that while such differences exist they were all considered before the convening of the conference, and in order to arrive at a just estimate of the relative strength of the several fleets each ship of the British, Japanese, French, and Italian navies was reduced to the American standard of measurement and the comparison was made on that basis.

The standard-displacement tonnage adopted by the conference is ascertained by taking "the displacement of the ship complete, fully manned, engined, and equipped ready for sea, including all armament and ammunition, equipment, outfit, provisions, and fresh water for crew, miscellaneous stores, and implements of every description that are intended to be carried in war, but without fuel or reserve feed water on board." The ton used in the treaty is the ton of 2,240 pounds. It is provided that "vessels now completed shall retain their present ratings of displacement tonnage in accordance with their national system of measurement," but that a vessel completed after the treaty goes into effect shall be rated in conformity to the standard adopted.

By the American method of measurement, in addition to the items included in the standard measurement, two-thirds of the ship's fuel supply, extra oil and water, are measured as part of the tonnage. This measurement was based on the theory that a ship should be measured in the condition she would be in when ready to proceed to sea and, therefore, fuel was included as part of the tonnage. American ships, when measured by standard displacement, will be lighter in tonnage by the amount of fuel which was included in their measurement. The British and Japanese standards of measurements are practically the same as the standard adopted by the conference.

Owing to the difference between the two methods of measurement there will be a slight advantage gained by ships to be constructed under this new standard over American vessels already completed. For instance, in the case of the new Hoods of 35,000 tons standard displacement, as compared with the Colorado, of 32,600 tons American displacement, the Hoods are probably some 4,500 tons heavier, although the difference shown by the figures is only 2,400 tons. Of course, this discrepancy will disappear when replacements are effected, for then ships of all nations will be measured by a uniform standard.

On the American basis of tonnage measurement the present capital-ship tonnage allowed by the treaties is:

	Tons.
For the United States	500,650
Great Britain	604,450
Japan	313,300

On the completion of the two American and two British ships and the scrapping of the two old American ships and the four old British ships as provided for in the treaties, the capital-ship tonnage by American measurement will be:

	Tons.
United States	525,850
Great Britain	578,600
Japan	313,300

Computed on the basis of standard displacement measurement this capital-ship tonnage will be—

	Tons.
United States (approximately)	507,600
Great Britain	558,650
Japan	301,320

which will remain operative until replacements are inaugurated, when the United States and Japan will build up to the limit permitted by the treaty, namely, 525,000 tons for the United States and 315,000 tons for Japan, while Great Britain will have to reduce her tonnage from 558,650 to 525,000 tons.

In comparisons of auxiliary tonnage it must be borne in mind that with the exception of aircraft carriers the treaty does not limit the number, the total tonnage, or the tonnage of particular classes of armed ships, provided they do not exceed 10,000 tons or carry a gun larger than 8 inches. While we are unquestionably inferior to Great Britain in light cruisers and flotilla leaders, yet in modern destroyers, built or building, and in submarines we are superior. The question of increasing the number of our auxiliary vessels, not being limited by the treaty, is one of policy and has no direct bearing on any discussion of the conference. From the results obtained from recent aviation tests it is evident that one of the great needs of the United States Navy is an increased number of large, high-speed aircraft carriers, which Congress should at once authorize.

In discussing auxiliary craft it is interesting to recall that the original United States proposal which was not accepted, provided that the total tonnage of light cruisers, flotilla leaders, and destroyers should be limited to—

	Tons.
United States	450,000
Great Britain	450,000
Japan	270,000
France	150,000
Italy	150,000

and that for submarines it should be—

United States	90,000
Great Britain	90,000
Japan	54,000
France	30,000
Italy	30,000

The following tables give the relative strength of the most important ships of the auxiliary fleets. Aircraft carriers are also included.

	Built.	Building.	Total.
Aircraft carriers:
First line—
United States	0	2	2
Great Britain	1	0	1
Japan	0	0	0
Second line—
United States	1	0	1
Great Britain	3	2	5
Japan	1	[1]2	3
Cruisers (8,000 tons plus high speed):
United States	0	0	0
Great Britain	4	2	6
Japan	0	4	4
Light cruisers (3,000 tons plus; 27 knots plus):
United States	0	10	10
Great Britain	40	2	42
Japan	10	11	21
Destroyers (800–1,500 tons):
United States	281	0	281
Great Britain	185	5	190
Japan	53	39	92
Submarines (500–1,000 tons):
United States	59	35	94
Great Britain	36	6	42
Japan	28	21	49
Flotilla leaders (1,500 tons plus):
United States	0	0	0
Great Britain	16	2	18
Japan	0	0	0
Fleet submarines (1,000 tons plus; 20 knots plus):
United States	3	3	6
Great Britain	6	2	8
Japan	0	25	25
Colliers and oil tankers:
United States	29	0	29
Great Britain	67	0	67
Japan	10	4	14
Destroyer tenders:
United States	7	2	9
Great Britain	7	0	7
Japan	0	0	0

[1] Construction held up, may not be built. Carriers are experimental and can be replaced. Japan's policy regarding first-line carriers which the treaty permits her to build is not known.

	Built.	Building.	Total.
Hospital ships:
United States	4	0	4
Great Britain	2	0	2
Japan	0	0	0
Mine sweepers:
United States	47	0	47
Great Britain	91	0	91
Japan	45	0	45
Submarine tenders:
United States	7	1	8
Great Britain	9	0	9
Japan	3	2	5

In reference to the relative cost of the United States Navy under the treaty stipulations and the cost in the event the treaty had not been adopted, let me give the following:

(a) Cost of the Navy to-day—fiscal year 1923:

The withdrawals from the Treasury of the Navy Department during the fiscal year 1923 are estimated at $347,486,925.30. There was appropriated for the support of the Navy during the fiscal year 1923 a slightly larger sum as follows:

By naval appropriation bill	$289,336,577
Scrapping naval vessels	5,000,000
Permanent and indefinite	3,433,672
Increase of compensation	537,120
	298,307,369
Increase Navy—old balances reappropriated, estimated	44,915,000
Shipping Board notes, face value	8,000,000
Total	351,222,369

(b) Cost of the Navy next year—fiscal year 1924:

The cash withdrawals from the Treasury for the Navy Department during the fiscal year 1924 are estimated roughly at $331,000,000. (The cash withdrawals mentioned in this and the preceding subparagraph do not include certain amounts which will be expended by the Navy on account of the Veterans' Bureau, for which the Navy Department will be reimbursed.) The amounts carried in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1924 are as follows:

By naval bill	$284,456,528
Permanent and indefinite	2,130,050
Increase of compensation	512,087
	297,098,675
Authorized transfers from naval supply account, etc., to increase Navy	35,450,000
	332,548,675

Compensation increase not carried in naval bill estimate.

(c) Estimated cost of the Navy this year if building program had not been stopped in accordance with the treaty for the limitation of armaments:

The figures included in the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, includes for the Navy Department and the Naval Establishment the sum of $420,343,785.13. The Budget was made up from estimates submitted by the Navy Department prior to the Conference for Limitation of Armaments, and the figures quoted may, therefore, be considered as the approximate cost of the Navy during the fiscal year 1923 under the conditions noted.

(d) Estimated cost of completed Navy; that is, what it would have been in 1928:

In arriving at this estimated cost it is necessary to make certain assumptions. These are that the 1916 program would have been completed; that all ships would be in commission, with adequate personnel to man them; and that adequate shore establishments would also be maintained. Under these assumptions the total cost of the Navy in 1923 is estimated at $529,000,000.

The treaty contains the following provisions and definitions:

"ART. V. No capital ship exceeding 35,000 tons standard displacement shall be acquired by or constructed by, for, or within the jurisdiction of any of the contracting powers.

"ART. VI. No capital ship of any of the contracting powers shall carry a gun with a calibre in excess of 16 inches.

"ART. VII. The total tonnage for aircraft carriers of each of the contracting powers shall not exceed in standard displacement, for the United States 135,000 tons; for the British Empire, 135,000 tons; for France, 60,000 tons; for Italy, 60,000 tons; for Japan, 81,000 tons.

"ART. VIII. The aircraft carrier tonnage in existence or building on November 12, 1921, shall be considered experimental, and may be replaced within the total tonnage limit prescribed in Article VII without regard to its age.

"ART. IX. No aircraft carriers exceeding 27,000 tons standard displacement shall be acquired by or constructed by, for, or within the jurisdiction of any of the contracting powers.

"However, any of the contracting powers may, provided that its total tonnage allowance of aircraft carriers is not thereby exceeded, build not more than two aircraft carriers, each of a tonnage of not more than 33,000 tons standard displacement, and in order to effect economy any of the contracting powers may use for this purpose any two of their ships, whether constructed or in course of construction, which would otherwise be scrapped.

"ART. X. No aircraft carriers of any of the contracting powers shall carry a gun with a caliber in excess of 8 inches.

"ART. XI. No vessel of war exceeding 10,000 tons standard displacement, other than a capital ship or aircraft carrier, shall be acquired by or constructed by, for, or within the jurisdiction of any of the contracting powers. Vessels not specifically built as fighting ships nor taken in time of peace under government control for fighting purposes which are employed on fleet duties or as troop transports or in some other way for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of hostilities otherwise than as fighting ships shall not be within the limitations of this article.

"No vessel of war of any of the contracting powers hereafter laid down, other than a capital ship, shall carry a gun with a caliber in excess of 8 inches.

"Capital ship: A capital ship, in the case of ships hereafter built, is defined as a vessel of war, not an aircraft carrier, whose displacement exceeds 10,000 tons standard displacement or which carries a gun with a calibre exceeding 8 inches."

"Aircraft carrier: An aircraft carrier is defined as a vessel of war with a displacement in excess of 10,000 tons standard displacement designed for the specific and exclusive purpose of carrying aircraft. It must be so constructed that aircraft can be launched therefrom and landed thereon, and not designed and constructed for carrying a more powerful armament than that allowed to it under Article IX or Article X as the case may be."

Aviation is such a recognized part of the naval service that arguments are no longer needed in its behalf. It is destined to increase in value and importance and with the improvements that are certain to take place it will become one of the strong arms of military operations, both for defense and attack. Without going further into the subject let me quote from two eminent sources.

From annual report of Secretary of the Navy Denby, 1922:

"The development of aviation as an integral part of the fleet, with types of aircraft suited to every need of the naval forces, has been the outstanding feature of the past year in naval aeronautics. The rapid strides that have been made in organization and development work have fully justified the establishment of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and the work of this bureau is also reflected in the general contribution that has been made to the advancement of industrial and commercial aviation in this country."

From annual report of Gen. John J. Pershing, Chief of Staff, 1922:

"No man can estimate with present certainty the value which can be ascribed in a few years to the possession of an adequate resourcefulness in the air. It is certain, however, that the influence of air power will become increasingly great and that the Nation can not afford to neglect this arm. The Air Service which we develop should be capable of offensive application. This does not mean that we must immediately build an Air Service that could take the offensive against any great power or group of powers. It does mean, however, that we should have a force that can take the immediate defensive, and that can, during a reasonable period of operations, expand to the strength required for an offensive. This is the basis of our present defense policies with all our arms and should be considered a minimum. A very important part in such a defensive would be the operations of an effective Air Service. We must not only be training flyers for reserve but we must actually make provision for a strength in serviceable planes which can meet this requirement. This reserve of planes we now lack, as we lack even the facilities for training the necessary reserve of personnel. The industries and the airways of our country are not prepared for an emergency. I earnestly hope, therefore, that early steps be taken to bring about the effective cooperation of States with the agencies of the National Government to the end that this vital need can be effectually filled."

On December 29, 1922, Secretary of State Hughes delivered at New Haven an address dealing with some aspects of our foreign policy. In this address he referred to the Washington conference. To Mr. Hughes is due the greatest measure of gratitude for the brilliant statesmanship he displayed in relation to the conference. To his frankness in avowing the aims to be achieved, his knowledge of conditions, and his sincerity in proclaiming the unselfish attitude of America are due, more than to any other factors, the successful termination of the convention. It is a pleasure to quote those paragraphs of his address dealing with the treaties, in the making of which he took such a conspicuous and honorable a part:

"When diarists and letter writers have their day in court, and every bit of paper is scrutinized, there will be nothing, I am sure, which will derogate from the present general appreciation of the spirit which animated that earnest endeavor to remove distrust and to furnish unassailable proofs of international good will.

"It was the fertile mind of Alexander Hamilton which first suggested the desirability of an agreement for the limitation of armament on the Great Lakes. In his memorandum to Washington—April 23, 1794—on points to be considered in the instruction to John Jay with respect to his mission to Great Britain, Hamilton said:

"'It may be desired, and would it not be to our interest to agree, that neither party shall in time of peace keep up any armed force upon the Lakes, nor any fortified places nearer than ——— miles to the Lakes, except small posts for small guards—the number to be defined—stationed for the security of trading houses?'

"But this idea, which bore fruit in the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817, suggestive as it was, was extremely limited and had reference to a particular situation and a local exigency.

"It was about 80 years later that the Emperor of Russia issued his rescript asserting that the armed peace of the time had become a crushing burden and that the putting 'an end to these incessant armaments' was 'the supreme duty' of all States. The resolution of the first Hague conference of 1899 amounted to nothing more than the expression of an aspiration, and the second peace conference at The Hague, in 1907, could get no further. These failures indicated the malevolent influences which, mocking at the endeavors of peacemakers and multiplying peace associations, finally brought upon mankind the greatest of all catastrophes.

"At the end of the Great War the completeness of the victory over the Central Powers and the realization by the Allies of the terrible cost of that victory apparently had at once simplified the problem through the removal of earlier menaces and given hope for a solution because of the deep longings of suffering and impoverished peoples for a lasting peace. It has been the keen desire of the people of the United States to give their help to this end. They have been opposed to alliances, but they have had no desire to withhold their cooperation wherever they believed there was a sound basis for it.

"The spirit in which the Washington conference was called can not be better stated than in the words of President Harding in opening it:

"'We wish to sit with you at the table of international understanding and good will. In good conscience we are eager to meet you frankly and invite and offer cooperation. * * * I can speak officially only for our United States. Our hundred millions frankly want less of armament and none of war.'

"The conference method of dealing with international problems—a method which the President strongly favored—made cogent appeal to the practical judgment of our people, and the specific application of this method to the endeavor to secure an agreement for the limitation of armament received the most earnest consideration. The time was ripe for the public announcement which was made on July 11, 1921, that 'the President, in view of the far-reaching importance of the question of limitation of armament, has approached with informal but definite inquiries the group of powers heretofore known as the principal allied and associated powers—that is, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan—to ascertain whether it would be agreeable to them to take part in a conference on this subject to be held in Washington at a time to be mutually agreed upon.'

"The most significant fact, however, in connection with this announcement was the suggestion that Pacific and far eastern questions should be considered in connection with this conference. This went beyond the mere matter of naval expenditures. The announcement said:

"'It is manifest that the question of limitation of armament has a close relation to Pacific and far eastern problems, and the President has suggested that the powers especially interested in these problems should undertake, in connection with this conference, the consideration of all matters bearing upon their solution with a view to reaching a common understanding with respect to principles and policies in the Far East.'

"There was the further statement that China had been invited to take part in the discussions relating to far eastern problems. Thus not only was a wider scope given to the proposed conference than one simply for the limitation of armament, but, for reasons which reflection will suggest, this fact alone made possible the success of the conference.

"At the time of this announcement a most important conference was being held in London—the conference of prime ministers and representatives of the United Kingdom, the Dominions, and India, which convened on June 20, 1921. In his opening address to the imperial conference Mr. Lloyd-George referred 'to one of the most urgent and important of foreign questions—the relations of the Empire with the United States and Japan.' A subject of first importance was the question of continuing the Anglo-Japanese alliance. There had been doubt whether the notification to the League of Nations in July, 1920, constituted a denunciation of that agreement. Upon the opinion of the Lord Chancellor, it was concluded that notice of denunciation had not yet been given, and that the Anglo-Japanese alliance would lapse only at the expiration of 12 months from the time when such notice was given. In their opening speeches on June 21, 1921, Mr. Hughes, the Prime Minister of Australia, and Mr. Massey, the Prime Minister of New Zealand, speaking broadly, favored the renewal of the alliance. All expressed the desire that there should be friendly cooperation with the United States.

"In this country the prospect of the continuance of the alliance had caused no little uneasiness. The agreement had originally been prompted and it had been continued because of the attitude of Russia and Germany, but there was no longer fear of danger from those quarters. The American policy in the Far East was one of equal opportunity, and if there were to be cooperation in the recognition and application of this principle, there seemed to be no exigency requiring the continuance of the agreement. The question was pressed, and there was no satisfactory answer: 'Why, under existing conditions, should there be such an alliance?'

"Meanwhile, as Mr. Balfour has expressed it, 'a state of international tension' had arisen in the Pacific area. It was quite impossible to point to any definite issue which warranted the forebodings in which prophets of evil indulged. Those mischief-makers who seek to aggravate international difficulties and to make still heavier the burden of distrust, whose rumor factories are more provocative than armament, were busy inciting suspicion and ill feeling both here and in the East. It became manifest that it was an opportune time, indeed that it was necessary to have a frank discussion and to endeavor to clear away the clouds. There was instant appreciation of the fact that the hour had struck, not only to discuss limitation of arms but to do even a better thing in seeking to remove causes of misunderstanding. The combination of the two objects was the outstanding feature of the American proposal.

"The inclusion of Pacific and far eastern questions in the program of the conference naturally made it desirable that certain other powers which were especially interested in these questions should be invited to take part in their discussion, and accordingly, in addition to China, invitations for this purpose were extended to Belgium, the Netherlands, and Portugal.

"While, with respect to armament, the hope of accomplishment centered in the naval situation, it was deemed best not to exclude the discussion of land armament. We have looked with deep concern upon the maintenance of large military establishments by peoples already impoverished by the Great War, and have earnestly desired that this intolerable burden could be lightened. For ourselves, we had no problem of this sort. Our Army had been reduced. From approximately 4,000,000 men in the field and in training in the American Army at the time of the armistice, we had brought down our Regular Establishment to less than 160,000 men at the time of the conference. But while this subject was presented to the conference, it at once became apparent that Europe was not ready to limit land armament. I need not dwell on the causes for the feeling of insecurity that has oppressed the victors and filled the new European States with apprehension. Although the reduction of armament was one of the declared objects of the new international organization and lay close to the hopes of peoples, still, after prolonged consideration, the League of Nations has apparently come to the conclusion that nothing can be accomplished in this direction until the governments primarily concerned agree, and that they are not yet ready to agree.

"Let me recapitulate briefly the formal results of the conference. Four treaties were approved relating (1) to the limitation of naval armament, (2) to the use of submarines and poison gases, (3) to principles and policies in matters concerning China, and (4) to Chinese customs tariffs. Important resolutions were adopted (1) for a commission of jurists to consider amendments to the laws of war made necessary by new agencies of warfare; (2) for a board of reference for far eastern questions; and (3) with respect to various matters affecting China, such as extraterritoriality, foreign postal agencies, foreign armed forces, radio stations, unification of railways, reduction of Chinese military forces, publicity for existing commitments, and the Chinese Eastern Railway.

"Most important treaties, not technically a part of the work of the conference as such, but which were negotiated while the conference was in session and were facilitated by that fact, were (1) the four-power treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan relating to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean. This provided for the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. (2) The Shantung treaty between China and Japan, providing for the restoration to China of rights and interests in the Province of Shantung.

"In addition, while the conference was in session the negotiations which had previously been going on between the United States and Japan as to the island of Yap and the mandated islands in the Pacific Ocean north of the Equator resulted in a satisfactory agreement.

"During the difficult period of preparation for the conference we were equally harassed by the extravagant demands of dreamers and the pessimistic predictions of cynics. We were intent on certain definite and practical aims. We refused to surrender these aims either to those who were insistent upon the millennium or to those who told us that the sure result of our unintelligent efforts would be to bring about another war.

"Results of the conference: The most important results are those which are unwritten and imponderable—those that relate to sentiment and purpose, to good will and a better understanding. When there is friendship and confidence, treaties to maintain peace are of least importance; and where suspicion and hatred dominate the thought of peoples, it may be wise to interpose the mechanism of conciliation, but the best assurance of peace is lacking. If you would measure the work of the conference, contrast the present opinion as to peace in the East with the view that was widely held and constantly expressed before the conference was called. The mists which many called war clouds have been dispelled. Confidence has been restored, fears allayed, and a new feeling of respect and friendship engendered. Quite apart from specific engagements, it was worth all the efforts of the conference to produce a new state of mind with respect to our relations with the Far East. It will be the part of wisdom for our peoples to maintain this attitude and to frown upon those who seek to change it. Auto-suggestion has an important place in national as well as individual life, and nations intent on peace will find the ways of peace.

"When we come to consider the more tangible results of the conference and of the proceedings in connection with it—that is, with respect to treaties and transactions—we find abundant reason for gratification.

"1. The Shantung treaty became effective and is being carried out.

"2. The treaty between the United States and Japan relating to the mandated islands north of the Equator, including Yap, has been ratified and is in effect.

"3. The four-power treaty has received the assent of our Senate, has been ratified by the British Empire and by Japan, and is awaiting only the ratification of France, which it is expected will shortly be given.

"4. The naval treaty and the treaty as to submarines and poison gases have received the assent of the Senate of the United States and have been ratified by the British Empire and Japan. Ratifications by France and Italy are still needed, but are expected. (Note: Since this was written Italy has ratified.)

"5. The two Chinese treaties have been approved by the United States, the British Empire, and China. One of the houses of the Belgian Parliament has approved. There should not be a long delay in securing the necessary ratifications.

"6. The Commission of Jurists, which is to consider the amendment of the rules of international law respecting new agencies of warfare, is now sitting at The Hague.

"I am happy to say that at this time there seems no good reason to fear that any of the work of the conference will be lost.

"Proceedings pending ratification: The spirit of cooperation to which I have referred has been evidenced by the attitude of the governments since the conference. The naval treaty, of course, will not be in force until all the signatory powers have ratified and the ratifications have been exchanged, but pending this putting into effect of the treaty it is agreeable to note that the powers have been making their plans in conformity to its terms.

"United States: Immediately after the signing of the treaty the Government of the United States suspended all work on ships under construction, which will be scrapped when the treaty becomes effective. With the exception of the Connecticut, which is about to be placed out of commission, all battleships that must be disposed of under the terms of the treaty are now out of commission and are ready to be scrapped.

"British Empire: By the treaty the British Empire abandoned the construction of the four Hoods, which have been projected. I am advised that of the 20 other capital ships which it was provided in the treaty should be scrapped, 14 have either been already sold and removed by ship-breaking firms for breaking up or have been rendered incapable of war service, and two more of these ships will be rendered incapable of war service before the end of this month.

"Japan: I am informed that Japan has suspended work on the battleships under construction for the scrapping of which the treaty provides; also that certain preliminary preparations have been made so that the other ships destined by the treaty for scrapping may be scrapped as soon as the treaty becomes effective.

"The treaty did not call for any scrapping of ships by France or Italy.

"In short, pending the exchange of ratifications of the naval treaty, the signatory powers are not only not ignoring its provisions but are making arrangements faithfully to carry out its terms.

"New construction: The retention by Japan of the completed post-Jutland ship Mutsu required certain compensatory changes in the original proposals. Thus the United States, under the treaty, is entitled to complete two ships of the West Virginia class. These are being completed, and it is believed that both of these vessels will be commissioned with the coming fiscal year. Upon their completion the United States is to scrap the North Dakota and the Delaware. Great Britain is also entitled under the treaty and is proposing to build two new ships, and on their completion four of the older ships, the Thunderer, King George V, the Ajax, and the Centurion, are to be scrapped.

"It is to be borne in mind that with these exceptions Great Britain and Japan, as well as the United States, abandoned their building programs for capital ships. This embraced the rest of Japan's 8–8 program, and also the four Hoods projected by Great Britain, which would have been the greatest of all ships with a tonnage believed to be about 49,000 each. The new ships which may be constructed under the treaty, or in replacement of the retained ships, may not exceed 35,000 tons (35,560 metric tons).

"Reconstruction or modernization: The naval treaty provides that no retained capital ships or aircraft carriers shall be reconstructed except for the purpose of providing means of defense against air and submarine attack. Reconstruction for this purpose is subject to the rules that the contracting powers may equip existing tonnage with bulge or blister or antiair attack deck protection providing the increase of displacement thus effected does not exceed 3,000 tons (3,048 metric tons) displacement for each ship. It is also provided that no alterations in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of mounting of main armament is to be permitted. There are two exceptions to this—one in the case of France and Italy and another in the case of the British ship Renown, the alterations to the armor of that ship having been commenced before the conference and temporarily suspended.

"I am advised that the competent authorities of our Government have no information that any power, pending the exchange of ratifications of the treaty, is proceeding contrary to these provisions.

"When the conference was called Great Britain and the United States were pursuing different policies as to naval construction. Our Navy had adopted the policy of constructing new capital-ship tonnage without attempting to modernize the older tonnage. Great Britain had adopted a policy of modernizing her older capital ships and she began to put this policy into effect during the war. The result is that in a considerable number of British ships bulges have been fitted, elevation of turret guns increased, and turret loading arrangements modified to conform to increased elevation. By the reconstruction clauses of the treaty this system is only partially stopped. It is recognized that it is entirely legitimate to allow suitable provision to be made in the older ships for defense against submarine and air warfare. Since the signing of the treaty, and keeping strictly within its terms, Great Britain has continued her policy of modernizing her older ships to meet the dangers of air and torpedo attack. On the other hand, it must be remembered that with the completion of the two ships of the West Virginia class we shall have three post-Jutland ships with eight 16-inch guns each, and also the Tennessee and California, of 32,300 tons with twelve 14-inch guns, which were completed in 1921.

"So far as the United States is concerned the ground of complaint seems to be not of the treaty standard but of the fact that the appropriations which have thus far been allowed are not deemed by our experts to permit the personnel needed to maintain adequately the treaty standard and do not provide for the modernization work on older ships to protect against air and submarine attack; that is, work which may be done under the provisions of the treaty by the United States as well as by other powers.

"Personally, I am strongly in favor of maintaining an efficient Navy up to the treaty standard. This does not involve any injurious competition in battleships but simply makes possible the work and equipment which maintain the security and relative position contemplated by the treaty. There is another reason for this course. If we enter another conference, we should have an assured basis for a proper agreement by maintaining our existing relative strength. We have established a fair ratio based on existing strength as it stood at the time of the conference, and this ratio should not be altered to our prejudice.

"Policy of the naval treaty: The policy of limiting armaments by international agreement has widespread approval. There is no doubt that it has the support of a preponderant sentiment in this country. It seems to be the only way to avoid either a self-imposed sacrifice of security by independent limitation or a competition involving most wasteful expenditures and provocative of war. If you wish peace, you must pursue the paths of peace. Reasonable precaution in a prudent preparation for contingencies is one thing; a bellicose disposition and threatening gestures and preparation are quite different. Competition has its dangers for those who live under constitutional government where the purse strings may be closely held. Those who constantly insist that we should go our own way, scorning the agreements of peace, using our great resources to establish a superiority in armament which would brook no resistance, need a word of caution. It is very important not to wake up the wrong man. At the last it may turn out that you have stirred up fears and corresponding activities elsewhere, while your own people refuse to respond to your stimulus. While power and resources may be abundant, the power may not be exercised and you may lose the race which your bravado has encouraged. To a peace-loving democracy what could be more agreeable than reasonable security under an agreement which halts a wasteful competition in armament?

"The question really comes, not to the advisability of such an agreement in the abstract but to the fairness of a particular agreement. One indication that the present naval treaty is fair to all may perhaps be found in the fact that in each of the three countries—the United States, Great Britain, and Japan—there were loud complaints that the treaty was to the advantage of the others. As all could not be right it may be proper to assume that what the naval authorities of these countries in attendance at the conference approved was relatively fair. The definitions with respect to standards of measurement and displacement are the same for all powers. No unfair advantage is given to anyone.

"There was general agreement that capital ship tonnage should be used as the measurement of strength of the respective navies. Of course, there would be differences of view as to any matter of this sort, but this was the opinion of our experts and of others. With this as a basis for the agreement, we took the existing strength of the different navies as they were. What could be fairer than that? If one power could better its position, so could another, and the race would inevitably continue. We insisted, and this was entirely reasonable, that vessels under construction should be counted simply to the extent of the work done at the date of the conference.

"The conference put a stop to competition in capital ships—the great fighting ships of the rival navies. It put an end to the existing competitive programs in capital ships. It established the ratio based on existing strength and took the measure of that strength as shown by the proportion of capital ships built and in course of construction.

"Was it not better that at a time of considerable tension instead of threatening Japan by a proposal to fortify Guam we should agree that for 15 years we should rest content with the situation with which we had been satisfied for the past 23 years? And it should be remembered that in the same treaty Japan undertakes to maintain the status quo in the Kurile Islands, the Bonin Islands, Amami-Oshima, the Loochoo Islands, Formosa, and the Pescadores, and any other insular possessions she may hereafter acquire.

"My conclusion is that the naval treaty will stand the test of analysis and fair statement, taking all the pertinent facts into consideration, and that it will be a desirable safeguard and not a menace to our security and at the same time an important assurance of peace. These happy results will be obtained, however, on the condition that we act toward other nations in the same spirit of reasonableness and friendship that we expect them to exhibit toward us.

"Auxiliary vessels—light cruisers, etc.: The original American proposal contemplated a limitation of auxiliary combatant craft in a ratio similar to that recognized by the treaty as to capital ships. It was proposed that the tonnage of auxiliary surface combatant craft, including light cruisers, flotilla leaders, and destroyers, should be as follows: For the United States, 450,000 tons; for the British Empire, 450,000 tons; for Japan, 270,000 tons. Unfortunately, this limitation was not secured. I shall not review the reasons for this, but I may say that the failure is not attributable to us. The American position is just the same as it was at the conference, and we should welcome the opportunity to make the agreement upon this subject that we then proposed. So far as I am able to see, the difficulties that then stood in the way of such an agreement between the powers signatory to the treaty still stand.

"As to light cruisers, the United States is not as well supplied as it should be, but the treaty does not interfere with adequate provision by the United States to supply this want, and it should be supplied. This may be done on a basis which, I have no doubt, all powers would recognize as reasonable and without starting an injurious competition. Moreover, at the worst, it should be remembered that competition in combatant craft of not more than 10,000 tons with 8-inch guns is a very different thing than unlimited competition in the monster battleships of over 30,000 tons and which in the case of the projected Hoods were running to nearly 50,000 tons.

"Fortifications: Failing to find unfairness in these provisions of the treaty, there has been some criticism of the agreement to maintain the status quo with respect to fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific Ocean. The United States, British Empire, and Japan agree to maintain this status quo in their respective territories and possessions specified as follows:

"(1) The insular possessions which the United States now holds or may hereafter acquire in the Pacific Ocean, except (a) those adjacent to the coast of the United States, Alaska, and the Panama Canal Zone, not including the Aleutian Islands, and (b) the Hawaiian Islands;

"(2) Hongkong and the insular possessions which the British Empire now holds or may hereafter acquire in the Pacific Ocean, east of the meridian of 110° east longitude, except (a) those adjacent to the coast of Canada, (b) the Commonwealth of Australia and its Territories, and (c) New Zealand;

"(3) The following insular territories and possessions of Japan in the Pacific Ocean, to wit, the Kurile Islands, the Bonin Islands, Amami-Oshima, the Loochoo Islands, Formosa and the Pescadores, and any insular territories or possessions in the Pacific Ocean which Japan may hereafter acquire.

"With respect to the United States this means that we can not increase our fortifications and naval bases in the Philippines, Guam, and the Aleutian Islands. We are free to add to our fortifications and naval bases in the Hawaiian Islands and in the islands adjacent to the coast of the United States, Alaska, and the Panama Canal Zone, except the Aleutian Islands.

"It is hardly necessary to say that every naval strategist has looked at Guam as an island of great strategic value. In fact, its position presents such opportunities that commensurate fortifications and naval facilities, however peaceful might be our actual intent, could hardly fail to be regarded as a menacing gesture of no slight consequence.

"But while naval facts are important, political facts are just as important. The strategist will accomplish nothing without his Congress. The political consequences of the action he desires can not be ignored. We have heard so much from naval experts about Guam that I must refer to what Senator LODGE said about this island during the debate in the Senate on the naval treaty. He said that he had been 'a good deal amused at the agony of apprehension which some persons have expressed in regard to Guam.' We had taken that island in the Spanish-American War; it was taken by the cruiser Charleston. But we had so little interest in the island that we had never passed any legislation to provide for its government. It had been left in the hands of the Navy which captured it. The captain of the ship represented the captors and ruled the island. The Senator added that we had never fortified it and nobody would vote spending money in fortifying it.

"While the three great naval powers are not under an agreement as to limitation upon the total tonnage of auxiliary combatant craft, it ought to be possible to arrange a modus vivendi which would preclude a wasteful and unnecessary competition. While plans are now being made by other powers for new construction of auxiliary combatant craft, there is nothing that can be called in any degree alarming. The point of difficulty, so far as the United States is concerned, is that there is not a proper balance in its Navy because of the lack of light cruisers, but as I have said this could properly be remedied.

"Pacific and far eastern questions: The indirect result of the conference in the Shantung settlement was, as I have said, of controlling importance. The four-power treaty in the simplest manner solved a great problem while pledging nothing contrary to our traditions. It created the atmosphere of peace and confidence in friendly relations, and at the same time provided for the immediate termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, thus disposing of one of the most difficult questions relating to the Far East.

"The Chinese treaties give China a Magna Charta. We could not provide stability for China, but we did provide assurances of respect for her sovereignty, independence, and territorial and administrative integrity, and the full and most unembarrassed opportunity to develop and maintain for herself an efficient and stable government. We have done all that we can do for China short of the interference which she resents and we condemn.

"For the first time the principle of the open door, or equality of commercial opportunity, in its application to China, has the sanction of a precise definition in appropriate treaty provisions. We were not content with a general statement of principles; we proceeded to particulars.

"The Washington conference, if its work continues to enjoy the same support in public sentiment as was so emphatically expressed at the time, will not only afford a better assurance of peace and the continuance of friendly relations, but will serve to illustrate the method of effective international cooperation which fully accords with the genius of American institutions."

Mr. Speaker, my term of service in this body is drawing to a close. For eight years I have had the honor of representing the Long Island district, a period full of interesting and stirring events when patriotism rose above partisanship. it has been a personal pleasure to have associated with you as colleagues and a privilege to have known you as friends. I feel deeply indebted to you all for your courtesy, your kindly consideration, and the generosity extended to me while I have been among you, and I tender my thanks to you with sincere gratitude. The days of our comradeship, consecrated by service to the Nation and cemented by fellowship and mutual confidence, will remain memories which the fleeting years will not efface.

I have felt it a signal honor to have served on the Committee on Naval Affairs during the stormy times of the last few years. The memory of Chairman Padgett, courteous and kindly, whose career was marked by ability and fidelity, is a most happy one.

For my dear friend Chairman BUTLER my feeling lies deeper than the mere association of one colleague with another. It is inspired by sincere affection. His generosity, his sympathy, and his unselfish consideration for others has endeared him to all who have had the pleasure of an intimate acquaintanceship, and in severing our official ties I extend to him my felicitations and congratulations upon the great service he has rendered the Navy.

To my colleagues on the Naval Committee, gentlemen who have striven earnestly and conscientiously in the fulfillment of their duty, I thank you for your cooperation. My colleagues, let us never forget that the American Navy is the very bulwark of our liberties, the protection of our national policies. Throughout the years of its untarnished history it has ever been ready to defend the flag it carried. Keep it strong, keep it virile, keep it efficient. The United States Navy means more than crews and ships, more than power of shell and might of steel; it connotes the will and the purpose of the Republic itself; it epitomizes the spirit of America and binds us to a closer and more resolute union. It is the symbol not only of daring but of sacrifice, not only of courage but of constructive endeavor, constant in purpose and steadfast to the end. To the fertility of resource, the unswerving devotion to duty, and the heroic bravery of officers and men of the service no higher tribute can be paid than by the simple words, All is well with the American Navy.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was not present on the floor of the House to-day when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]——

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's remarks are not being confined to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. BRITTEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, if we get into a war debate we shall be talking here for a month. My only desire is that from now on we shall confine our remarks to the bill.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman did not object when the gentleman from Minnesota consumed 15 minutes of the time of the House to-day.

Mr. BRITTEN. I withdraw the reservation, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of objection is withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire if we are going to have general debate in the consideration of this bill at this late hour? We might as well rise in a few minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I will move to rise in a few minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] was privileged to discuss something outside of the bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the gentleman refers to me, I will say that the remarks he referred to were made by my colleague, Mr. KNUTSON.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think my enunciation is clear enough to distinguish "KNUTSON" from "NEWTON."

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I was not present in the House when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] to-day unfurled the German imperial standard, as it were, here on the floor of this House. He made a speech such as I hope has never been made in this House before and such as I hope will never be sounded within these precincts again. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Minnesota perhaps lies within the class to which I referred several days ago in certain remarks which I made on the floor, after having inserted in the RECORD excerpts from a certain letter on the Ruhr situation, concerning which the gentleman spoke to-day, and I am going to read those remarks so that the House may judge for itself. I read from the RECORD of February 3, 1923:

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have simply had this excerpt of a letter from a French soldier, which you have just heard, read into the RECORD as something of a supplement to the views which I sought to present on the floor of this House day before yesterday. I recognize the fact that there are gentlemen in this country, and perhaps on the floor of this House, which the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 5, 1917, will show not to have been in accord with the great idea which moved this great Nation of ours to enter into the war to save civilization, and which did save civilization. These were against our entering the war, and, quite consistently, voted against the declaration of war against the Imperial German Government. I recognize the fact that those of us who had the high privilege of serving in that war do not owe that privilege to the votes of these gentlemen. It was only natural to expect that they would not avail themselves of the privilege to fight which they denied others, and, with one or two notable exceptions, this was true. It is perfectly consistent for these gentlemen to now oppose the position I have taken in pleading the cause of France, and I have no doubt that such opposition as my views may receive here will largely come from that element on the floor of this House. These gentlemen are at least consistent, although I am sorry to say they are as ill-advised now as then and, incidentally, as much in the minority. [Applause.]

It is indeed more than a coincidence that the three gentlemen, Mr. LONDON, Mr. VOIGT, and Mr. KNUTSON, who have seen fit—and they are within their privileges, I will admit—to take a very marked and pronounced pro-German attitude in this body all fall well within the category which I have described. Only this morning from the Washington Post I cut out this clipping. It is very apropos to the subject:

VOIGT, of Wisconsin, offers a resolution in the House protesting against the French Ruhr occupation as an act of war and dunning France for the debt. Statesman of marked consistency in abhorrence of acts of war, he having voted against the well-known one of April 6, 1917. Born in Germany? Go to the head of the class.

And as to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], perhaps it would be quite proper to declare that he be promoted at once to be second to the head of the class. The remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] might fall upon sympathetic ears in Russia, Germany, or Norway perhaps; but they find little sympathy in the United States of America, lest it be in the "Little Germany" of certain congressional districts, which I will not mention; it is not necessary.

Now I quite agree with the views of my colleague and friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]. I indorse every word he says. He served gallantly at the front, participating in many battles, and he knows what he is talking about. I know that gentlemen like Mr. KNUTSON, of Minnesota, will say the war is over. I will say to the gentlemen of the House that the war never began for gentlemen like the gentleman from Minnesota. Those of us who had the high privilege of serving in some capacity in that great war to save civilization—and I do not refer alone to those who happened to wear the uniform—owe nothing to such gentlemen. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I say to the House and to the country that Mr. KNUTSON represents only his own pro-German views and perhaps those of that small minority to which I have referred, and it would have been in better taste had he delivered his speech in his district in Minnesota, for which it was no doubt intended. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California yields back the remainder of his time. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TO CREDIT CERTAIN OFFICERS WITH ACTIVE DUTY PERFORMED SINCE RETIREMENT.

SEC. 4. That all retired commissioned and warrant officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps who served on active duty in the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States during the war with Germany shall be credited with all active duty performed since retirement during the period from April 6, 1917, to March 8, 1921, in the computation of their longevity pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I claim the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 4137) to authorize the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3169. An act to equalize pensions of retired policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

S. 2531. An act to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 5224. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, lands in the State of Louisiana not needed for naval purposes.

H. R. 13046. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Wilmington, N. C., marine hospital reservation.

H. R. 13760. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts," approved November 14, 1921.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURTON, for February 16 and 17, on account of important business.

FEDERAL FORESTRY BILL.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to have reprinted 500 copies of House Document No. 558.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to have reprinted 500 copies of House Document No. 558. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. What is the document?

Mr. GERNERD. A letter from the President relating to reforestation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF H. R. 14183 TO THE UNION CALENDAR.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 14183, reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, be transferred from the Private to the Union Calendar. It is a bill which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a small strip of land belonging to the Federal Government. I think it really belongs on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that H. R. 14183 be transferred from the Private Calendar to the Union Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let it go over for to-night.

Mr. DENISON. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. For the time being, Mr. Speaker, I will object.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House during the remainder of this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be granted leave to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For how long?

Mr. WINSLOW. I said during the remainder of the session. Ten days will be plenty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 369. An act for the relief of the owner of Old Dominion Pier A.

H. R. 10529. An act for the relief of Harry E. Fiske.

H. R. 7583. An act for the relief of Henry Peters.

H. J. Res. 440. Joint resolution to satisfy the award rendered against the United States by the Arbitral Tribunal established under the special agreement concluded June 30, 1921, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Norway.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, may I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to finish this bill now before the House, and the omnibus Post Office bill—or, at least, to make headway with the omnibus Post Office bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There will be nothing more unless there should be conference reports?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] at the opening of the session.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask whether or not what is known as the teachers' salary bill will be given an opportunity to be taken up at this session?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. I am asking for information. As one Member of the House I am hoping that it will.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. BLANTON. If I can not get any information on that subject, I will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, February 16, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

993. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to settle pressing claims in admiralty, presented in part through the State Department by foreign governments on behalf of owners of vessels damaged by craft in the service of the War Department during the war (H. Doc. No. 576); to the Committees on Appropriations and Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

994. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, amounting to $244,300, and deficiency appropriations for the fiscal years 1918 and 1919 amounting to $169.47; in all, $244,469.47 (H. Doc. No. 577); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

995. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, amounting in all to $650,000, together with certain proposed legislation (H. Doc. No. 578); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

996. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, amounting to $183,000 (H. Doc. No. 579); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

997. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $16,940.61 to pay claims which he has adjusted, and which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 580); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

998. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, amounting to $2,325,000 (H. Doc. No 581); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

999. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $848,067.29 to settle in full all claims of the American Red Cross against the War Department and which require an appropriation for its payment (H. Doc. No. 582); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 13239. A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the town of Kittery, Me., for park purposes, all right and title now vested in the United States to the entire Government reservation known as Fort McClary, in said Kittery; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1609). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HICKEY: Committee on the Judiciary, H. R. 14324. A bill to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 1611). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HICKEY: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 6376. A bill to amend the act establishing the eastern judicial district of ern countries; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1621). Referred the House Calendar.

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania: Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress. H. J. Res. 220. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 1613). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress. H. R. 14186. A bill fixing the date for the beginning of regular sessions of Congress; without amendment (Rept. No. 1614). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress. H. J. Res. 252. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 1615). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LANGLEY: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. S. J. Res. 218. A joint resolution to create a commission to consider the proposal of a central building for art and industry in the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1616). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LANGLEY: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. J. Res. 347. A joint resolution authorizing the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of a certain portion of the Anacostia Park for tree nursery purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1619). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LANGLEY: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 13961. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the United States marine hospital reservation and improvements thereon at Detroit, Mich., and to acquire a suitable site in the same locality and to erect thereon a modern hospital for the treatment of beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1620). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. S. 4092. An act providing for the admission into the United States of certain refugees from near eastern countries; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1621). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LANGLEY: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 13596. A bill providing for the erection of a post office and public building at Belding, Mich.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1622). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LANGLEY: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 14039. A bill authorizing the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building at Keytesville, Mo.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1623). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LANGLEY: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 14183. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a portion of the Federal building site in the city of Duquoin, Ill.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1617). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LANGLEY: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 12751. A bill to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the hospital reservation of United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78 (Fort Logan H. Roots) in the State of Arkansas; without amendment (Rept. No. 1618). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RHODES: A bill (H. R. 14350) for the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. ROSENBLOOM: A bill (H. R. 14351) to authorize bridging the Ohio River at Moundsville, W. Va.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 14352) to amend the act of Congress approved September 6, 1922, relating to the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in alleys in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 14353) requiring railway and railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce to reimburse employees for property losses sustained by moving terminals or division points; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 14354) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia," and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BURTON: A bill (H. R. 14355) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Cleveland, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FESS: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 447) to provide for the participation of the United States in the observance of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine and of the ninety-second anniversary of the death of James Monroe; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 448) providing for the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to investigate the organization, activities, and administration of the Veterans' Bureau and of the manner in which the laws of Congress relating to invalid and disabled veterans have been and are being administered; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 449) for the relief of the city of Astoria, Oreg.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FISH: A resolution (H. Res. 532) providing for the appointment of a committee of six Members elect of the Sixty-eighth Congress to amend the rules of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A resolution (H. Res. 533) increasing the salaries of James Coates, Benjamin F. Jones, Arthur Lucas, and Albert Scott; to the Committee on Accounts.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, favoring the measure to increase the maximum amount which can be loaned to any one person, as provided in the Federal farm loan act, from $10,000 to $25,000; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, favoring the immediate development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, favoring the use of the modern mail-tube system; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 14356) authorizing the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to take jurisdiction of the application of Pearl Mason; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOGAN: A bill (H. R. 14357) to advance Stephen A. Farrell on the retired list of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 14358) for the relief of John R. Kissinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 14359) granting a pension to Mattie Davidson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 14360) granting a pension to Louisa Woods; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7304. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of Automobile Merchants Association (Inc.), New York City, favoring passage of Senate bill 4202 providing for a national police bureau; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7305. Also, petition of the Bobbins-Ripley Co., New York City, urging passage of section 11 of Senate bill 4137 to relieve war losses due to Government agencies on contract with Navy Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

7306. Also, petition of M. M. Giles, New York City, urging passage of House bill 13298 providing for the extension of the benefits of the war risk insurance act and vocational rehabilitation act to veterans of all wars alike and their dependents; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7307. By Mr. BARBOUR: Resolution adopted by Daylight Post, No. 229, American Legion, San Francisco, Calif., urging the suppression of the Ku-Klux Klan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7308. By Mr. BULWINKLE: Petition of Dr. W. J. Martin, president of Davidson College, North Carolina, relating to an appropriation for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7309. By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of Ferdinand Wolf and other residents of Palms, Mich., urging passage of the resolution to give aid to the people of Germany and Austria; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7310. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of International Typographical Union, Indianapolis, Ind., opposing the passage of the ship subsidy bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

7311. By Mr. DARROW: Petition of Concord School Council, Fraternal Patriotic Americans, of Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., favoring restricted immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

7312. Also, petition of F. D. Pastorius Council, No. 1, Order of Independent Americans, of Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., and Reserve Council, No. 253, Order of Independent Americans, of Philadelphia, Pa., for restricted immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

7313. By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, opposing Senate bill 4243, providing credit to Germany with which to buy raw materials; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7314. By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of various citizens of Tacoma, Wash., favoring repeal of tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7315. By Mr. KIESS: Petition of the Lumber City Council, No. 831, Order of Independent Americans, of Williamsport, Pa., relative to immigration legislation; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

7316. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Central Trades and Labor Council, Greater New York and vicinity, favoring the passage of Senate bill 3136, known as the teachers' salary bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

7317. By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Petition signed by Theo. J. E. Fonnessen and other residents of Minneapolis, Minn., indorsing joint resolution purporting to extend immediate aid to people of German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7318. By Mr. ROGERS: Petition adopted at the town meeting, Carlisle, Mass., urging Congress to set up some agency which shall have the power to fix a maximum price on coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7319. By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Petition by settlers on Twin Falls north side project, Idaho, favoring a reduction of freight rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7320. Also, petition by settlers on Twin Falls north side project, Idaho, favoring a reduction of freight rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7321. By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of Court Italy, No. 142, Foresters of America, and Loggia Unione E Progresso, Sons of Italy, all of Boston, Mass., against the passage of House bill 14273 further restricting immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 16, 1923.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, February 13, 1923.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 302).

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have here a complete statement of the organization of our Government departments as they exist to-day, together with a complete statement of the reorganization of the departments of the Government as recommended by the President and Cabinet at the request of the Joint Committee on Reorganization. I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD, together with the heading that I submit with the plan, and also that a copy of the President's letter addressed to Mr. Walter F. Brown, chairman of the Joint Committee on Reorganization of the Government Departments, be printed in the RECORD, to be followed by the outline of the reorganization plan recommended by the President and the Cabinet. I ask also that the reorganization plan with the heading be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter and statement are as follows:

[Senate Document No. 302, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.]

REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Letter from the President of the United States to Mr. Walter F. Brown, chairman of the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of Government Departments, transmitting a chart exhibiting in detail the present organization of the Government departments and the changes suggested by the President and the Cabinet. Presented by Mr. SMOOT February 13 (calendar day, February 16), 1923. Ordered to be printed.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 13, 1923.

Mr. WALTER F. BROWN,
Chairman Joint Committee on the Reorganization of Government Departments, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BROWN: I hand you herewith a chart which exhibits in detail the present organization of the Government departments and the changes suggested after numerous conferences and consultations with the various heads of the executive branch of the Government. The changes, with few exceptions, notably that of coordinating all agencies of national defense, have the sanction of the Cabinet. In a few instances, which I believe are of minor importance, the principle of major purpose has not been followed to the letter, in order to avoid controversies which might jeopardize reorganization as a whole.

Permit me to repeat what I have said to the members of the Joint Committee on Reorganization—that I regret deeply the delay in placing our suggestions in your hands. It has been caused solely by the difficulty which has been encountered in reconciling the views of the various persons charged with the responsibility of administering the executive branch of the Government.

With the earnest hope that the suggestions submitted may be of material assistance to the committee in performing its most important task, I am,

Very truly yours, WARREN G. HARDING.

OUTLINE OF THE REORGANIZATION PLAN RECOMMENDED BY THE PRESIDENT AND THE CABINET.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS.

The outstanding recommendations are as follows:

I. The coordination of the Military and Naval Establishments under a single Cabinet officer as the Department of National Defense.

II. The transfer of all nonmilitary functions from the War and Navy Departments to civilian departments, chiefly Interior and Commerce.

III. The elimination of all nonfiscal functions from the Treasury Department.

IV. The establishment of one new department, the Department of Education and Welfare.

V. The change of the name of the Post Office Department to Department of Communications.

VI. The attachment to the several departments of all independent establishments except those which perform quasi-judicial functions or act as service agencies for all departments.

THE MORE IMPORTANT CHANGES, BY DEPARTMENTS.

STATE DEPARTMENT.

(a) The Bureau of Insular Affairs is transferred from the War Department to the Department of State.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

(a) The General Accounting Office, now an independent establishment, is transferred to the Treasury Department.

(b) The following bureaus, now in the Treasury Department, are transferred to other departments as noted:

BUREAU OR OFFICE—	TRANSFERRED TO—
Bureau of the Budget	Independent establishment.
General Supply Committee	Independent establishment.[1]
Public Health Service	Education and Welfare.
Coast Guard	Commerce, defense.[2]
Supervising Architect's Office	Interior.

WAR AND NAVY DEPARTMENTS.

(a) These departments are placed under a single Cabinet officer, as the Department of Defense. Three undersecretaries are provided; for the Army, for the Navy, and for national resources.

(b) The nonmilitary engineering activities of the War Department, including the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, the District and Division Engineer Offices, the Mississippi River and California Débris Commissions, the Board of Road Commissioners for Alaska, and the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds (District of Columbia), are transferred to the Department of the Interior.

(c) The marine activities of the War Department, including the Lake Survey Office, the Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service, and the supervisor of New York Harbor, are transferred to the Department of Commerce.

(d) The Bureau of Insular Affairs is transferred from the War Department to the Department of State.

(e) The Hydrographic Office and the Naval Observatory are transferred from the Navy Department to the Department of Commerce.

(f) The Revenue Cutter Service, now a part of the Coast Guard in the Treasury Department, is transferred from that department to the Naval Establishment.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

(a) The Interior Department is given two major functions: The administration of the public domain and the construction and maintenance of public works. The subdivisions of the department are grouped accordingly under two assistant secretaries.

(b) The educational and health activities of the department, including the Bureau of Education, Indian schools, Howard University, the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, St. Elizabeths Hospital, and Freedmen's Hospital, together with the Bureau of Pensions, are transferred to the new Department of Education and Welfare.

(c) The Bureau of Mines[3] and the Patent Office are transferred to the Department of Commerce.

(d) The nonmilitary engineering activities of the War Department[4] are transferred to the Department of the Interior, as is also control over the national military parks.

(e) The Supervising Architect's Office is transferred from the Treasury Department to the Department of the Interior.

(f) The Bureau of Public Roads is transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior.

(g) The functions of the Federal Power Commission, an independent establishment, are transferred to the Department of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

(a) The solicitors of the several departments, now nominally under the control of the Department of Justice, are transferred to the departments to which they are respectively attached.

(b) The office of the Alien Property Custodian, now an independent establishment, is transferred to the Department of Justice.

(c) The administration of United States prisons is transferred from the Department of Justice to the Department of Education and Welfare.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS.

(a) The Post Office Department is renamed as the Department of Communications. The only important change contemplated is the addition of a bureau to develop and extend telephone and telegraphic communications, including wireless, for the general public benefit.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(a) The Bureau of Public Roads is transferred to the Department of the Interior.

(b) The Botanic Garden is transferred from congressional supervision to the control of the Department of Agriculture.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

(a) The Department of Commerce is given three major functions: The promotion of industry, the promotion of trade, and the development, regulation, and protection of the merchant marine. The subdivisions of the department are organized, accordingly, under three Assistant Secretaries.

(b) The Bureau of Mines and the Patent Office are transferred to the Department of Commerce from the Department of the Interior, as well as the compilation of statistics of mineral production.[5]

---

[1] A bureau of purchase and supply is proposed, to be an independent establishment. It would assume the functions now performed by the General Supply Committee.

[2] The Coast Guard is now composed of the former Revenue Cutter and Life Saving Services (consolidated by the act approved January 28, 1915). It is proposed that the Revenue Cutter Service shall be transferred to the Naval Establishment (Department of Defense) and the Life Saving Service to the Department of Commerce.

[3] Except the Government fuel yards, which is to become a part of the proposed Bureau of Purchase and Supply (independent).

[4] See (b) under War and Navy Departments.

[5] Statistics of mineral production are compiled by the Geological Survey of the Interior Department.

(c) The Lake Survey, the inland and coastwise waterways service, the supervisor of New York Harbor, and the compilation of statistics of internal commerce are transferred from the War Department to the Department of Commerce.

(d) The Hydrographic Office and the Naval Observatory are transferred from the Navy Department to the Department of Commerce.

(e) The Life Saving Service is transferred from the Treasury Department (Coast Guard) to the Department of Commerce, which is given control likewise over the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission, now in the Treasury Department.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

(a) The functions of the women's and children's bureaus, except such as relate to women and children in industry, are transferred to the Department of Education and Welfare.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION AND WELFARE.

(a) This is a new department, to have four major subdivisions, each in charge of an assistant secretary, as follows:

Education.
Health.
Social service.
Veteran Relief.

(b) Existing bureaus and offices to be transferred to the Department of Education and Welfare are as follows:

From the Department of the Interior:
Bureau of Education.
Indian schools.
Howard University.
St. Elizabeths Hospital.
Freedmen's Hospital.
Bureau of Pensions.
From the Department of Labor:
Women's Bureau (part).
Children's Bureau (part).
From the Treasury Department:
Public Health Service.
From the War Department:
Soldiers' Home.
From the Department of Justice:
Office of the Superintendent of Prisons.
Independent establishments:
Smithsonian Institution.[6]
Federal Board for Vocational Education.
National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.
Columbia Institution for the Deaf.
Veterans' Bureau.

INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENTS.

(a) To the greatest possible extent the existing independent establishments have been placed under the administrative supervision of some department. Only those remain which are quasi judicial in character, necessitating a board or commission form of organization, or which perform a service function for all branches of the Government. These are as follows:

Commissions, boards, etc.:
Civil Service Commission.
Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.
Tariff Commission.
Interstate Commerce Commission.
Federal Trade Commission.
Federal Reserve Board.
War Finance Corporation.
Coal Commission.
Railroad Administration.
Railroad Labor Board.
World War Foreign Debt Commission.
Service bureaus and offices:
Bureau of the Budget.
Government Printing Office.
Bureau of Efficiency.
Bureau of Purchase and Supply, Government Fuel Yards.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, JOINT COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION.

WALTER F. BROWN, representing the President, chairman.
REED SMOOT, Senator from Utah, vice chairman.
JAMES W. WADSWORTH, JR., Senator from New York.
PAT HARRISON, Senator from Mississippi.
J. STANLEY WEBSTER, Representative from Washington.
HENRY W. TEMPLE, Representative from Pennsylvania.
R. WALTON MOORE, Representative from Virginia.

Scheme of reorganization of the executive departments suggested by the President and Cabinet at the request of the joint committee.

CHART A.—The existing organization of the executive departments.

THE PRESIDENT.

INDEPENDENT EXECUTIVE ESTABLISHMENTS.

Smithsonian Institution (Education and Welfare):
National Museum.
National Gallery of Art.
International Exchange Service.
Bureau of American Ethnology.
Astrophysical Observatory.
National Zoological Park.
International Catalogue of Scientific Literature.
Columbia Institution for the Deaf (Education and Welfare).
National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers (Education and Welfare).
Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Buildings (Interior).
Civil Service Commission.
Interstate Commerce Commission.
Geographic Board (omitted).
Commission of Fine Arts (Interior).
Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission (Interior).
Bureau of Efficiency.
Federal Reserve Board.
Federal Trade Commission.
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (Defense).
Employees' Compensation Commission (Pensions).
Shipping Board:
Emergency Fleet Corporation.
Tariff Commission.
Federal Board for Vocational Education (Education and Welfare).
Alien Property Custodian (Justice).
Railroad Administration.
War Finance Corporation.
Railroad Labor Board.
Federal Power Commission (Interior).
Veterans' Bureau (Education and Welfare).
Coal Commission.
General Accounting Office (Treasury).
World War Foreign Debt Commission.

(I) DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Secretary of State.

Diplomatic Service.
Consular Service.
United States Sections, International Commissions.
Undersecretary of State:
Office of Economic Adviser.
Division of Latin American Affairs.
Division of Mexican Affairs.
Division of Current Information.
Division of Publications.
Office of Special Agent.
Assistant Secretary:
Division of Western European Affairs.
Division of Near Eastern Affairs.
Division of Eastern European Affairs.
Bureau of Appointments.
Second Assistant Secretary:
Division of Passport Control.
Visé Office.
Diplomatic Bureau.
Bureau of Indexes and Archives.
Third Assistant Secretary:
Office of Ceremonials.
Division of Far Eastern Affairs.
Bureau of Accounts.
War Trade Board Section.
Director of the Consular Service:
Consular Bureau.
Office of Consular Personnel.
Commercial Office.
Division of Political and Economic Information.
Office of Chief Clerk.
Solicitor.

(II) DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY.

Secretary of the Treasury.

Undersecretary, in charge of fiscal bureaus:
Commissioner of the Public Debt—
Division of Loans and Currency.
Register of the Treasury.
Division of Public Debt Accounts and Audit.
Savings Division.
Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits—
Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants.
Division of Deposits.
Treasurer of the United States.
Comptroller of the Currency.
Bureau of the Budget (independent).
Bureau of the Mint.
Federal Farm Loan Bureau.
Secret Service Division.
Assistant Secretary, in charge of foreign loans and miscellaneous:
United States Section, Inter-American High Commission (Commerce).
Bureau of Engraving and Printing.
General Supply Committee (independent).
Departmental executive offices.
Assistant Secretary, in charge of public health, public buildings, and Coast Guard (omitted):
Public Health Service (Education and Welfare).
Supervising Architect's Office (Interior).
Coast Guard (Revenue Cutter Service to Defense; Life Saving Service to Commerce).
Assistant Secretary, in charge of the collection of the revenues:
Bureau of Internal Revenue—
Prohibition Commissioner.
Division of Customs.
Customs Service.

(III) DEPARTMENT OF WAR (DEFENSE).

Secretary of War.
Assistant Secretary.
Executive Offices.

General Staff.
War boards and commissions.
Office of the Adjutant General.
Office of the Inspector General.
Office of the Judge Advocate General.
Office of the Quartermaster General.
Office of the Chief of Finance.
Office of the Surgeon General.
Office of the Chief of Ordnance.
Office of the Chief of Chemical Warfare Service.
Militia Bureau.
Bureau of Insular Affairs (State).
Office of the Chief of Chaplains.
Office of the Chief Signal Officer.
Office of the Chief of Air Service.
Office of the Chief of Infantry.
Office of the Chief of Cavalry.
Office of the Chief of Field Artillery.
Office of the Chief of Coast Artillery.

[6] There is some doubt, considering the legal character of the Smithsonian Institution, whether it can be incorporated in a Government department. Its functions, however, are in harmony with those of the proposed Department of Education and Welfare, and the propriety of its inclusion therein is unquestioned if it can legally be accomplished.

Office of the Chief of Engineers.
Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors (Interior).
Board of Engineers, New York City (Interior).
Supervisor of New York Harbor (Commerce).
United States Engineer Offices (Interior).
Lake Survey (Commerce).
Mississippi River Commission (Interior).
California Débris Commission (Interior).
Board of Road Commissioners for Alaska (Interior).
Office of Public Buildings and Grounds and Washington Monument (Interior).
Military Academy.
Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service (Commerce).
Panama Canal.
National Military Park Commissions (Interior).
Soldiers' Home (Education and Welfare).

(IV) DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY (DEFENSE).

Secretary of the Navy.
Assistant Secretary.
Executive offices.

Office of Naval Operations.
Navy boards.
Bureau of Navigation:
Hydrographic Office (Commerce).
Naval Observatory (Commerce).
Naval Academy.
Bureau of Yards and Docks.
Bureau of Ordnance.
Bureau of Construction and Repair.
Bureau of Engineering.
Bureau of Aeronautics.
Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.
Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.
Headquarters, Marine Corps.
Judge Advocate General.
Solicitor.

(V) DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Secretary of the Interior.
Executive offices.

First Assistant Secretary:
General Land Office.
Reclamation Service.
National Park Service.
Assistant Secretary:
Bureau of Indian Affairs (schools to Education and Welfare).
Bureau of Pensions (Education and Welfare).
Patent Office (Commerce).
Bureau of Education (Education and Welfare).
St. Elizabeths Hospital (Education and Welfare).
Howard University (Education and Welfare).
Freedmen's Hospital (Education and Welfare).
Administration of Alaska and Hawaii.
Geological Survey.
Bureau of Mines (Commerce):
Government fuel yards (Bureau of Purchase and Supply, independent).
Alaskan Engineering Commission.
War Minerals Relief Commission.

(VI) DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Attorney General.
Solicitor General.

War Contracts Section.
Assistant to the Attorney General:
Antitrust Division.
Assistant Attorney General:
Division for the Defense of Suits.
Assistant Attorney General:
Public Lands Division—
Office of Titles.
Office of Land Litigation in the District of Columbia.
Assistant Attorney General:
Criminal Division.
Assistant Attorney General:
Division of Admiralty, Finance, Foreign Relations, Territorial and Insular Affairs.
Assistant Attorney General:
Division of Taxation, Insurance, Prohibition, and Minor Regulations of Commerce.
Assistant Attorney General:
Customs Division.
Assistant Attorney General:
Executive Offices.
Solicitor of the Treasury (Treasury).
Solicitor of Internal Revenue (Treasury).
Solicitor for the Interior Department (Interior).
Solicitor for the Department of Commerce (Commerce).
Solicitor for the Department of Labor (Labor).
Bureau of Investigation.
Office of Superintendent of Prisons (Education and Welfare).
Office of Pardons.

(VII) POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT (COMMUNICATIONS).

Postmaster General.
Executive offices.

First Assistant Postmaster General:
Postmasters' appointments division.
Post office service division.
Dead letter division.
Second Assistant Postmaster General:
Railway Mail Service division.
Railway adjustments division.
Foreign mails division.
Air mail service division.
Third Assistant Postmaster General:
Money orders division.
Postal savings division.
Registered mails division.
Stamp division.
Finance division.
Classification division.
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General:
Rural mails division.
Motor vehicle service division.
Equipment and supplies division.
Chief inspector.
Purchasing agent (omitted).
Office of the comptroller.
Solicitor.

(VIII) DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Secretary of Agriculture.
Assistant Secretary.
Executive offices.

Administration of Packers and Stockyards and Trading in Grain Futures.
Weather Bureau.
Bureau of Animal Industry.
Bureau of Plant Industry.
Forest Service.
Bureau of Chemistry.
Bureau of Soils.
Bureau of Entomology.
Bureau of Biological Survey.
Division of Publications.
States Relations Service.
Bureau of Public Roads (Interior).
Bureau of Agricultural Economics.
Insecticide and Fungicide Board.
Federal Horticultural Board.
Solicitor.

(IX) DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Secretary of Commerce.
Assistant Secretary.
Executive Offices.

Bureau of the Census.
Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.
Bureau of Standards.
Bureau of Fisheries.
Bureau of Lighthouses.
Coast and Geodetic Survey.
Bureau of Navigation.
Steamboat Inspection Service.

(X) DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Secretary of Labor.
Assistant Secretary.
Second Assistant Secretary.
Executive Offices.

Bureau of Immigration.
Bureau of Naturalization.
Bureau of Labor Statistics.
Children's Bureau (part Education and Welfare).
Women's Bureau (part Education and Welfare).
Division of Conciliation.
Employment Service.
Housing Corporation.

ESTABLISHMENTS UNDER CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTION.

Library of Congress.
Architect of the Capitol (Interior).
Government Printing Office (independent).
Botanic Garden (Agriculture).
Miscellaneous memorial commissions.
National Forest Reservation Commission.
Public Buildings Commission (independent).

FEBRUARY 9, 1923.

CHART B.—The organization of the executive departments recommended by the President and the Cabinet.

THE PRESIDENT.

Secretary and staff.

INDEPENDENT EXECUTIVE ESTABLISHMENTS.

Budget Bureau (Treasury).
Civil Service Commission.
Bureau of Efficiency.
Bureau of Purchase and Supply (new).
Government Fuel Yard (Interior).
Government Printing Office (Congress).
Shipping Board:
Emergency Fleet Corporation.
Tariff Commission.
Railroad Administration.
Interstate Commerce Commission.
Federal Trade Commission.
Federal Reserve Board.
War Finance Corporation.
Coal Commission.
Railroad Labor Board.
World War Foreign Debt Commission.
Public Buildings Commission (Congress).

(I) DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Secretary of State.

Diplomatic Service.
Consular Service.
United States sections, international commissions.
Undersecretary of State:
Office of the Economic Adviser.
Division of Latin American Affairs.
Division of Mexican Affairs.
Division of Current Information.
Division of Publications.
Office of Special Agent.
Assistant Secretary:
Division of Western European Affairs.
Division of Near Eastern Affairs.
Division of Eastern European Affairs.
Bureau of Appointments.
Assistant Secretary:
Division of Passport Control.
Visé Office.
Diplomatic Bureau.
Bureau of Indexes and Archives.

Assistant Secretary:
Office of Ceremonials.
Division of Far Eastern Affairs.
Bureau of Accounts.
War Trade Board Section.
Assistant Secretary:
Bureau of Insular Affairs (War).
Consular Bureau.
Office of Consul Personnel.
Commercial Office.
Division of Political and Economic Information.
Office of Chief Clerk.
Solicitor:

(II) DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY.

Secretary of the Treasury.

Undersecretary in Charge of Fiscal Bureaus:
Commissioner of the Public Debt—
Division of Loans and Currency.
Register of the Treasury.
Division of Public Debt Accounts and Audit.
Savings Division.
Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits—
Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants.
Division of Deposits.
Treasurer of the United States.
Comptroller of the Currency.
Bureau of the Mint.
Federal Farm Loan Bureau.
Secret Service Division.
Assistant Secretary in Charge of Foreign Loans and Miscellaneous:
Bureau of Engraving and Printing.
General Accounting Office (Independent).
Departmental Executive Offices.
Solicitor of the Treasury (Justice).
Assistant Secretary in Charge of the Collection of the Revenues:
Bureau of Internal Revenue—
Solicitor of Internal Revenue (Justice).
Prohibition Commissioner.
Division of Customs.
Customs Service.

(III) DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE (WAR, NAVY).

Secretary for defense.

Undersecretary for the Army.
Assistant Secretary.
Executive offices:
General Staff.
War boards and commissions.
Office of The Adjutant General.
Office of the Inspector General.
Office of the Judge Advocate General.
Office of the Quartermaster General.
Office of the Chief of Finance.
Office of the Surgeon General.
Office of the Chief of Ordnance.
Office of the Chief of Chemical Warfare Service.
Militia Bureau.
Office of the Chief of Chaplains.
Office of the Chief Signal Officer.
Office of the Chief of Air Service.
Office of the Chief of Infantry.
Office of the Chief of Cavalry.
Office of the Chief of Field Artillery.
Office of the Chief of Coast Artillery.
Office of the Chief of Engineers.
Military Academy.
Panama Canal.
Undersecretary for the Navy.
Assistant Secretary.
Executive offices:
Office of Naval Operations.
Navy boards.
Bureau of Navigation—
Naval Academy.
Bureau of Yards and Docks.
Bureau of Ordnance.
Bureau of Construction and Repair.
Bureau of Engineering.
Bureau of Aeronautics.
Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.
Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.
Revenue Cutter Service (Coast Guard, Treasury).
Headquarters, Marine Corps.
Judge Advocate General—
Solicitor.
Undersecretary for National Resources (new).
Assistant Secretary.
Executive offices:
Men.
Munitions.
Food and clothing.
Transportation.
Communications.
Fuel.
Miscellaneous.
Joint boards (War and Navy).
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (independent).

(IV) DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Secretary of the Interior,
Executive Offices.

Assistant Secretary for Public Domain:
Administration of Alaska and Hawaii.
Indian Lands and Reservations.
General Land Office.
Geological Survey.
War Minerals Relief Commission.
National Park Service.
National Military Park Commissions (War).
Federal Power Section (Federal Power Commission).
Assistant Secretary for Public Works:
Bureau of Public Roads (Agriculture).
Supervising Architect's Office (Treasury).
Alaskan Engineering Commission.
Reclamation Service.
Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors (War)—
Board of Engineers, New York City (War).
United States Engineer Offices (War).
Mississippi River Commission (War).
California Débris Commission (War).
Board of Road Commissioners for Alaska (War).
Bureau of District of Columbia Buildings and Grounds—
Office of Public Buildings and Grounds (War).
Commission of Fine Arts (Independent).
Superintendent, State, War, and Navy Department Buildings (Independent).
Architect of the Capitol (Congress).
Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission (Independent).
Solicitor (Justice).

(V) DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Attorney General.
Solicitor General.

War Contracts Section.
Bureau of Investigation.
Office of Pardons.
Assistant to the Attorney General:
Antitrust Division.
Assistant Attorney General:
Division for the Defense of Suits.
Assistant Attorney General:
Public Lands Division—
Office of Titles.
Office of Land Litigation in the District of Columbia.
Assistant Attorney General:
Criminal Division.
Assistant Attorney General:
Division of Admiralty, Finance, Foreign Relations, Territorial and Insular Affairs.
Alien Property Custodian (independent).
Assistant Attorney General:
Division of Taxation, Insurance, Prohibition, and Minor Regulations of Commerce.
Assistant Attorney General:
Customs Division.
Assistant Attorney General:
Executive offices.

(VI) DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS (POST OFFICE).

Secretary of Communications.
Undersecretary of Communications.
Executive offices.

Assistant Secretary for Postal Service:
Postmasters' Appointments Division.
Post Office Service Division.
Dead Letter Division.
Assistant Secretary for Postal Transportation:
Railway Mail Service Division.
Railway Adjustments Division.
Foreign Mails Division.
Air Mail Service Division.
Assistant Secretary for Postal Finance:
Office of the Comptroller.
Money Orders Division.
Postal Savings Division.
Registered Mails Division.
Stamp Division.
Finance Division.
Classification Division.
Assistant Secretary for Postal Purchases and Supplies:
Rural Mails Division.
Motor Vehicle Service Division.
Equipment and Supplies Division.
Assistant Secretary for Telephone and Telegraph (including Radio) (new):
Telephone Division.
Telegraph Division.
Chief Inspector.
Solicitor.

(VII) DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Secretary of Agriculture.
Assistant Secretary.
Executive offices.

Administration of packers and stockyards and trading in grain futures.
Weather Bureau.
Bureau of Animal Industry.
Bureau of Plant Industry.
Botanic Garden (Congress).
Forest Service.
Bureau of Chemistry.
Bureau of Soils.
Bureau of Entomology.
Bureau of Biological Survey.
Division of Publications.
States Relations Service.
Bureau of Agricultural Economics.
Insecticide and Fungicide Board.
Federal Horticultural Board.
Solicitor.

(VIII) DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Secretary of Commerce.
Executive offices.

Assistant Secretary for Industry:
Bureau of Standards.
Bureau of Mines (Interior).
Bureau of Fisheries.
Bureau of Federal Statistics (new)—
(Bureau of the Census).
Bureau of Customs Statistics (Treasury).
Mineral Production Statistics (Geological Survey).
Internal Commerce Statistics (War).
Bureau of Patents (Interior).

Assistant Secretary for Trade:
Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.
United States section Inter-American High Commission (Treasury).
Bureau of Transportation (new)—
Airways.
Waterways (Federal canals, except Panama).
Highways.
Assistant Secretary for Merchant Marine:
Coast and Geodetic Survey—
Lake Survey (War).
Hydrographic Office (Navy).
National Observatory (Navy).
Bureau of Lighthouses.
Life Saving Service (Coast Guard, Treasury).
Bureau of Navigation.
Steamboat Inspection Service.
Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service (War).
Supervisor of New York Harbor (War).
Solicitor (Justice).

(IX) DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Secretary of Labor.
Assistant Secretary.
Second Assistant Secretary.
Executive offices.

Bureau of Immigration.
Bureau of Naturalization.
Bureau of Labor Statistics.
Children's Bureau (less nonindustrial service).
Women's Bureau (less nonindustrial service).
Division of Conciliation.
Employment Service.
Housing Corporation.
Solicitor (Justice).

(X) DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION AND WELFARE.

Secretary of Education and Welfare.
Executive offices.

Assistant Secretary for Education:
General education—
Bureau of Education (Interior).
Indian schools (Interior).
Howard University (Interior).
Columbia Institution for the Deaf (independent).
Smithsonian Institution (independent)—
National Museum.
National Gallery of Art.
International Exchange Service.
Bureau of American Ethnology.
Astrophysical Observatory.
National Zoological Park.
International Catalogue of Scientific Literature.
Physical education (new).
Vocational education (Federal Board for Vocational Education)—
Section of vocational rehabilitation.
Assistant Secretary for Public Health:
Public Health Service (Treasury)—
Quarantine and sanitation.
Hospitalization—
National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers (independent).
Soldiers' Home (War).
St. Elizabeths Hospital (Interior).
Freedmen's Hospital (Interior).
Research.
Assistant Secretary for Social Service:
Women's Bureau (Labor—part).
Children's Bureau (Labor—part).
Superintendent of Prisons (Justice).
Assistant Secretary for Veteran Relief:
Veterans' Bureau (independent).
Bureau of Pensions (Interior).
Solicitor.

ESTABLISHMENTS UNDER CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTION.

Library of Congress.
National Forest Reservation Commission.
Miscellaneous Memorial Commissions.

FEBRUARY 9, 1923.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Merchant Tailors' Exchange, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented communications in the nature of memorials of the Cheyenne Trades and Labor Assembly, of Cheyenne, and the Central Labor Union, of Rock Springs, both in the State of Wyoming, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the First Church of Christ Scientist, of Winfield, Kans., praying an amendment to the Constitution governing the passage of legislation regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution of the Hazen National Farm Loan Association, of Hazen, N. Dak., protesting against the passage of House bill 13125, amending certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McLEAN presented a communication in the nature of a petition of the Derby and Shelton Board of Trade, of Derby, Conn., praying for the passage of legislation creating a national police bureau in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of citizens in the Old State House at Hartford, Conn., favoring the passage of legislation permitting admission into the United States of Armenians and Greeks who have been expelled from the Turkish Empire, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 6358. An act authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to A. E. Ackerman the pay and allowances of his rank for services performed prior to the approval of his bond by the Secretary of the Navy (Rept. No. 1155); and

H. R. 8046. An act for the relief of Themis Christ (Rept. No. 1156).

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment:

S. 4476. An act to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the hospital reservation of United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78 (Fort Logan H. Roots), in the State of Arkansas; and

H. R. 11579. An act to amend section 1 of an act approved January 11, 1922, entitled "An act to permit the city of Chicago to acquire real estate of the United States of America."

SILVER SERVICE OF BATTLESHIP SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 13351) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the Daughters of the American Revolution of the State of South Carolina the silver service which was used upon the battleship South Carolina, and I submit a report (No. 1153) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this involves a silver service given to the battleship South Carolina. The Secretary of the Navy is in hearty accord with the plan to return it to the Daughters of the American Revolution of South Carolina. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It will not give rise to any debate.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Daughters of the American Revolution of the State of South Carolina, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was presented by the State of South Carolina and used upon the battleship South Carolina while the said battleship was in commission: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. L. D. WEBB.

Mr. PAGE. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 3955) to compensate Lieut. L. D. Webb, United States Navy, for damages to household effects while being transported by Government conveyance, and I submit a report (No. 1154) thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be considered immediately.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire recognition upon the debt funding bill that is before the Senate. I wish to address myself to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield that the bill just reported may be put on its passage?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield if it will not provoke discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. It will not cause any debate.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a claims bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is a claims bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not let it go to the calendar?

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to get it through at once, if possible, so that it can be acted on by the House. It is to pay a soldier for some injury done to his property when it was being transported by the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. There are a good many claim bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield that the bill may be considered?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield if it is not to take any time. If upon the reading of the bill it can be passed without discussion, I will yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill and the Senator from Wisconsin has yielded if it does not cause any debate.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is a favorable report from the department, I have no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is. It will not cause any debate so far as I am concerned.

The bill was read, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$1,090," and insert "$800," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation for "Pay of the Navy" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to Lieut. L. D. Webb, United States Navy, such sum, not exceeding $800, as may be determined by him to pay the amount of damage sustained in full settlement of all claims against the Government for damage to an automobile, silver service, and a piano shipped from San Francisco, Calif., to Washington, D. C., by Government conveyance under authority of section 12 of the act approved May 18, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 4569) to authorize the sale of certain Government property and authorizing an appropriation for permanent buildings and improvements for use of the engineering division of the Air Service of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4570) granting a pension to Joseph H. Ransom; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4571) to amend the trading with the enemy act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4572) for the relief of John R. Kissinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 4573) granting an increase of pension to Ralph Waite; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 4574) granting an increase of pension to Howard E. Banes (with the accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLSON:

A bill (S. 4575) granting an increase of pension to Priscilla George; and

A bill (S. 4576) granting an increase of pension to Clara A. Haver; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 4577) for the relief of J. H. Toulouse; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4578) to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 862); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

CREDITS TO CERTAIN DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment that I may call up a bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the understanding that it will not lead to debate, I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 1111, the bill (S. 4308) to authorize the general accounting officers of the United States to allow credit to certain disbursing officers for payments of salary made on properly certified and approved vouchers. It is the bill to which I referred several days ago. I think it will lead to no debate. It is important to have it passed at once so that the House may have an opportunity to act, that justice may be done to a veteran during the present session of Congress.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the general accounting officers of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the settlement of the accounts of Henry F. Dolan, former disbursing officer of the Federal Board for Vocational Education; R. Stone Jackson, former disbursing officer of the Federal Board for Vocational Education; William H. Holmes, disbursing clerk of the United States Veterans' Bureau; and Clarence W. Nichols, special disbursing agent for the United States Veterans' Bureau regional office in Denver, Colo., for payments of salary made to George M. Apple, as an employee of the Federal Board for Vocational Education and the United States Veterans' Bureau on properly certified and approved vouchers, without fraud or negligence on their part, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved July 31, 1894.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AIR MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me that I may call up a bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it will not take any time and is not a debatable matter, I will yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3084) to authorize and provide for the payment of the amounts expended in the construction of hangars and the maintenance of flying fields for the use of the Air Mail Service of the Post Office Department. It is a bill which the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has reported favorably, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. ODDIE. It is a unanimous report.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to adjust, reimburse, and pay to municipalities and citizens entitled thereto the proper and just amounts heretofore expended in the construction of hangars and the maintenance of flying fields, including the lease and clearing of fields therefor, insurance, and other necessary expenses incurred in connection therewith at Reno, Nev.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Cheyenne, Wyo.; North Platte, Nebr.; Omaha, Nebr., or elsewhere for the use of the air mail service of the Post Office Department where such hangars were constructed and such flying fields maintained under an understanding with an officer or agent of the Post Office Department that reimbursement therefor would be made.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $175,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MCNARY and Mr. MCKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I feel bound to yield no further to the introduction of business. There are still two or three weeks of the session remaining. Later Senators will have an opportunity to present matters they have in charge, and as the time is limited for general discussion I can not yield for the presentation of further business at this time.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I want to make the point of order that there is no quorum present, if the Senator does not object.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand I am not permitted to object to that. I think a quorum will be found to be present upon the roll call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	George	McCumber	Robinson
Bayard	Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Borah	Glass	McKinley	Smith
Brookhart	Gooding	McLean	Smoot
Bursum	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Harreld	Moses	Stanley
Cameron	Harris	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	New	Sutherland
Caraway	Heflin	Nicholson	Townsend
Colt	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Trammell
Couzens	Johnson	Norris	Underwood
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Keyes	Owen	Watson
Dial	Ladd	Page	Weller
Dillingham	La Follette	Phipps	Willis
Ernst	Lenroot	Pomerene
Fernald	Lodge	Reed, Mo.
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Reed, Pa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the settlement of these loans made during the war by the United States to various European nations presents a grievous set of problems to every American who is sincerely concerned for the welfare of his country. If these debts of European Governments to the United States are to be funded on a long-time basis, it means that for two generations the United States is to be tied fast to European affairs by financial bonds, which all experience has shown are stronger even than the ties of blood. In order to save the principal of these billions of debts throughout this long period, we shall be told that it is our duty to use our power to maintain the integrity of each of these debtor nations. For the sake of the British debt we must preserve the vastly overextended and shaky structure of the British Empire and give her aid and comfort in all her imperialistic enterprises. For the sake of the French debt we must sit idly by or give active help while the French imperialists threaten the destruction of civilization in their mad attempts to destroy the German people and dominate the Continent of Europe. We will be bound to the wheels of the imperialistic chariot with these golden chains, and all those who question our participation in such enterprises will be told that they are unpatriotic and inimical to the fundamental interests of the United States.

I can so plainly foresee the evil influence of the existence of these debts upon our whole foreign policy in the years to come that I might be inclined to favor their cancellation if I could be assured that by so doing imperialism would be restrained or even that we would be prevented entirely from being entangled in its intrigues. But I know that cancellation of these debts will not restrain imperialism. It will foster and stimulate imperialism. It will augment its brutal power which to-day is the curse of Europe, Asia, and Africa. The cancellation of these debts would merely enhance the credit of the imperialistic governments which now control these nations and enable them to secure fresh loans with which to pursue and extend their monstrous schemes of conquest. There would be fresh credit for them to squander in larger armies and navies with which to enslave the world.

Furthermore, cancellation of these debts would not cut us loose from the imperialistic imbroglio in which we have become so deeply entangled. These debts are but a minor part of the entangling obligations with which we are bound.

The four-power treaty, the Chinese consortium, the understandings of our State Department with various foreign governments, and, above all and before all, the network of intrigue and community of interest which runs between our international financiers and those of Europe have so completely enmeshed us that only the strong hand of a fearless, independent Executive will ever be able to cut us loose and restore us to that status of independence and self-respect which this Nation maintained so proudly for nearly a century and a half.

Finally, cancellation, unless we could be assured beyond question of compensating advantages, would be an act of injustice and treachery to those Liberty-bond holders who gave during the war "until it hurt." It would be an outrage upon American taxpayers, who sanctioned these loans only upon the most solemn assurance that the nations associated with the United States in the war would pay interest and principal upon the same terms which our Liberty and Victory bonds carried.

Since cancellation is therefore well-nigh unthinkable, it behooves us to consider most seriously our obligations and responsibilities as representatives of the American people in the settlement of these debts. What is our duty to them? That is the question that concerns me, for we may depend upon the representatives of the debtor nations adequately to protect the interests of their people. We are not dealing with children, but with shrewd, cold-blooded diplomats and financiers, compared with which our diplomats and the financiers on our commission are as children. These British diplomats and financiers represent nations which were skilled in all the tricks of diplomacy before our American Debt Commission had cut their wisdom teeth or were out of their swaddling clothes.

It seems to me that our duty is very simple. It is laid down in the law and embodied in the implied contracts under which these loans were made. It is simply to see that these debtor nations pay to the American Government as nearly as possible upon the terms specified in the Liberty loan and Victory loan acts under which these huge sums were raised by the American people. Those were the conditions under which every one of these nations understood that they were borrowing these funds. I say that the terms should be as nearly as possible those laid down in the law, because I realize as well as any man that in the huge debacle of civilization which this war has produced some nations, but by no means all, have been reduced to a condition where for the present at least they can pay little or nothing. Nevertheless, the burden of proof in each case is upon the debtor nations and not upon us.

That does not seem to be the attitude that has been assumed by our American Debt Commission. They have confessed through their spokesman upon the Finance Committee of the Senate that they paid no attention to the terms carried by the Liberty bond acts, that they never proposed to the British commission the minimum terms of 4¼ per cent and 25 years laid down in the act creating the commission, but as their first proposition suggested a settlement of the British debt on a basis of 3½ per cent flat for 62 years. If any confirmation of that is required, I can furnish it from the testimony taken before the Finance Committee. This is most remarkable. Has an act of Congress ceased to have any weight or effect? Are we to create commissions which openly flaunt the limitations imposed upon them? Have these five men become greater than the Senate and House of Representatives? Sir, they are but the agents of the Congress, who were plainly directed in the act which created the commission. It was their plain duty to carry out not only the letter but the spirit of that act.

As I have listened to the defense of this proposed settlement of the British debt from the member of the American Debt Commission, who was chosen from the Senate, I have sometimes thought the Chancellor of the British Exchequer was speaking, so eloquently and with so much feeling did he present the case for the British Empire. I have heard him recite time after time the sad plight in which the great British Empire now finds itself. He has painted a sad picture of the heavy taxes which the British people now pay, but he has not told us what part of those taxes go to the maintenance of the greatest navy in the world; what part represent the cost of keeping in subjection the peoples of India and Egypt; what part was spent in crushing the struggle of the Irish people for genuine independence; what part went to Greece to pay the costs of pulling the British chestnuts in the Near East out of the fire; what part is now being spent in the great struggle of British capitalists and the British Government to monopolize the oil of the world. He told us how heavy the British taxes were, but I have listened in vain for one word from him to indicate that he knew that any American citizen was also paying taxes to pay the cost of a war, fought to save the British Empire from destruction when her back was against the wall and her credit had been exhausted. If this is representative of the attitude of other members of the commission, then I say that we would do well to repeal the act creating the commission and withhold further settlements until we can find somewhere in the United States five gentlemen who understand that America also has problems of the most pressing concern and that her people also are burdened with taxes.

I have also listened in vain for any clear statement of the conditions under which these loans were made. The facts were kept from the American people at the time they were induced or coerced into buying Liberty bonds, out of the proceeds of which these loans were made, but they have now come to light and should be made a part of the record.

The first Liberty loan act was signed April 24, 1917. Keep that date in your minds—April 24, 1917. Just one day later, on April 25, the British ambassador received a check for $200,000,000. A week later half that amount was turned over to the French ambassador. A little later Italy received her share, then Belgium, and Russia, Serbia, Greece, Rumania—all were given credits in the United States Treasury and the golden stream never ceased to flow until long after the armistice was signed.

Why was this extraordinary haste to open the Treasury before the ink was dry upon the resolution that plunged us into the war? Was it extraordinary zeal on our part, or was it extraordinary pressure from some potent sources which were at that time kept well in the background? Let Oscar T. Crosby, then the very able Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of fiscal bureaus, tell the story. He was in touch with every detail of these transactions. I quote from his article in the Atlantic Monthly for December, 1922 (p. 825):

> Governmental action is traditionally slow. The remarkable promptitude with which Secretary McAdoo proceeded (only 24 hours between receiving and exercising the responsibilities placed upon him by Congress) answered to a remarkable pressure brought to bear by the powers "engaged in war against Germany." I shall not soon forget the blunt declaration, made to me 10 days before Sir Cecil Spring-Rice took the first fruits of our efforts, by a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co.: "We have scraped the bottom of the box. They owe us and our associate banks $400,000,000—practically on overdraft, since we can not sell the collateral remaining in our hands without making a panic on the New York stock market. You people in the Treasury must now bear the whole burden. We can do no more."

Six weeks later we learned that in addition to this cash commitment the Allies had contracted for about $800,000,000 worth of goods, deliverable within six months.

So we see that it was to save the desperate credit situation of the allied governments, with American bankers in large part already so desperately overstrained that a panic was imminent, that the doors of the American Treasury were unlocked and they were invited to help themselves.

It was to save the great international banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., the fiscal agent of the British Government, who held $400,000,000 in overdrafts and saw a panic impending if they were not underwritten.

I repeat, sir, that it was to save the great international banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., the fiscal agent of the British Government, who held $400,000,000 in overdrafts and saw a panic impending if they were not underwritten; and, it was for the benefit of our munition makers, who held contracts for $800,000,000, which could not be paid unless the American people furnished the money.

Mr. President, I turn aside for a moment at this point to trace the course of the legislation which has finally culminated in the bill pending before the Senate.

On the 23d of June, 1921, more than 18 months ago, the late senior Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. PENROSE], introduced a bill for the settlement of the pending debt, together with the other foreign debts.

Have Senators forgotten his declaration on the floor that the bill would be immediately taken up by the Finance Committee? The Finance Committee was called together almost immediately for the consideration of that bill. The members of the committee were admonished that it must be considered at once, and that no time could be allowed to the members of the committee to inquire into this complicated transaction. I see about me Senators who demanded time to study the bill and insisted upon taking the testimony of witnesses who could give full information bearing upon this important question. That was one of the most extraordinary bills ever introduced in either branch of Congress. It proposed to invest Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, with power to secretly settle all these foreign debts.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States does not permit the executive department of the Government to take a dollar out of the Treasury. The President can not levy a dollar in taxes. The President can not pay a bill which the Government owes. The President can not withdraw from the Treasury one cent of money to expend, however great and serious the needs of this Government may be. What is the significance of that restriction? The framers of the Constitution regarded the expenditure of money as vital to the existence of this Government. They lodged that power in the hands of the Congress because it was more nearly responsive to the will of the people.

The Constitution provides that not one dollar should ever be taken out of the Treasury except it was done upon the votes of Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, where the roll could be called and the men put on record. So careful were they about all revenue measures that they would not permit a revenue measure to originate excepting in the House of Representatives, where Members every two years go back to the people to account for their stewardship.

In the face of that carefully guarded provision inserted by the makers of the Constitution, a proposition was presented early in the administration of President Harding that the settlement of foreign debts amounting in principal to nearly $10,000,000,000 and in principal and interest at the time to more than $11,000,000,000 be turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury without any restrictions whatsoever.

Mr. President, the history of that legislation shows that in spite of the pressure used by the administration the determination of a group of Senators that the measure should be carefully investigated resulted in the drastic modification of the scheme to refund the foreign debts and finally in the creation of a commission with definite restrictions upon its power.

I want to call attention briefly to an event which seems to me to be closely related to this whole matter.

Mr. President, on May 25, 1921, President Harding gave a banquet at the White House. His honored guests were: J. Pierpont Morgan, 2d, head of the house of Morgan & Co., bankers, New York; Charles H. Sabin, of the Guaranty Trust Co., New York; C. E. Mitchell, of the National City Bank of New York; William Kent, of the Bankers' Trust Co. of New York; Paul Warburg, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; H. C. McEldowney, of the United Trust Co. of Pittsburgh; Benjamin Strong, of the New York Federal Reserve Bank; Secretary Andrew Mellon, one time a banker and then Secretary of the Treasury; and Secretary Hoover, who, rightly or wrongly, was accused of being throughout the war period pretty active in the British interest. Commenting on this celebrated banquet, the Journal of Commerce, 32 Broadway, New York, had this to say:

A meeting of the best financial minds has been inaugurated by President Harding and his advisers as a means of considering the Nation's industrial outlook, with particular reference to the question of extending further loans of American capital to foreign governments.

In the papers reporting this remarkable "meeting of the best financial minds" around the banquet table, it was announced that the Government would exercise a sort of supervisory control of the private investments of our international bankers in foreign countries. This, it was stated, would be done ostensibly to promote foreign trade. This was manifestly the introduction of "more business in Government," which was one of the President's pet phrases applauded to the echo when he delivered his inaugural address.

President Harding's White House dinner to Morgan and his associates was a great event, sir, in the history of the money power. It is believed that it was the first of its kind at the White House. Do you marvel that it was heralded with great rejoicing in Wall Street? The New York Journal of Commerce said of it:

A new era in the relationship of the United States Government and the Nation's financial and business leaders is believed to have been inaugurated in the conference to which President Harding summoned several New York bankers on Wednesday night. These bankers returning yesterday from the meeting, which was participated in by representatives of the Cabinet, observed the customary reticence in discussing what had taken place. They did not, however, hesitate to show their gratification at the development.

One thing is clearly manifest in the report which these bankers made to their associates in New York upon their return, and that is that they found the President willing to learn the Wall Street way. The Journal of Commerce said:

One thing which Wall Street took extreme satisfaction in yesterday was the evident willingness of President Harding to learn. He admittedly is not an expert in financial affairs, but he is ready to accept advice and willing to be set right where he is wrong.

Behold, sir, the beautiful spectacle, the President of the United States sitting at the feet of J. Pierpont Morgan, great teacher——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Getting set right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Willing pupil, and whenever he should chance to be wrong, Morgan will set him right. Surely that was a great day for Wall Street. In the old days, when J. Pierpont Morgan, the first, used to visit the White House, his private car always made the run from New York to Washington and back between two days, but now J. Pierpont Morgan, second, comes and goes with the blare of trumpets. He is greeted and feasted in the white light of publicity by President Harding and walks boldly in where others would not have dared to tread a couple of decades ago.

I come now to Mr. Morgan's second visit. June 10, 15 days after the first visit, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, received J. Pierpont Morgan in his office at the Treasury Department. The conference was reported in the newspapers as an extended one. Just 11 days thereafter the late Mr. Penrose, then chairman of the Committee on Finance, introduced the bill to which I have called attention. He introduced it as an administration measure. It sought to confer upon the Secretary of the Treasury absolute authority to refund in secret all the loans of this Government to the Allies.

Sir, when we took up for consideration the bill which was heralded as the President's bill before the Committee on Finance at the first meeting, the President in a letter urged the Finance Committee to act promptly upon the matter.

Under the provisions of the President's bill, then introduced by Mr. Penrose, Mr. Mellon was empowered to make any settlement with foreign governments he chose to make; to accept any bonds he elected to accept, defer the payment of principal or interest to any remote period, and bind or by substitution release debtor nations at his own will and pleasure. All this Mr. Mellon was empowered to do by that bill under the cloak of absolute secrecy. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and myself, with other members of the committee, insisted upon hearings, and after some time it was found impossible to pass the bill in its existing form. Finally the Debt Commission bill was passed, and this proposed settlement is the result.

Mr. President, I have digressed to call attention to the history of this legislation because I felt it would be well to remind Senators of the influences which have been behind this proposition. But besides all this, the pending bill will guarantee the prompt payment of the five billion of private European loans made through the house of Morgan between 1915 and 1920. With the postponement of the payment of the debt due our Government for 62 years the payment of these private obligations can be met more promptly.

I now return to my line of argument.

So we see that it was to save the desperate credit situation of the allied governments, with American bankers in large part, already so desperately overstrained that a panic was imminent, that the doors of the American Treasury were unlocked and they were invited to help themselves.

It was to save the great international banking firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., the fiscal agent of the British Government, who held $400,000,000 in overdrafts and saw a panic impending if they were not underwritten.

These were the all-powerful sources of the extraordinary pressure upon Congress which denounced as a traitor any man who sought to question any part of these extraordinary and unprecedented transactions.

Is it not possible that the extraordinary pressure to which we are now being subjected to validate this settlement, without questioning any phase of it, without being permitted to question the secretary of the American commission, without being allowed to read the minutes of the conferences—the secretary of the American Debt Commission did keep minutes throughout the conferences held between the American Debt Commission and the British Debt Commission; he had a record of those minutes; the Finance Committee by a majority vote denied members of the committee access to those minutes—without any information, in fact, except what the Senate member of that commission chooses to give us—is it not possible, is it not probable, I say, that this extraordinary pressure is proceeding from the same international bankers who hold bonds of the British Government bearing a rate 2 per cent higher than we are now being asked to validate, the value of which will be enormously enhanced as soon as we approve the terms which have been hatched out in this secret conference?

We need not rely upon Assistant Secretary Crosby's account of these transactions alone. The whole story has been told in "The Life and Letters of Walter H. Page," then ambassador at the Court of St. James, published since his death. Listen to this account, which checks in every detail with that of Mr. Crosby.

I quote from the recent work of Mr. Page, published since his death, containing in two volumes his correspondence while he was ambassador:

> The matter that was chiefly pressing at the time of the Balfour visit to the United States (in April, 1917) was the fact that the British balances in the New York banks were in a serious condition. * * *
>
> Thus, by April 6, 1917, Great Britain had overdrawn her account with J. P. Morgan to the extent of $400,000,000 and had no cash available with which to meet this overdraft. * * *
>
> The money was now coming due; if the obligations were not met, the credit of Great Britain in this country would reach the vanishing point.
>
> Though at first there was a slight misunderstanding about this matter, the American Government finally paid the overdraft out of the proceeds of the Liberty loans. This act saved the credit of the allied countries.

Here, then, we have a part, at least, of the story. British credit was exhausted. Her bonds, which had been deposited with J. P. Morgan & Co. as security for $400,000,000 overdrafts, could not be sold without producing a panic. These bonds bore an interest rate of 5½ per cent, but they were unsalable. To get credit in the open market she would have had to pay 6, 6½, or 7 per cent. The other allied nations were in even more desperate plight. They would have had to pay even higher rates of interest to get credit. Contracts for $800,000,000 of munitions and other supplies were due in six months or less. Funds must be had. If the American Treasury had not been opened and the golden flood of the Liberty loans turned loose these nations would have had to pay the Shylock rates of interest demanded by the international bankers, who are now urging this settlement, and who have been the chief propagandists for complete cancellation in order that the value of their own holdings might be enhanced. And if those loans had been floated with the bankers there would never have been any adjustment of the interest.

The rate nominated in the bond would have been insisted upon, no matter how oppressively it might fall upon overburdened European taxpayers. Oh, how generous these bankers are with the American taxpayers' money!

When these loans were accepted by Great Britain and the other allied governments they knew exactly the terms for which they were bonding themselves. Each of the Liberty loan acts carried specific provisions that the foreign governments which borrowed were to pay upon exactly the terms which the American Government had to guarantee in order to induce its people to buy the bonds. That was fair; that was equitable. Any higher rate would have been profiteering; any lower rate would have been unjust to the American people. The whole matter should have been settled, and settled finally, at that time by requiring these governments to deposit with the United States Treasury their bonds, bearing exactly the same terms as the Liberty loan bonds. But for some reason, which has never been satisfactorily explained, those who were in control of the Government at that time chose to have no definite settlement and accepted demand notes. There are many indications that the settlement of these loans was to be a part of the stakes which were played for at Versailles, but that is a chapter which we need not now explore. The point I make is that the only just and equitable basis upon which these debts can be settled are terms which are substantially the same as those contained in the Liberty loan acts. That, I am sure, is the only basis which will satisfy American taxpayers and the holders of Liberty bonds.

The only question that now confronts us is how far this proposed settlement represents the capacity of the British Government to meet the terms which it tacitly agreed to when it accepted loans out of proceeds of the Liberty and Victory bonds.

The first step toward a satisfactory answer to this question is to take a brief survey of the assets of the British Empire, and particularly the newly won assets which she secured as a result of her participation in the war.

When asked what the Debt Commission had done with regard to inquiring into the assets of the British Nation, the members of the Finance Committee were informed by the Senate member of the commission [Mr. SMOOT] that they had access to all public statements. Did anyone ever hear of a debtor for any considerable sum of money, who was asking for a long-deferred payment, for a long extension of time within which to make payments, not making a statement of his assets and liabilities? Did anybody ever hear of any banker or association or any creditor, where the amount was considerable, who did not require a statement to be made of the assets and of the liabilities of the appealing debtor? There is nothing of that kind here. No statement of assets was demanded by our commissioners; no investigation was made by any expert employed by them; no statement was furnished by the British commission.

Let us inquire, then, how extensive and valuable were the British spoils of war, remembering that without our credit there would have been no such spoils. We have a right to inquire with some insistence into the extent and probable value of these additions to her territory and wealth.

Great Britain added to her empire as a result of the war, either by annexation or by protectorates and mandates, a territory of 3,972,000 square miles—larger than continental Europe—with a population of more than 51,725,000 people. Through these acquisitions she enormously increased her control over raw materials—over oil and rubber, over lead and copper, and the other materials which are essential to modern industry and modern life. Furthermore, Great Britain vastly strengthened her dominance over the trade routes of the world and thus vastly enhanced her power and prestige as a commercial nation.

No one can venture to estimate with any degree of accuracy the value of these enormous additions to the wealth of the British Empire. They are beyond computation. But no one will deny that their potential value amounts to billions upon billions of dollars—many times the amount of the indebtedness covered by this proposed settlement—and it may be said, of greater potential value than her total indebtedness resulting from her participation in the war.

There is one other variety of assets possessed by the British of which we may well take note, namely, their securities representing investments in every quarter of the globe. Upon this point I rely upon no less an authority than Sir Reginald McKenna, former Chancellor of the British Exchequer and now chairman of the London Joint City & Midland Bank. I quote from his address before the last annual meeting of the American Bankers' Association, held in New York City in October, 1922:

> Have the debtors—
>
> Referring to our foreign debtors—
>
> an exportable surplus, and what are their foreign assets? With regard to the latter question, the only debtor possessing any large accumulation of such assets is England. Notwithstanding her immense sale of securities to the United States in the second and third years of the war—a sale which largely furnished the means of paying for the goods of all kinds bought by the Allies—England still owns sufficient foreign securities to cover her debt to the United States two or three times over.

Let Senators take that home to their constituents and account for their votes in reducing the payments from Great Britain from one billion to one billion six hundred million dollars. They will meet it in the coming year face to face.

We have also a right to inquire somewhat into the character of the expenditures which the British Government is now making, while she pleads her inability to pay us more than 1½ per cent interest during the next five years. I have been unable to secure satisfactory figures giving the cost of her various imperialistic adventures in all quarters of the globe, but we all know that they run into hundreds of millions of dollars, and doubtless into the billions. You can not make war even on semicivilized peoples without heavy costs for munitions and men, even when you resort, as has Great Britain, to the wholesale system of wiping out entire villages with bombs dropped from airplanes. Some indication of the extravagant basis upon which the British naval and military forces have been and are being maintained is contained in the report made in 1922 by the committee on national expenditures, headed by Sir Eric Geddes. I quote from volume 1 of that committee's report its conclusions regarding the British Navy (p. 31):

As a result of our consideration, we are of the opinion:

"(1) That the estimates for 1922–23 provide for man power on a lavish scale, and that without in any way interfering either with the manning of the fighting ships of the navy, from capital ships to submarines, as laid down by the Admiralty, there is an excess of over 33,000 officers and men in the navy which, having regard to our recommendations in paragraph 8 respecting officers' servants class, would justify a reduction of 35,000 officers and men.

"(2) That the Admiralty, with a smaller navy, are maintaining far larger shore establishments, both naval and civilian, than they did before the war, and we think that there are many ways in which economies could be effected by employing the naval ratings and marines held for mobilization on the work now done for the Admiralty by civilians and Metropolitan police."

On page 75 of the same report I also find the following conclusions regarding the British Army:

As a result of our consideration, we are of the opinion:

"(1) That man power has been estimated on a lavish scale for 1922–23, and that a reduction of 50,000 officers and men could be made without in any way reducing the forces employed by the War Office on foreign service.

"(2) That the introduction of new arms and corps, and of the air force, which have been created with the object of increasing the fighting efficiency of the defense forces of the empire, is not reflected in corresponding reductions in other directions, and that savings could be made on that account.

"(3) That there has been an increase in all the ancillary and auxiliary services of the army which the country can not afford and in which drastic economies should be made.

"(4) That the abnormal reserve of mobilization equipment and arms now held is costly to store, guard, and maintain, and that the effect of holding it results in heavy additional indirect cost.

"(5) That the army estimates for 1922–23 should be reduced from £75,197,800 to £55,000,000 for that year, and that in the subsequent year still lower estimates should suffice."

In this recommendation no account is taken of possible further reductions resulting from a review by the Government of our military requirements at home and abroad, normal and abnormal.

No account has been taken of any reduction in pay and allowances which the Government may decide to make, and no account is taken of any abnormal increase in the noneffective vote caused by a reduction of personnel transferred to the retired list, with both of which items we deal separately in a later report.

You will note the adjective "lavish" which the committee uses to characterize the expenditures of both the army and navy. Could any corporate debtor successfully plead poverty when a committee of its own stockholders had characterized its most important items of expenditure as "lavish"?

I wish also to call to your attention the large investments which the British Government has made in private enterprises in various parts of the world, as reported in the Christian Science Monitor for December 27, 1921, a paper which is one of the chief spokesmen for British interests:

A White Paper issued recently sets forth the amount of public money invested in registered companies by the British Government. It shows that from the beginning of the war something like £12,000,000 have so far been invested in a variety of companies.

The largest investment is in the Anglo-Persian Oil Co., namely, £5,200,000. Money was put into this company by the treasury on 10 separate occasions, beginning July 22, 1914. The last and biggest investment in the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. was £1,900,000 in March, 1920. The disposal and liquidation commission has one investment, namely, £1,450,000 in British Cellulose & Chemical Manufacturing Co.; and the foreign office also has one, namely, nearly £2,000,000 in the Commercial Bank of Siberia.

The British Government, therefore, has had funds available with which it can engage in the great imperialistic adventure of attempting to secure a monopoly of the oil of the world, but none with which she could meet the current interest upon her debts to the United States. Furthermore, the American people have reason to view these investments of the British Government with some degree of concern, if we may believe statements which have recently been made by one of her eminent financiers, Sir E. Mackay Edgar, Bart., a famous British industrialist, who on his return to England from his annual visit to the United States gave out an interview which was published in the London Daily Telegraph in which he warns that we will suffer "a sharp halt in American progress" and that we shall suffer "something like a collapse."

I quote a portion of this remarkable interview from the London Daily Telegraph, as reported in the Literary Digest for January 27, 1923, and commend the entire article to Senators who do me the honor of listening to me. This English captain of industrialism says:

Just think of this: In 1914 America produced about 65 per cent of the world's output of cotton, oil, copper, lead, and zinc. Her consumption was at that time roughly 35 per cent of the total supplies. To-day, while she is producing relatively the same, her consumption of these commodities amounts to over half of the world's total output. Ten years hence she will be producing relatively less and consuming relatively more. She will be producing about half of the world's output; she will be consuming something like 70 per cent of it. In other words, she will have to import. * * *

He very frankly declares the selfish policy Great Britain will pursue when the opportunity presents itself:

Our business as Britons is to sit tight on what we have and to exploit all the oil, cotton, and metal possibilities of the non-American world. In that way we shall do more than safeguard our own position. We shall be able to supply America with the commodities she must have to keep going. She will have to come to us for some of the essential means of livelihood. It will be a costly experience for her but, so far as I can see, she can not escape it.

In spite of all this showing of wealth and material resources, which we must assume that the American Debt Commission examined in detail, unless they were recreant to the trust that had been imposed in them, but which I firmly believe, from the answers made before the Finance Committee, that they never examined at all; nevertheless we are told by its spokesmen that the terms of settlement now before us are the best that could possibly be secured from the British Government. I should like to ask how this was ascertained so clearly in advance of the beginning of the negotiations that according to the testimony of the Senator from Utah the terms laid down by Congress were completely abandoned and the first proposition submitted by the American commission was on a basis of 3½ per cent flat for 62 years? Such a policy of ignoring the terms authorized by Congress was apparently not in the mind of at least one member of the commission as late as October 16, 1922. On that date, just four months ago, Secretary Hoover, in an address at Toledo, Ohio, said:

The terms of repayment were to be determined by Congress, and Congress has laid down the conditions under which payment can be extended over a term of 25 years. It is the duty of the funding commission to see that these terms are carried out.

This was the understanding also in England at the same time. Let me quote from the London Statist for September 23, 1922, page 440, which, as everyone knows, speaks the opinion of financial England authoritatively:

The act referred to has intrusted the handling of the negotiations on the American side to a committee appointed by Congress, under the chairmanship of Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury. The discussions to take place are limited by the act to matters of detail rather than general principles. Thus, it is already fixed by legislation that the demand notes, at present held by the United States Government, are to be exchanged for long-term bonds. The bonds to be issued in exchange by us are to be bonds of our Government and others, no set-offs in respect of debts owed by other governments to us being allowed. The maximum currency of the bonds is fixed at 25 years, and the minimum rate of interest they may bear is 4½ per cent. Subject to these limits, the negotiating parties are to agree upon the rate of interest on the bonds and their term and the manner in which interest and amortization is to be paid.

We have also the record of the negotiations which were carried on in 1919 between Mr. Rathbone, representing the United States, and Mr. Blackett, representing the British Government. We have the memorandum handed Mr. Blackett by Mr. Rathbone on November 1, 1919, summarizing the results of their conferences, which provided for a settlement on a basis of 5 per cent interest, with maturities in 1938 and 1947. Furthermore, we have the letter of Mr. Blackett, dated November 8, 1919, in which he states that he has discussed the terms with the chancellor of the exchequer, who is in general accord with the terms proposed. Let me quote a part of this letter, which seems to have some historical importance:

DEAR MR. RATHBONE: I have now had an opportunity of discussing with the chancellor of exchequer the question of the conversion of the demand obligations of the British and allied governments held by the United States Treasury into the form of long-term bonds. The chancellor of exchequer desires me to say that, on the understanding that such conversion will not in any way prejudice the general question of interallied indebtedness, to the ultimate settlement of which along broad lines he attaches great importance, he is of opinion that a satisfactory solution of the particular question of conversion of demand obligations can quickly be reached along the general lines tentatively proposed in the memorandum which you gave me on Saturday, November 1. As I stated to you in Paris, the chancellor of exchequer is prepared to give analogous treatment to the obligations of allied governments held by the British treasury. In this connection he desires me to express his entire concurrence in your view, that their community of interests as the two chief creditors makes close cooperation between the British and American Treasuries of vital importance in these matters.

It is his strong hope that the two treasuries will work together with a view to finding the right solution for the important problems which have arisen and will arise in regard to questions of interallied indebtedness and German reparation.

The only point in your memorandum on which the chancellor of exchequer desires to make any reservations at the moment is the sinking-fund provision. He would prefer on the whole that specific provision should not be included for repayment of debt before the due dates. According to calculations which I have worked out, the sinking-fund provision would operate to redeem before maturity 17.783 per cent of the bonds maturing in 1938 and 55.718 per cent of the bonds maturing in 1947. In any case the latter figure seems too high.

The apparent intention of the British Chancellor was to use these terms as a basis for settlement of all interallied indebtedness, but Mr. Rathbone was very firm in his reply of November 18, 1919, in notifying Mr. Blackett that the United States Government regarded each loan as a distinct and separate obligation of the individual government. This may have been responsible for the termination of these negotiations, which, like the present, were shrouded with an impenetrable veil of secrecy, but in any event it is quite certain the British Government did not then regard even 5 per cent with a 25-year maturity as anything more than was to be expected.

Her bonds which had been sold to private American investors were bearing 5½ per cent, and it was quite apparent that she could not then or now float a loan in the general market at better than a 5 per cent rate. The Statist for September 23, 1922, from which I have already quoted, expresses the opinion that British bonds, even if indorsed by the United States Government, could not be sold at par at anything lower than a 4½ per cent rate. And yet we are solemnly told that this is a sound transaction on a firm commercial basis.

In this connection it may be interesting to see how England deals with her debtors, as an indication whether 3 or 3½ per cent is a fair rate. I read from the parliamentary debates in the British House of Commons, August 4, 1921:

AUSTRALIAN COMMONWEALTH GOVERNMENT, WAR ADVANCES.

54. Mr. Wise asked the chancellor of the exchequer if any arrangement has been made with the Australian Commonwealth Government for funding the latter war advances; and if so, what are the terms?

Sir R. HORNE. Arrangements have been made with the Australian Commonwealth Government under which the sums lent to the Commonwealth by the Imperial Government during the war, including sums advanced since the date of the armistice, to the amount of £92,480,156 15s. 10d., will be repaid by a series of half-yearly payments of £2,774,404 14s. 1d., which is equivalent to 6 per cent per annum on the amount of the debt. These half-yearly payments will cover interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum on £1,263,158, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum on £11,500,000, and at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the remainder of the debt. The balance will be used to repay the outstanding debt and is calculated to repay the whole amount in 36 years. In respect of certain interest on war debt of the Commonwealth which had accrued up to the 31st of March, 1921, and was unpaid at that date, amounting to £3,934,191 11s. 8d., I have accepted 5 per cent Australian treasury bills due 30th September, 1921, one-half of these bills being renewable at the option of the Commonwealth for a further period of six months.

Here, then, is one of her own children who poured out her blood and taxed herself heavily to aid the mother country, who is charged 5 per cent on eight-ninths of her debt, while we are told that 3½ per cent is the utmost that the British Government can pay on her own debt. I should like to ask the American Debt Commission whether the British commissioners were confronted with the terms of this Australian settlement. I have no doubt that a substantial part of these advances to Australia were made out of funds advanced by the United States out of the proceeds of Liberty loans. If so, the British Government is in the delightful position of making a profit of 1½ per cent on the transaction.

Let us examine also the terms on which Great Britain funded the loans which she made to Canada during the early part of the war. I quote from the Public Accounts of the Dominion of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1917 (p. 10):

Advances by way of temporary loans have been made from time to time by the Imperial Government amounting, on the 31st March, 1917, to £57,500,000, which carried a capitalized debt of £59,503,500 10s. 7d., or $289,583,702.52. During the year 1916–17 £22,324,295 11s. 0d. of the above amount was converted into Dominion Government dollar bonds as under:

Two million four hundred thousand pounds capitalized, on basis of £100 debt on each £95 advance, to £2,526,315 15s. 9d., or $12,404,678.36, 3½ per cent bonds maturing 1st March, 1925–1928.

Nineteen million six hundred thousand pounds capitalized, on basis of £100 debt on each £99 advance, to £19,797,979 15s. 3d., or $95,207,351.17, 4½ per cent bonds maturing 1st December, 1925–1945.

The balance of this indebtedness on account of advances which had been made by Great Britain were offset against expenditures which were later made in Canada by the British Government.

Let us briefly examine the terms of these bonds and compare them with those of the proposed settlement between Great Britain and the United States. We find, in the first place, that the British Government demanded from Canada what was virtually a commission. She received £100 in 3½ per cent bonds for every £95 that had been advanced and £100 in 4½ per cent bonds for each £99 of advances. We find further that only a little more than one-tenth of these bonds bore an interest rate of 3½ per cent, while the balance, or nearly nine-tenths, carried 4½ per cent interest. We find also no provision for extending these loans for 62 years, as provided in the proposed American settlement, but instead we find that the 3½ per cent bonds were to mature between 1925 and 1928, or a maximum of 11 years from date, while the 4½ per cent bonds were to mature between 1925 and 1945, or a maximum of 28 years and an average of about 18 years.

It will be seen that the settlements which Great Britain made both with Canada and Australia were upon terms much more onerous than those which were carried by the Liberty bond acts or by the act creating the American Debt Commission. Taking all the terms of the settlement into consideration, these terms which Great Britain enforced upon her colonies were almost twice as burdensome as those which are contained in the proposed settlement between Great Britain and the United States. I should like very much to know by what processes of logic or reason the spokesmen of Great Britain can justify their pleas for leniency from the United States when they have enforced such terms as these upon two of their own colonies.

The Senator from Utah has assured us that it is good business to fund this loan to Great Britain for 62 years on a 3½ per cent basis, and that these terms are furthermore justified by the straitened conditions of British finance and industry. If this is good business, why would it not be better business to loan to American farmers at 3½ per cent for 62 years? In the latter case the security is under our hands, and the probability of payment of both principal and interest is infinitely greater. I am asking this question not because I expect a reply but because I have noticed that those who are now most insistent upon the acceptance of these terms have never shown any like enthusiasm for making credit available to American farmers and home builders on terms less onerous than the exorbitant commercial rates imposed by private bankers and loan sharks. It can not be a question of relative distress, because the bankruptcy which has swept across the Northwestern States of this Nation like a plague since the great deflation of 1920 is equaled only by the desolation in some of the worst-stricken parts of the European continent. Whole counties are being sold out for taxes while we are admonished to pass upon this settlement of $4,600,000,000 of indebtedness to the American Treasury without adequate opportunity to study either its terms or the circumstances which lie behind it. Those who vote to settle this debt upon these terms—nearly 1 per cent less than the rates carried by American Liberty loans and with two and a half times as long a maturity—will have a hard time explaining to their constituents just why they did it.

So far I have been considering the general method and terms of this proposed settlement, but there are certain details which seem to me of the utmost moment.

I refer to the provision in the last paragraph of section 2:

Any payment of interest or of principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest.

This provision merits the most careful scrutiny, inasmuch as it appears to offer to the British Government and to British financial interests a direct inducement to use their influence to depress the credit of the United States Government, in order that they may secure depreciated bonds to exchange at par for their indebtedness to the United States.

This amounts to making certain United States bonds legal tender for the payment of British debts and British debts only. They are not legal tender for the payment of the debts of American citizens. This is a special privilege granted the British Government which can not be justified. If it is sound public finance to make United States bonds legal tender for the British Government, why is it not equally sound finance to grant a similar privilege to American citizens? Every elementary student of public finance knows that such a policy, if adopted generally, would be unwise.

As long as this provision remains in the terms of settlement, there will be a grave temptation for British influence to attempt to bring about a depreciation of the bonds of the United States Government issued since April 6, 1917, in order that they may be purchased at low prices and used to retire the British debt. Such operations carried on over a long series of years might easily result in saving for the British Government several hundred million dollars in the amount of her total payments. This is a stake well worth being played for.

It is not necessary to suggest that the British Government officially would at any time undertake such operations inimical to the credit of the United States Government. Private British financial interests in their capacity as taxpayers to the British treasury are so directly concerned in decreasing the amounts which the British Government must pay to the Government of the United States in the liquidation of this debt that they could naturally and without any prompting take the necessary steps to create a situation where United States bonds might be purchased below par.

No one who knows the immense ramifications of British financial connections in the United States will doubt for a moment their ability to affect the market for United States securities. In the same connection, one should also keep in mind the enormous machinery for British propaganda which was built up in the United States during the period of the war, a part of which, at least, still remains intact.

It should also be pointed out that the terms of this provision are ambiguous. It is not clear whether the phrase "bonds issued since April 6, 1917," applies only to bonds issued between that date and the time of signing the present agreement, or whether this may be stretched to cover all bonds issued after April 6, 1917.

This ambiguity came out quite clearly in the committee hearings. The Senator from Utah expressed the opinion at the morning session that this phrase related only to bonds issued between April 6, 1917, and the date of signing the agreement. A majority of the members of the committee were convinced and proposed to write this interpretation into the bill, but in the afternoon the Senator from Utah said that he had consulted the Treasury Department and found that the chairman of the debt commission, Secretary Mellon, held that it applied to all bonds that might be issued at any time after April 6, 1917. It is thus quite apparent that the members of the debt commmission did not know what they were signing and that we do not know to-day the meaning of what we are asked to sanction.

If Secretary Mellon's interpretation is correct, it means that at any time within the next 62 years the British Government is free to acquire such of our bonds as may depreciate below par and exchange them at their face value for the payment of principal and interest of this debt. If we are plunged into a great war and our bonds fall to 80, as they came very near doing a year or two ago, the British Government, and the British Government alone, will then have the right to trade these depreciated bonds in at the Treasury at the rate of 100 cents on the dollar.

Furthermore, if such a clause is to go into each of the other settlements, it will mean that all of these nations will then be given an immense incentive to use their influence to depreciate our credit so that they may profit in the settlement of their debts. This clause should be stricken out. I challenge the Senator from Utah to show me a similar clause in any international agreement that has ever been made between nations of equal rank. It is without precedent, and I am assured constitutes a menace of the most serious character not only to our national credit but also to the maintenance of friendly relations with Great Britain.

Finally, I should like to ask, Mr. President, Why this unseemly hurry to pass this bill? It is true that we have been told by the President of the United States that—and I quote the exact words because they are quite original with the President—"it is, in effect, a plight against war and war expenditures and a rigid adherence to that production and retrenchment which enhances stability precisely as it discharges obligation." I confess that these words are meaningless to me. I know what they mean separately, but what they mean when joined together in this incomprehensible jumble is beyond my understanding. We are told also that—and I quote the President again—"it is a covenant of peace and recuperation, of respect and cooperation." I think I know what this sentence was intended to mean, but I wish that the President might have presented some fact or argument in support of this sweeping assertion.

We all know as a matter of fact that the unfunded character of this debt has had no substantial effect either upon international relations or international finance. You need not take my word for it. Let me quote Mr. Eliot Wadsworth, the secretary of the American Debt Commission. In an address at the Hotel Astor, on November 24, 1922, he said:

> I do not seek to minimize the importance of these war debts as a problem which must be met and solved in due course. They constitute a legacy of trouble from the World War which only time, hard work, patience, and forbearance can eliminate. The questions involved are new in world finance. The effect will be felt for many years no matter what is done with them. My point is that so far these debts have had little actual effect, except as they hang like a distant cloud upon the horizon of business, a cloud to which we have become rather accustomed. There are more important questions—political, financial, and economic—which prevent the rehabilitation of Europe. Threats of war, wild inflation, constant crises over reparations, all have an unsettling influence. The interallied debts resting quietly in treasury boxes add little to the immediate difficulties. In time they must be dealt with in the wisest way, and whatever action is taken must have the full approval of American public opinion. A free discussion of this problem is helpful, but there are too many uncertain factors to-day for anyone to lay down a clear and definite solution.

Then what is the mysterious reason for rushing this measure through the House and Senate?

A few days or even a few months is going to make little or no difference as compared with the magnitude of the questions involved in this settlement which binds us for the next 62 years. We should explore the terms thoroughly, we should examine the surrounding circumstances with some of the care which a banker bestows upon a loan of a few thousand dollars, and above all we should give the American people an opportunity to learn the real facts regarding this proposed settlement and express their opinion. It is their money which it is proposed to give to Great Britain. We are its trustees. The people are entitled to determine at the ballot box whether it shall be given away.

In conclusion I want to present one very practical proposition for your consideration. The Senator from Utah has told us that it is the opinion of the American Debt Commission that within a few years the British Government will be able to borrow funds at 3 or 3½ per cent. Now, if that is the case, suppose the interest rate was fixed on the basis provided by law, 4¼ per cent, but provision was made for paying off the principal at any time, let us see what would happen. As soon as England could borrow money in the open market for one penny less than 4¼ per cent, she would float a loan and pay us off. Any business man knows that. That, I take it, is the great desire of us all—to see this debt paid off at the earliest possible moment, so that no nation will be obligated to us, and we shall not be bound by financial entanglements with any nation. If we accept the terms proposed, the principal will not be paid until British loans can be floated at less than 3½ per cent. But if the rate is made that which was fixed in the Liberty loan acts or in the act creating the American Debt Commission, there will be a compelling incentive to clean up the entire transaction as soon as British credit reaches a 4¼ per cent basis.

Mr. President, I earnestly hope the proposed settlement will be rejected and the whole matter referred back to the Debt Commission, with instructions to carry out the terms fixed by Congress in the original act.

Mr. McCORMICK obtained the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for about three minutes?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to ask consent to have a document printed in the RECORD, and it will take about three minutes to state what it is. If the Senator does not object, I will appreciate it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator, retaining the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have a copy of the statistical brochure prepared by Mr. Martin Gillen. The high spots of this particular document, from my hurried survey of it, seem to be about as follows:

1. The farm industry is at a low ebb on account of a restricted foreign market and from the indirect absorption of increases in wages in other industries reflected in farm expenditures, including transportation.

2. The great industries dependent on farm prosperity, such as the railroads, packers, farm machinery, and so forth, are in like bad case with the farmer, and almost all must look to the same ultimate economic remedy—the reestablishment of the markets of the world, rather than to subsidies and direct Federal aid.

3. Of the loans by the United States to the Allies, over three-fourths of the amount was expended directly for agricultural products. The American farmer was, accordingly, the chief beneficiary of these loans which thus assured him a full market and established the highest prices on record for his commodities. The farmer is most interested in a fair refunding or settlement of these foreign obligations, both from the standpoint of the past and of the future.

4. In addition to the unfunded external (governmental) loans, of which over $11,000,000,000 is due to the United States, there is an unsettled trade balance for the period 1915–1923 due from Europe and Canada to the United States of over $12,000,000,000. During that period our bills against Europe and Canada were over $40,000,000,000, of which over $26,000,000,000 was for agricultural products.

The significance of Mr. Gillen's statement to the South is overwhelming. Everyone knows that the present price of cotton is due to a succession of two of the shortest crops of recent years—1921, between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000 bales; 1922, 9,600,000 bales. I believe this year will witness the largest cotton acreage ever planted and extensive fertilization. If a large crop is produced the result will be disaster, unless our market for cotton across the water is restored.

I want to have Mr. Gillen's statement printed in connection with what I said yesterday to the effect that the important question is the reestablishing of financial conditions, and I regard this settlement as a long step in that direction. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, the statement made by Mr. Gillen.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Hon. Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, and to the honorable United States Senators and Congressmen representing the great wheat-growing and meat-producing States of the Mississippi Valley and the great cotton and tobacco growing States of the South and Southwest.

HONORABLE SIRS: Please note—

[000,000 omitted.]

Table I.—Items of receipts and disbursements comprised within "Operating sheet."	1921	1922	1923	Table II.—Labor increases absorbed by the farm industry through disbursements. 1921	1922	1923
				Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
U. S. Government's announced value of annual farm production	$11,422	$13,375
Consumption on farms by live stock and farm population	3,781	4,413		35.93	32.26	32.26
Receipts, cash received for all farm products	7,641	8,962
Disbursements:
State and township taxes	1,022	1,122	Planting as usual with February to July exportable surplus of 1922 crop undelivered to Europe.	367.2	361.9	Prospect is that farm industry will absorb the same labor cost as in 1922.
Interest on notes and mortgages	926	926
Rents	1,082	1,082
Farm labor	893	893		320.8	288.0
Railroad expenditures	823	826
Farm fertilizer	218	239		295.7	266.0
Farm implements	274	328		78.3	70.3
Saddlery and harness	86	86		98.4	88.3
Mail-order houses	238	292		30.8	27.7
New building construction and maintenance	516	516		85.5	76.7
New motor cars and trucks	353	427		185.3	166.4
Repair parts only for motor cars and trucks	115	154		126.8	112.8
Tire and tire accessories	109	135		41.3	37.0
Gasoline, oil, garage costs other than repair parts	170	190		39.1	35.1
Depreciation	944	944		61.0	54.8
	6,946	7,334
Net receipts for 31,000,000 farm population	695	1,628		249.7	525.1
Total cash value received by farmers for total product	7,641	8,962		1,979.9	2,110.1	2,110.1

First. The "operating sheet" of 6,448,343 farmers with a farm investment of $78,000,000,000 and a debt exceeding 50 per cent of total United States national debt.

Second. That for the year 1921 the farm population of 31,615,000 people received as a total net return on a capital investment of $78,000,000,000 only $695,000,000, with which to buy all their simple family needs such as: (a) Medical, religious, and educational services; (b) pay their Federal taxes; (c) pay insurance for life, fire, and tornado; and (d) make payments on a total farm debt of $12,426,691,415.

Third. That in 1921 out of gross cash receipts of $7,641,000,000 and for the year 1922 out of gross cash receipts of $8,962,000,000 the American farmer has been compelled to absorb excess labor costs in 1921 of $1,979,900,000, and in the year 1922 $2,110,100,000.

Fourth. That he will be compelled to absorb excess labor costs of $2,110,100,000 for the year 1923 with his regular exportable surplus for February, March, April, May, and June (1922 crop) to Europe, still undelivered, while he is now working on his new 1923 crop, which also contains the usual large exportable surplus.

Fifth. That during the last 10 years the farm industry has employed approximately the same acreage, the same number of employees, and has produced approximately the same annual gross poundage. Yet for the same annual poundage he received the following cash value: For the year 1919, $15,418,000,000; for the year 1920, $11,300,000,000; for the year 1921, $7,641,000,000; and for the year 1922, $8,962,000,000.

Sixth. That if this situation, which is now critical, is to be held even at its present low and destructive point, relief must come at once. He can not wait. Time is the great element. Further delay spells disaster.

Seventh. The data concerning this situation, together with a discussion and the remedy, are contained in the within document.

Respectfully submitted.

MARTIN J. GILLEN.

THE FARM INDUSTRY—CONSIDERED AS A LARGE SINGLE CORPORATION.

The capital investment; its debt; total cash value of annual production for calendar years 1919, 1920, 1921, and 1922.

Investment:
(a) Land divided into 6,448,300 farms, valued at		$54,829,563,059
(b) Buildings, valued at		11,486,439,543
(c) Implements and machinery, valued at		3,594,772,928
(d) Live stock, valued at		8,013,324,808
Gross valuation		77,924,100,338
Debt liability:
(a) Mortgages	$8,556,800,000
(b) Personal and collateral loans at banks	3,869,891,415
Total indebtedness		12,426,691,415
Net value investment		65,497,408,923
Human beings in farm industry:		Number.
(a) Farmers		6,448,343
(b) Hired help, including domestics		2,220,000
(c) Other members of the farm family		22,946,657
Total farm population		31,615,000
Depreciation, annual:
(a) 4 per cent on $11,486,439,543 of buildings		$459,457,581
(b) 13⅓ per cent on $3,594,772,928 of implements and machinery		485,294,345
Total annual depreciation		944,751,926

LABOR INCREASES ABSORBED BY THE FARM INDUSTRY THROUGH DISBURSEMENTS.

The commodity and labor indices of the United States Department of Labor and the Department of Agriculture on 10 leading crops and 6 leading live-stock items against all commodities, excepting animal and food products, show, after taking into consideration the increased price the farmer received for his products in 1920, 1921, and 1922 over his pre-war 1913 price, that the purchasing power of the dollar he received for his products in 1920, 1921, and 1922 purchased: In 1920, only 86 per cent of the commodities it purchased in 1913; in 1921, only 67 per cent of the commodities it purchased in 1913; and in 1922, only 69 per cent of the commodities it purchased in 1913; in a word, in 1920 it took 114 farmer dollars to purchase the same number of commodities purchased for 100 farmer dollars in 1913; in 1921 it took 149 farmer dollars to purchase the same number of commodities purchased for 100 farmer dollars in 1913; in 1922 it took 144 farmer dollars to purchase the same number of commodities purchased for 100 farmer dollars in 1913.

From the standpoint of the farm industry: The total cost of all commodities and service furnished and used by the farm industry is as follows: Raw materials, 3.24 per cent; return on capital, 6 per cent; agriculture, 17.43 per cent; and labor, 73.33 per cent; a total of 100 per cent.

Applying 73.33 per cent to the 14 per cent increase for 1920 we have 10.26 per cent.

Applying 73.33 per cent to the 49 per cent increase for 1921 we have 35.93 per cent.

Applying 73.33 per cent to the 44 per cent increase for 1922 we have 32.26 per cent.

Applying 73.33 per cent to the 44 per cent increase for prospective 1923 we have 32.26 per cent.

Under present tariff and immigration laws and the bad financial conditions of the European market there is no relief for the farm industry from this condition in sight for the year 1923 and in the oncoming years.

[000,000 omitted.]

Items of receipts and disbursements comprised in "Operating sheet."	Table I.—"Operating sheet" of 6,448,343 farms of net value of $65,000,000,000.					Table II.—Labor increases absorbed by the farm industry through disbursements.
	1919	1920	1921	1922	1923	1920	1921	1922	1923	1924	1925	1926
						Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
United States Government's announced value of annual farm production.	$23,655	$17,289	$11,422	$13,375		10.26	35.93	32.26	32.26	32.26	32.26	32.26
Consumption on farms by live stock and farm population.	8,238	5,989	3,781	4,413
Receipts, cash received for all farm products.	15,418	11,300	7,641	8,962
Disbursements:
State and township taxes	771	896	1,022	1,122	Danger	91.5	367.2	361.9	361.9	Danger sign.
Interest on notes and mortgages	926	926	926	926
Rents	1,082	1,082	1,082	1,082
Farm labor	1,363	1,583	893	893		162.4	320.8	288.0	288.0
Railroad expenditures	710	678	823	826
Farm fertilizer	388	422	218	239	Planting as usual with February to July exportable surplus of 1922 crop undelivered to Europe.	69.5	295.7	266.0	266.0	Prospect is that farm industry in 1923 will absorb the same war labor costs as it did in 1922 and that its European markets will shrivel up to a greater extent in 1923 than it did in 1922.
Farm implements	300	563	274	328		43.2	78.3	70.3	70.3
Saddlery and harness	86	86	86	86		57.7	98.4	88.3	88.3
Mail order houses	344	360	238	292		8.8	30.8	27.7	27.7
New building construction and maintenance.	1,032	750	516	516		36.9	85.5	76.7	76.7
Motor cars and trucks	555	617	353	427		76.9	185.3	166.4	166.4
Motor car and truck repairs, parts only.	174	203	115	154		63.3	126.8	112.8	112.8
Tire and tire accessories	193	185	109	135		20.8	41.3	37.0	37.0
Gasoline, oil, garage costs other than repair parts.	150	170	170	190		19.0	39.1	38.1	35.1
Depreciation	944	944	944	944	Danger	17.4	61.0	54.8	54.8	Danger sign.
Gross disbursements	8,308	8,787	6,946	7,334
Net cash left	7,110	2,513	695	1,628		257.8	249.7	525.7	525.1
Gross cash receipts	15,418	11,300	7,641	8,962
Gross excess labor costs						925.2	1,979.9	2,110.1	2,110.1

NATIONAL INDUSTRIES, EMPLOYEES, CAPITAL INVESTED, AND VALUE OF ANNUAL PRODUCTS DIRECTLY DEPENDENT UPON THE ECONOMIC STABILITY AND WELL-BEING OF THE FARM INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES.

(a) Seventy-six millions of people in the United States, for their regular and orderly supply of food for subsistence.

(b) Well-being, happiness, and contentment of 31,615,000 farm people—the most rugged element for law and order in this land.

(c) Well-being, happiness, and contentment of 8,969,241 village people who serve the personal need of the farmer.

(d) National industries handling animal and food products: Capital investment, $4,615,149,895, with employees numbering 684,672; value of product, $12,438,890,851.

(e) Entire industries handling textiles: Capital investment, $6,096,-161,183, with employees numbering 1,611,309; value of product, $9,216,-102,814.

(f) Entire industries handling leather goods: Capital investment, $1,522,502,458, with employees numbering 349,362; value of product, $2,610,230,723.

(g) Entire industries handling tobacco: Capital investment, $604,-859,572, with employees numbering 157,097; value of product, $1,012,-933,213.

(h) At least 20 per cent of all freight railroads: Capital investment, $19,061,239,186, with employees numbering 2,037,927; value of product, $6,178,438,459.

(i) At least 30 per cent of units produced automobiles and trucks: Capital investment, $1,310,451,400, with employees numbering 210,559; value of product, $2,387,907,289.

(j) At least 30 per cent of units produced tires: Capital investment: $782,637,722, with employees numbering 119,848; value of product, $987,088,045.

(k) At least 75 per cent of sales of mail-order houses: Capital investment, $580,000,000; value of product, $768,000,000.

(l) Entire (except export) of farm implements and farm fertilizer: Capital investment, $678,695,311, with employees numbering 106,058; value of product, $586,104,850.

Percentages of the national income contributed by the various industries, "average," 1909 to 1918: Total all industries, 100 per cent, of which agriculture is 17.43 per cent; mineral, 3.24 per cent; manufacturing, 29.97 per cent; transportation, 9.28 per cent; banking, 1.45 per cent; government, 5.61 per cent; and unclassified industries, 33.02 per cent.—National Bureau of Economic Research.

Outstanding facts and deductions from the above:

First. The Departments of Commerce and Agriculture and principal financial and agricultural papers of this country have always used and announced as the annual value of farm products "the Department of Agriculture's announced value of yearly farm products," such as twenty-three billion for 1919; seventeen billion for 1920, eleven billion for 1921, and thirteen billion for 1922, as the value of the annual farm products. They have for years failed to deduct the value of the farm products consumed on the farms. Thus for years has the farm industry and our Congress been given an erroneous figure for calculations as to the farmer's buying power, which was in 1919 fifteen billions, in 1920 eleven billions, in 1921 seven billions, and in 1922 eight billions.

Second. Friends of the farm industry endeavoring to show the importance of the industry from the standpoint of its purchasing power of American products have always asserted that the actual purchasing power of the farmer, as compared with the rest of the American population, was from 40 to 52 per cent of the total, while the fact is his actual purchasing power does not exceed 17.43 per cent—the actual expenditure of his total money being largely directed to only a few lines of industry. Thus it can readily be seen that while a nation-wide state of increased prosperity may actually occur to industry, commerce, and labor in the United States, yet underlying this prosperity great factors may silently be working for the economic destruction of the farm industry. For a 10 or 20 per cent diminution of the small 17.43 per cent actual purchasing power of the farmer in the total American markets would show little present effect on the general national welfare. A 10 per cent diminution of 17.43 per cent is 1.74 per cent, while 20 per cent would be 3.48 per cent of the total United States annual purchasing power. This is what has actually occurred in 1921–22 and will occur in 1923 under present conditions. It spells economic disaster to over 40,000,000 of our population as well as the destruction of industry and commerce in the Mississippi Valley and the South. Then, too, give this country another year of it and the cancer will break out progressively in every vital organ of this entire Nation.

Third. That for the year 1921, out of gross cash receipts of $7,641,-000,000, and for the year 1922, out of gross cash receipts of $8,962,-000,000, the American farmer has been compelled to absorb excess labor costs in 1921 of $1,979,900,000, and in the year 1922, $2,110,100,000.

Fourth. With present labor prices, he will be compelled to absorb excess labor costs of $2,110,100,000 for the year 1923, with most of his exportable surplus for 1922 to Europe still undelivered, while he is now working on his new 1923 crop, which also contains a large exportable surplus.

Fifth. That for the year 1921 the farm population of 31,615,000 people received as a total net return on a capital investment of $78,000,000,000 only eight-tenths per cent with which to buy all their simple family needs, such as (a) medical, religious, and educational services; (b) pay their Federal taxes; (c) pay insurance for life, fire, and tornado; and (d) make payments on a total farm debt of $12,426,691,415. In 1922 the farmer has left again only 2 per cent return on his total capital investment for small family purchases.

Sixth. That during the last 10 years we find from the "Operating sheet of the farm industry" that the industry is tightly bound by four great constant factors and one great variable factor over which he has no control. The variable factor spells the sale of his surplus in foreign markets. The farm industry during the last 10 years has employed (a) approximately the same total acreage, though it has shifted its crops on that acreage from time to time, constant factor 1; (b) the same number of employees, constant factor 2; and (c) has produced approximately the same annual poundage for each of those years, constant factor 3; (d) disbursement items, column 1, constant factor 4; and (e) yet for the same gross annual poundage the farm industry received the following terrific changes in total cash value for his product: For the year 1919, $15,418,000,000; 1920, $11,300,000,000; 1921, $7,641,000,000; and for the year 1922, $8,962,000,000, the great variable factor. A fair illustration of this situation would be the assumption that the Ford Motor Co., during the 10-year period from 1912 to 1922, had not increased (a) its factory buildings and equipment; (b) the number of its employees; (c) the number of cars produced per year; and yet had received for that same number of cars $11,000,000,000 in 1920, $7,000,000,000 in 1921, and $8,000,000,000 in 1922, with labor prices as high as in 1920. It must be kept in mind that the Ford Motor Co. is a single corporation, with one directing mind, and that it can be closed down when there is an overproduction, while the farm industry is like 6,000,000,000 small corporations, without any general supervision and without any general directing mind as to the size of its annual production.

DANGER SIGN.

That to hold this now critical economic situation of the United States farm industry at its present low and destructive point, preparatory measures for relief must come at once. Time is the great element, and if wasted in useless discussions is fatal to the American farmer. His economic condition does not recognize the Democratic or the Republican Party, nor their efforts to gain, one against the other, any small party advantage at this hour. Political bickerings and personal ambitions must be put aside, as was done during the period of the Great War, and America must close its ranks and give the same loyal support to the President of the United States, when in action, as was given by all to the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, our war President. Further delay spells disaster.

A terrific economic conflagration is consuming our customers in continental Europe; Russia is burned to the ground; France, Germany, Belgium, and Italy are in the midst of flames; France is pouring gasoline on the fire in order that a lurid pillar of light may rise so high that across the Atlantic it may be seen in the night skies of America. No preparation is being made here to man, equip, and order America's super fire engines to the salvation of our customers, nor have we notified France, Italy, and Belgium that America has seen the danger light and to stop pouring gasoline on the fire.

CAN THE UNITED STATES FARM INDUSTRY EXIST UNDER A POLICY OF ECONOMIC ISOLATION AS TO THE COUNTRIES OF EUROPE?

First. May I point out—to those citizens who maintain that "complete isolation from Europe" is our duty under the Monroe doctrine, because participation would involve us in "foreign entangling alliances"—that there are two historic relations that we have ever had with Europe under the Monroe doctrine—one is a political relation which President Jefferson announced and the other an economic relation. Under the latter we have bound ourselves from the earliest beginnings of this Republic with bands of steel to the gross in and out trade that will equal two hundred to two hundred fifty billions of dollars—almost the size of our national wealth.

Second. Again may I point out to that same class of citizens who assert that we are "self-contained" and that "our consumptive capacity is so great that we are independent of Europe" that they are in economic error. Under that economic fallacy, 60 per cent of the cotton fields of the great South and 37 per cent of the wheat fields of the great Mississippi Valley will run to weeds and the economic destruction of 31,614,000 farm people—the most rugged element for law and order in this country—will have been accomplished through their error, while grass will block the streets of those thousands of small villages and communities which are spread throughout the great agricultural sections and house 8,969,241 people—good, law-abiding, industrious American citizens.

Third. The extensive Russian, Rumanian, and Bulgarian wheat fields, which in pre-war years produced annually a world exportable surplus of 200,000,000 bushels of wheat, are down through the economic destruction of those countries, and all Europe is on a rationed and low diet. With this fact in mind, may I point out where the world's exportable surpluses of wheat and cotton come from to-day and the great European customers that use these exportable surpluses, with the prominent position of the United States in that picture?

TABLE V.—Wheat.

EXPORTS.

[Where the bulk of the world's exportable surplus of wheat and wheat flour come from (stated in thousands of bushels).

Year.	1 United States.	2 Russia.	3 Rumania.	4 Bulgaria.	5 Netherlands.	6 Belgium.	7 Germany.	8 Australia.	9 Argentina.	10 Canada.
1906	127,309	137,502	66,838	11,035	33,626	18,030	10,350	37,924	89,128	44,957
1907	160,127	88,622	44,813	10,166	45,437	19,842	7,964	36,288	104,956	45,863
1908	151,338	56,739	27,023	9,110	30,568	26,561	17,257	20,390	139,355	60,365
1909	92,085	194,051	32,471	7,481	48,784	25,472	16,058	37,517	98,273	60,866
1910	61,923	230,569	69,708	11,304	39,503	26,129	19,956	47,761	69,209	46,425
1911	83,330	150,875	56,872	14,524	47,028	26,099	19,581	55,147	83,993	60,474
1912	109,451	102,195	54,203	11,456	52,152	19,870	20,510	40,428	103,260	104,320
1913	154,760	130,596	48,494	11,456	64,501	15,898	29,638	53,207	109,637	151,975
1914	231,318	94,342	23,535	None.	37,583	None.	None.	6,668	39,435	91,322
1915	270,400	11,885	None.	None.	1,830	None.	None.	35,369	98,155	176,959
1916	218,755	15,134	None.	None.	44	None.	None.	68,780	91,625	226,862
1917	168,864	[1] None.	None.	None.	776	None.	None.	40,139	40,078	186,342
1918	208,857	None.	None.	None.	21	None.	None.	66,760	119,029	93,247
1919	267,111	None.	1	None.	264	847	None.	[2] 106,247	137,356	113,586
1920	307,630	None.	105	None.	1,095	331	910	[3] 62,240	[3] 198,539	144,845
1921	[2] 280,101	None.	[3] 3,723	None.	[3] 3,489	None.	None.	[3] 115,420	[3] 82,830	[3] 178,259

[1] Indicates no figures reported by U. S. Department of Agriculture. [2] Broomhall. [3] International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.

IMPORTS.

[The great customers who use the bulk of the world's exportable surplus of wheat (stated in thousands of bushels).]

Year.	1 Great Britain.	2 Italy.	3 France.	4 Germany.	5 Belgium.	6 Netherlands.
1906	208,920	50,473	11,732	74,873	68,178	54,678
1907	214,487	34,281	14,018	91,195	67,688	62,294
1908	201,740	29,026	3,120	77,673	67,175	50,061
1909	210,489	48,955	5,469	90,035	71,026	69,109
1910	195,965	45,259	23,957	86,867	75,351	80,945
1911	182,352	43,300	79,695	92,204	82,405	68,657
1912	229,160	65,914	26,698	85,218	71,261	75,018
1913	226,978	66,635	57,669	94,451	69,790	89,334
1914	218,025	37,399	65,598	None.	None.	57,951
1915	191,064	83,159	76,776	None.	None.	28,766
1916	211,830	74,088	106,446	None.	None.	30,242
1917	206,255	77,249	87,517	None.	None.	12,575
1918	175,460	78,671	72,627	None.	None.	2,245
1919	178,543	95,503	86,630	None.	4,256	18,259
1920	234,475	79,875	87,770	24,572	33,868	20,194
1921	188,825	104,150	40,249	88,812	37,981	23,416

The first four of these countries are badly crippled.

TABLE VI.—Cotton.

EXPORTS.

[Where the bulk of the world's exportable surplus of cotton comes from (stated in thousands of bales of 500 pounds gross weight).]

Year (average).	1 British India.	2 China.	3 Egypt.	4 Peru.	5 United States.
1909-1913	1,960	240	1,442	87	9,008
1914	2,791	188	1,225	106	6,873
1915	2,103	202	1,430	97	9,126
1916	2,118	237	1,122	112	7,626
1917	1,663	232	844	80	5,180
1918	819	360	1,040	99	4,411
1919	1,528	299	1,390	185	7,045
1920	2,052	.....	829	.....	6,651

TABLE VI.—Cotton—Continued.

IMPORTS.

[The great customers who use the bulk of the world's exportable surplus of cotton (stated in thousands of bales of 500 pounds gross weight).]

Year (average).	1 Canada.	2 Belgium.	3 France.	4 Germany.	5 Italy.	6 Japan.	7 Netherlands.	8 Spain.	9 Sweden.	10 Switzerland.	11 Great Britain.	12 Russia.	13 Austria-Hungary
1909–1913	137	496	1,435	2,258	896	1,405	277	382	93	113	4,164	886	906
1914	152	None.	949	None.	579	1,705	245	389	107	101	3,447	801	None.
1915	197	None.	1,052	None.	1,344	2,015	365	660	558	147	4,820	641	None.
1916	205	None.	1,178	None.	1,170	2,209	177	471	130	123	4,045	57	None.
1917	178	None.	1,260	None.	828	1,947	46	447	52	94	3,163	None.	None.
1918	226	None.	656	None.	601	1,886	1	277	33	38	3,114	None.	None.
1919	179	289	1,007	None.	826	2,190	114	341	80	115	3,816	None.	None.
1920	241	506	1,033	691	825	2,178	124	375	113	97	3,457	375	None.

TABLE VII.—International trade balance sheet between Europe-Canada and United States of America. Item I: United States bill to Europe and Canada; Item II: Part paid. Item III: Balance due and unpaid for eight years, January, 1915, to January, 1923, inclusive.

	Europe-Canada eight-year bill.	Debit.	Credit.
Item I. United States bill to Europe and Canada for eight years.
Invisible debits:
1. Agricultural products sold and exported to Europe	$20,430,625,433
Manufactured products, raw materials, and all other merchandise, sold and exported to Europe	7,945,233,225
Merchandise and agricultural products (total exports) sold and exported to Canada	5,038,146,108
Army and Navy supplies, sold by liquidation commissions in Europe after the war to Nov. 15, 1922	574,876,884
Supplies and merchandise, mostly agricultural products, sold and exported by American Relief, $84,093,963, plus United States Grain Corporation, $56,858,802	140,952,706
2. Interest accrued to United States Government on loans to European Governments of $10,126,140,829, to Nov. 15, 1922 [1]	2,115,471,345
Interest accrued to American investors on European loans at average rate of 6 per cent and average $2,881,501,000, less refund of $648,246,316, to January, 1923	584,097,105
Interest accrued to American exporters and bankers on an average (from Jan. 1, 1915, to Jan. 1, 1923) of $2,500,000,000 current open credits	819,000,000
Interest accrued to American investors on Canadian loans, rate 6 per cent (on $156,819,683, Jan. 1, 1915, plus $1,455,778,114, loaned since), on a total of $1,612,597,797	372,571,523
3. Discount at an average 4 per cent paid by Europeans in United States on sale of $2,881,501,000. European securities sold to American investors [1]	115,000,000
Discount at an average 5 per cent on resale of American securities sold by European owners to American investors on $2,500,000,000	125,000,000
4. War service of transportation and other items furnished allies in United States out of $10,000,000,000 loan in addition to items in sub 1, item 1	1,346,780,348
5. War liquidation items, incurred in United States on cancellation of allied war contracts and expenses of allied commissions in United States	100,000,000
6. Insurance, shipping, repairs, supplies in United States ports, tourists, $75,000,000 per year (war transportation shipping in sub 1, item 1) [1]	600,000,000
7. European agreement to repay occupational services furnished by War Department to United States on Rhine	255,862,608
8. European loans placed in United States taken up and paid off by Europe	650,500,000
		$41,214,117,346
Item II. Payments made.
Invisible credits:
1. All merchandise purchased and imported from Europe to Jan. 1, 1923	5,846,968,461
All merchandise purchased and imported from Canada to Sept. 20, 1922	2,972,276,711
2. Gold and silver net balance delivered to United States by Europe	771,715,000
Gold and silver net balance delivered by Canada—largely French and Italian gold deposited with Great Britain sent via Canada	1,418,392,000
Gold and credits delivered to United States Treasury by British Government from India	81,000,000
3. American securities purchased from European holders by American investors	2,500,000,000
European securities, public and private, purchased by American investors ($2,881,506,000, less $648,246,316 refunded through $10,000,000,000 loan by British)	2,232,259,684
Francs, marks, lire, pounds sterling purchased and held by American investors	1,000,000,000
Canadian securities, public and private, purchased by American investors	1,455,780,000
4. War merchandise and service by United States Government purchased in Europe for war, Navy aircraft, and United States Government needs to end armistice period paid in cash	2,509,442,889
War merchandise and service by United States Government for same purposes as sub. 4, Item II, paid by United States from francs, lire, and pounds sterling furnished by allied Governments	1,490,557,111
War merchandise and service by United States Government for same purposes from armistice period to present for occupational expenses on the Rhine	255,862,608
5. Interest accrued to European investor and holder of American securities on an average rate of 5½ per cent on $2,500,000,000 [1]	1,526,322,688
6. Remittances by European immigrants in America to Europe, 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918, at $175,000,000 per year; 1920, 1921, and 1922, at $300,000,000 per year—all Europe [1]	1,600,000,000
7. Tourist and shipping, repairs for years 1919, $100,000,000; 1920, $150,000,000; 1921, $175,000,000; 1922, $200,000,000 [1]	625,000,000
8. American investments in Canadian and European properties and agencies (motors, tires, farm implements, oil, packing, etc.) [1]	50,000,000
9. Current revolving credit advances to European and Canadian merchants by American bankers and exporters for United States exports and imports [1]	2,000,000,000
Unsettled trade balance of Europe and Canada in favor of United States			$28,835,537,153 12,878,560,194
Total United States bill to Europe and Canada for eight years		$41,214,117,346	41,214,117,346
Item III. Balance due and unpaid.
1. European allied Government notes received by United States Government for allied loans under Liberty loan act—unpaid balance to Nov. 15, 1922	9,386,422,558
2. European Government notes received by United States Government for War-Navy supplies sold since war, $574,876,884; sales American relief, $84,093,963; and sales U. S. G. Co., $56,858,802, plus $255,862,608, United States Rhine cost	871,692,257
3. Interest accrued and unpaid on sub. 1-2, Item III, by European countries to United States Government balance to Nov. 15, 1922	1,554,783,389
4. Total obligations of European Governments to United States Government	11,812,898,204

Farm industry's interest in the above—international transactions covering eight years:

(a) The $10,000,000,000 Allied loan by the United States was directly expended for agricultural products, $7,889,001,697; for manufactured and raw materials, $2,699,106,125; railroad freight, $136,083,774.

(b) The $871,692,257 liquidation sales—notes, United States Grain Corporation and American Relief—at least 80 per cent thereof, or $697,353,705, was for agricultural products.

(c) Of the total exported merchandise to Europe and Canada (excluding supplies to Army and Navy in Europe), $26,184,701,270 was agricultural products.

American banking and investment houses' interest in the above—international transactions covering eight critical years:

(a) The financing and sale of all securities purchased and sold in American markets.

(b) All credit arrangements and settlements on total exports and imports.

(c) Total shipments of all gold and silver imported and exported.

(d) Collections and payments of all interest and discount, together with the handling of invisible credits and debits of immigrant remittances, tourists, shipping, and insurance.

(e) Investigating, reporting, and passing, as well as establishing European customers' credits for merchandise exported, for which they have established in European countries large American branches.

(f) The American seaboard banks and American investment houses from New York to San Francisco handled $56,000,000,000 for our foreign trade during those eight critical years while the great American interior banks financed in addition the money for the planting and sale of the farm products during the same period.

TABLE VIII.—Looking backward from January 1, 1914, to January 1, 1900—Fourteen years pre-war peace period—International trade balance sheet between United States and all Europe, years 1900 to 1914, inclusive—Peace time pre-war trade sheet with Europe.

Fiscal years.	United States bill of items to Europe.						Europe's payment on bill.
	Fiscal year exports.	Fiscal year imports.	Fiscal year net excess of United States exports and imports.	Fiscal year net excess gold and silver to Europe.	To Europe United States securities sold as merchandise.	United States total bill to Europe.[1]	Total Europe payments.[1]	Interest 5½ per cent paid to Europe on United States securities purchased.	Interest 6 per cent paid to Europe on $1,500,000,000 on our world's trade.	Net excess of European ocean drayage for United States.	United States tourists' money in Europe.	Immigrant remittance to Europe.	Net excess gold and silver to United States.
1900	$1,040,167,763	$440,567,314	$599,600,449	$75,313,684	$70,000,000	$744,914,133	$737,600,000	$227,600,000	$90,000,000	$50,000,000	$170,000,000	$200,000,000	.....
1901	1,136,504,605	429,620,452	706,884,153	92,246,955	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1902	1,008,033,981	475,161,941	532,872,040	75,424,417	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1903	1,029,256,651	547,226,887	482,029,770	48,717,734	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1904	1,057,930,131	498,697,379	559,232,752	79,610,721	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1905	1,020,972,641	540,773,092	480,199,549	1,563,792	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1906	1,200,166,036	633,292,184	566,873,852	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	$785,818
1907	1,298,452,380	747,291,253	551,161,127	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	44,425,633
1908	1,283,600,153	608,014,147	675,586,008	2,134,700	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1909	1,146,755,321	654,322,918	492,432,403	82,331,925	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1910	1,194,062,988	790,134,594	403,928,399	71,877,002	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1911	1,293,072,862	770,293,236	522,779,626	34,525,802	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1912	1,467,451,834	900,003,944	567,447,890	64,138,330	150,000,000	781,586,220	776,750,000	26,675,000	90,000,000	50,000,000	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1913	1,499,573,363	864,666,103	634,907,260	.....	150,000,000	784,907,260	793,360,330	275,000,000	90,000,000	50,000,000	170,000,000	200,000,000	8,360,330

[1] 1922 exports and imports used as basis for 1923.

Looking backward: To the close of this normal 14-year period Europe's credit position, as a result of an almost uninterrupted half a century of peaceful commercial civilization, was as follows:

(a) Europe, with the rest of the world, was enjoying the benefits of international trade, which was at its highest point, with 45,000,000 tons of shipping facilities sufficient to adequately handle the world's commerce.

(b) In the world's commerce Europe was the great financial center, supplying the new money for United States, Russia, Japan, China, India, South America, Africa, Australia, Canada, and the Balkan States—in a word, to the world.

(c) The investors of Great Britain alone owned and controlled $250,000,000 of the $300,000,000 of the annual gold supply of the world.

(d) The investors of Great Britain alone had invested capital in the countries of the world of $18,000,000,000.

(e) Europe had purchased and held American securities to the extent of $5,000,000,000.

(f) Great Britain had invested in the financing of our foreign trade an additional $1,500,000,000.

(g) Europe was collecting annually from the United States an interest charge at 5½ per cent on $5,000,000,000 and 6 per cent on an additional $1,500,000,000 invested in our foreign trade—a total annual interest of $365,000,000.

(h) Europe was doing our annual ocean drayage in excess of $50,000,000 over that carried in American bottoms.

(i) Europe was loaning to the United States new capital at the rate of $100,000,000 a year.

(j) All of the European nations had a small national debt, the interest on which was easily met by small annual tax of $1,600,000,000 for interest on their national debts.

(k) The franc, lira, crown, ruble, and pound sterling were sound and approximately at par the world over, with all the European nations solvent.

(l) European merchants were well known and financially strong, with unquestioned credit the world over.

These were the financially strong and the good customers for the exportable surplus of the American farm, factory, and mine.

Let us now look at Europe—our same good customers—as of January 1, 1923, after the destructive calamity of a world-destroying war.

Looking forward—from January 1, 1923, to the years to come—10, 20, 30, 40 years:

(a) The United States has become the financial center and great creditor nation of the world, with $250,000,000,000 of national wealth and a comparatively small national debt—to-day the only world market for substantial amounts of new capital.

(b) The lines of the world's international commerce broken down and largely destroyed, except for taking care of only the almost actual necessities of life for many of the countries of the world—their buying reduced to the lowest possible minimum.

(c) The world's shipping facilities greatly overbuilt, with 54,000,000 dead-weight tons of steel cargo shipping, in desperate competition, to carry the "world's commerce," which does not require to-day more than 35,000,000 dead-weight tons of shipping.

(d) With a total of $28,000,000,000 paid on our $40,000,000,000 of trade balance, there is hanging over and menacing our foreign trade relations with Europe a $12,878,560,194 unsettled trade balance in favor of the United States.

1. This terrific unsettled trade balance exists, too, even after Europe has exhausted almost all of her available resources to settle it. Great Britain, realizing the effect of this unsettled trade balance and its menace to world conditions, endeavors in a statesmanlike manner to promptly accept our terms and thus reduce her portion of that trade balance by approximately $5,000,000,000.

2. Hanging over the European nations to-day are great unfunded external debts, owed principally to the United States and Great Britain, of $11,812,898,204 to the United States alone, with an annual interest charge of $354,000,000, menacing and destroying the reasoning powers of the afflicted nations of Europe, which must be met by taxes upon her people.

(e) To meet forty billions of trade balance in favor of the United States during the last eight critical years, of which trade $26,000,000,000 was for agricultural products, our great customers in Europe have since 1914—

1. Returned to the United States two and one-half billion dollars' worth of American securities, and the United States, through the Alien Property Custodian, has impounded $400,000,000 worth of German securities.

2. Sent to us a $2,271,107,000 net balance of gold and silver, mostly Russian, Austrian, German, Italian, and French, together with new world production, which the United States holds, and as a result these nations are off a good basis.

3. Borrowed new money in the American investment markets of $2,232,259,684.

4. Canada has borrowed in the American investment markets $1,455,780,000. Europe in pre-war days furnished Canada all her new capital; and

5. The United States has taken over from Europe the financing of her own world trade and has invested in it about $2,000,000,000 of American banking money.

(f) Europe is collecting interest to-day from us on $1,500,000,000 of American securities, as against $5,000,000,000 held by her investors in 1914.

(g) The countries of Europe staggering under national external and internal debts, with interest charges from those debts equaling $11,000,000,000 a year, as against $1,500,000,000 of interest charges for 1913.

(h) While the dollar and pound sterling are practically at par, the lira is a little over one-fifth of par and the franc a little less than one-third of par, with the ruble, Austrian crown, and the German mark depreciated to practically nil.

(i) The credits of a large percentage of the merchants of Europe are weak and gradually shriveling up. Yet midst all the financial chaos that exists in Europe to-day, Great Britain, with $15,000,000,000 of world securities still in the hands of her private investors, within the very heat of the firing line, stands cool and set at home like the sentinel "Rock of Gibraltar," while promptly honoring her obligations abroad. The world has confidence in her statesmanship because Great Britain always leans in her international affairs upon the tried and experienced men of her country, in her hours of success as well as in her hours of need. They know the present-day history of "world commerce" and they can read the future. What a lesson to this country—her debt-funding commission arrived home on Saturday, reported to the Government, and by the following Wednesday that nation had accepted and taken on its obligations of principal and interest to the United States Government, assuming for its people, already heavily taxed, a further tax burden of $170,000,000 a year for 66 years.

(j) Great Britain, along with the neutral countries of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, and Portugal, are alone left with foreign financial credit and stability.

TABLE IX.—United States looking forward for years—10, 20, 50 years—credit ability of United States foreign customers to buy our exportable surplus—France, Italy, Germany, Europe—prospective balance sheets for 1923 on three bases—which?—Canada excluded.

UNITED STATES BILL OF ITEMS TO EUROPE.

[Items 1 to 10, inclusive, stated in millions of dollars.]

Year and reference.	Total exports to Europe (merchandise).	Total imports from Europe (merchandise).	(1) Net balance of exports over imports.	(2) Net balance, gold and silver sent Europe.	(3) United States loans sold as merchandise to Europe.	(4) Payment of maturing European loans to United States.	(5) Net balance, shipping.	(6) Interest payments on $2,000,000,000 in foreign trade to United States, 7 per cent.	(7) Discount, 3 per cent, paid in pounds sterling for sale of European loans in United States.	(8) Interest at 6 per cent on $2,300,000,000 United States loans to Europe.	(9) Interest, 5 per cent, on loans to allies of $11,800,000,000.	(10) Payments of United Kingdom on debt to United States, $4,743,000,000.	Total bill of United States to Europe.
1912 "A"	1,467	900	567	64	150	None.	None.	None.	None.	None.	None.	None.	781
1922 "B"	2,050	1,054	955	None.	None.	None.	33	140	17.7	133	100.5	None.	1,419.2
1923 "X"	[1]2,050	[1]1,054	[1]995	None.	None.	Nil.	33	140	30	133	590	None.	1,923
1923 "Y"	[1]2,050	[1]1,054	[1]995	None.	None.	Nil.	None.	140	14	133	142	30	1,457
1923 "Z"			600	None.	None.	Nil.	None.	140	6	133	142	30	1,051

[1] 1922 exports and imports used as basis for 1923.

EUROPE'S PAYMENT THEREOF.

[Items 1 to 11, inclusive, stated in millions of dollars.]

Year and reference.	Total payments by Europe to United States.	(1) Interest, 5½ per cent, on $1,500,000,000 United States loans held in Europe.	(2) United States tourist money.	(3) United States immigrant remittances.	(4) Net balance, gold and silver sent to United States.	(5) New loans made by Europe in United States.	(6) United States securities held in Europe resold in United States.	(7) Interest, 6 per cent, paid Europe on $1,500,000,000 invested in United States foreign trade.	(8) Net balance due Europe on shipping.	(9) World securities held by Europe sold in United States.	(10) World loans formerly held by Europe refunded in United States, and balances left here to credit of European holders, Canada, Dutch East Indies, etc.	(11) Purchase by United States (marks, lire, francs).
1912 "A"	776	266	170	200	None.	.....	None.	90	50	Nil.	Nil.	Nil.
1922 "B"	1,379	82	200	300	176	220	50	None.	None.	30	321	.....
1923 "X"	1,923	82	200	300	200	1,061	50	None.	None.	30	None.	None.
1923 "Y"	1,456	82	200	300	200	544	50	None.	50	30	None.	None.
1923 "Z"	1,042	82	200	300	100	230	50	None.	50	30	None.	None.

"A"—First. Normal trade balance sheet of 1912: Normalcy in highest degree and almost a counterpart of each year from 1900 to 1914, which was a period of "commercial civilization" with the world at peace. (Table VIII.)

"B"—Second. Thus, as against 1912, Europe in her international balance sheet finds an abnormal total increase made up from the following items: (1) An excess balance of exports and imports over 1912 of $428 million; (2) excess of $33M from net balance of shipping; (3) interest payments on $2 billion invested in the foreign trade of the United States at 7%—$140M; (4) discount of 3% paid in the United States on sale of European loans—$17.7M; (5) interest at 6% on $2.3 billion loan of United States capital to Europe—$133M; (6) interest on British loan paid in 1922 of $100.5M. Less net balance of gold sent by the United States to Europe in 1912 of $64M and loans of European capital made to the United States in that year of $150M; or a net abnormal increase of $638.3 millions.

Her abnormal payment on this bill in 1922 as against 1912 consist of additional $30M United States tourist money, plus additional $100M immigration money; plus $176M gold and silver net balance sent the United States; plus $220 European loans made in the United States; plus $50M American securities sold by Europe; plus $30M world securities sold by Europe to the United States; plus $321M world loans formerly held by Europe refunded in the United States and the balance left here to the credit of Europe. Less $50M of shipping; less $90M interest at 6% paid by Europe on $1.5 billions invested in the United States. Foreign trade; less $182M interest on $5 billion United States loans formerly held in Europe and now reduced to $1.5B—a total of abnormal payments of $605 millions.

Of the $176M net balance of gold and silver that was paid by Europe to the United States in the first 10 months of 1922, Great Britain sent $94.5M; France, $19.6M; Netherlands, $9.8M; Norway, $8.4M; Sweden, $32.7M; and Denmark, $17.6M.

Of the new loans made by Europe in America in 1922 of $220M, as against loans to us of $150M in 1912, the neutral countries borrowed as follows: Denmark, $30M; Copenhagen, $5M; Netherlands, $30M; Holland, $12.06M; Holland-America, $8.04M; and Norway, $18M—a total of $103.1 millions. While the Yugoslovak Republic borrowed $25M; Czechoslovak Republic, $14M; city of Gr. Prague, $7.5M; city of Soissons (France), $6M; Department of Seine (France), $25M; Framer Industrial Development Corporation (France), $10M; Paris, Lyons Mediterranean Railway (France), $30M—a total amount of loans for these countries of $117.5 million, or a grand total for Europe of $220.6 millions. In addition there were a number of European issues refunded in the United States during the year which has no effect on the international balance sheet. Of the $321M of world securities held by European investors which became due in 1922, such as Great Britain's great investments in Canada and Holland's in the Dutch East Indies, South America, etc., these were refunded with new United States money.

Thus was the United States bill to Europe in 1922 $1,419.2 millions, as against $781M in 1912, and her payments totaled $1,379M in 1922, as against $776M in 1912.

The author abandoned the details of further exact information on the sale and refund of world securities in American markets, as well as some other points, because of the desire to get this out before the adjournment of Congress. However, it is plainly seen that while the payments of British debt and interest will throw heavy taxes on the people of Great Britain, she can take care of her principal and interest charge and payment will come for her adverse balances from gold and from the sale of her world securities when refunded by new American capital. No attempt is made to estimate the ultimate effect of these payments on our foreign trade; but as England built her great reservoir of foreign investments, it seems as though this country could do it without injury to her foreign trade. Likewise the neutral countries can take care of their adverse balances with the United States; but as to those countries that absorb 50 per cent of the world's exportable surpluses of wheat and cotton, to wit, France, Italy, Belgium, Germany, and the other countries of southeast Europe, they some months ago passed the dead center of credit and power to furnish the needed gold, world's securities, and substantial credits to absorb our exportable surpluses. Hence the dwindling of our markets with those countries. As Great Britain's financial strength to meet the future becomes more visible, her exchange crawls upward to par. As the United States furnishes new capital to non-European countries and takes over from Europe the refunding loans of non-European countries now held by Europe, the United States will cut down her existing adverse trade balances with the non-European countries through the interest payments made by the non-European countries to the United States investors. The balance of trade drafted between the United States and each of those countries could be accomplished in 60 days, so that we could see and understand the present and future credit situation of our customers.

"X"—Third. Prospective 1923 trade balance sheet: The payment of $200,000,000 net gold and silver by Europe to the United States (in column 4 of Europe's payment therefor) will come largely from Great Britain, if it does come, or she will allow the world securities which become due next year and which her private investors hold, to be refunded in the United States money markets, and thus will largely settle her obligations to the United States. Then, too, the neutral countries will settle their balances and borrow less money in the United States this coming year, for their borrowings were largely for national purposes of putting their governments in order after the war. The $1,061,255,000 of European securities which will have to be sold in the United States market to American investors in 1923 must come in the main from Italy, France, Belgium, and Germany as money borrowed to settle their trade balances for food supplies purchased in this country. No sane man who has analyzed the purchase of European securities in the American markets in the year 1922 and at the same time has observed the lowered value of those securities in the hands of American purchasers to-day will predict that the American market will absorb to any appreciable extent loans from France, Italy, Belgium, and Germany during the year 1923, with financial chaos increasing in those countries. The last two classes of merchandise which nations in failing financial circumstances part with for the feeding of their people are, first, works of art, heirlooms, and other personal valuables. It would throw light on the failing credit of Italy, France, Germany, Belgium, and Austria if our commerce records had these items segregated as to countries for the years 1919, 1920, 1921, and 1922. Well-informed men estimate that large annual imports of these items are coming into this country. Only a survey will determine this item for our balance sheet with each of these countries. The second class is the small balance of their national stocks of gold. In all the countries of Europe except Great Britain and the neutral countries they are holding their remaining gold as sacred. According to the Annual Report of the Director of the United States Mint for the year 1922, on December 31, 1921, Austria had $16,000 of gold; Belgium, $51,000,000; Bulgaria, $7,000,000; Czechoslovakia, $12,000,000; France, $690,000,000; Germany, $237,000,000; Greece, $10,000,000; Italy, $220,000,000; Poland, $7,000,000; while, for comparative purposes, two neutrals had, Spain, $472,000,000, and Switzerland, $106,000,000. In this regard note the small amounts of gold that came from the above countries during 1922: France, $19,600,000; Italy, none; Belgium, none; and Austria, none. There is yet that last reserve on which to draw.

What the French, Italian, Belgian, and German financial borrowings will have to be for the years 1923 and 1924 for payments of their needs of the world's exportable surplus of wheat and cotton, will be shown when international balance sheets, formed on facts, are drawn. Then, too, when we have established the facts as to the credit conditions of those countries, we will be able, in a more definite way, to determine the amount of actual credits that can be made, and hence the extent of their buying power for 1923 and 1924. It is to be noted that since July 7, 1922, no European loans have been sold in the United States, except the small loans of neutral countries. It must be kept in mind also that Great Britain has no new money to finance loans or credits to Italy, France, Belgium, and Germany, nor will she do so in their present credit condition for the benefit of American merchandise going into those countries, except where the present personal credits of purchasers are intact. Has not a gradual lowering of our exports to Europe, month by month in the last two years, been due to the dwindling credit caused by these countries using up their credit surplus in nonproductive fields? It must again be kept in mind that American bankers financing our foreign trade can not increase their loans to Italy, France, Germany, Belgium, and Austria beyond their present point unless improved credit conditions arise in Europe. With a lowering of credit conditions in those countries, it is natural that there will be a gradual diminution of American bankers' advances.

One important credit element which must be taken into consideration in intercountry trade balance sheets is the trade balance of the customer country with world "triangular trading"—in a word, the annual trade balance sheets of Italy, France, Belgium, and Germany with the world. If any of these countries has an excess of exports over imports in their annual world trade, they could use that excess to-day to settle their advance balances with the United States. In examining the world commerce for the normal year 1913, we find no comfort, for we know to-day these countries have no loaning power; own only a small part of the world gold mines; have little or no tourist or immigrant money outward, and have no shipping balance. Furthermore, the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science for July, 1922, report that for the prewar year 1913, the world merchandise balances of these countries were adverse, as follows:

1913.

	Imports.	Exports.	Adverse balances.
Belgium	$892,889,150	$696,765,510	$196,123,640
France	1,657,431,450	1,339,298,440	318,133,010
Italy	708,638,570	487,764,590	220,873,980
Germany	2,604,232,500	2,413,718,100	190,514,400

"Y"—Fourth. Prospective 1923 trade balance sheet presupposes: (a) Assume all foreign loans to the Allies excepting British canceled and the British debt on a 3 per cent interest basis; (b) that the American farm industry and the American manufacturers and producers of raw materials are more interested in selling the United States national exportable surplus of farm products, manufactured goods, and raw materials to Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Belgium, and Holland than they are in collecting additional United States charges for shipping. Realizing that every shipping dollar that is taken from European customers by "United States shipping charges" cuts off just that many dollars of sales to our European customers. Then, too, it presupposes that the American taxpayers are not interested in raising annually $30,000,000 more for a ship subsidy in order to partially destroy the ability of our European customers to absorb our exportable surplus from farm, factory, and mine.

Under the suppositions of balance sheet for 1923 "Y," (a) with all the European loans to the United States canceled (except Great Britain) and (b) European customers doing shipping, again will the two hundred million gold come from Great Britain, while Italy, France, Germany, and Belgium will largely have to borrow in the American markets five hundred and forty-four millions to pay the food bill, which again is an impossibility because of the financial condition of Europe.

"Z"—Fifth. Prospective 1923 trade balance sheet presupposes: (a) The high state of normalcy that obtained in our trade relations with Europe from 1900 to 1914; (b) cancellation of all our European loans except Great Britain's; (c) the carrying of the ocean freight by the European countries as was done in the normalcy 1900–1914 period; (d) that we make reciprocal commercial treaties with preferential tariff rates with our principal European customers who buy our exportable farm surplus so as to bring our balance of merchandise trade down to the average normal of 1900–1914 period, to wit, to six hundred millions a year. This would permit one hundred millions of British gold, gathered by her people from the annual world production for 1923, to be diverted to the use of Italy, France, Belgium, and Germany. It, too, would so stabilize European conditions that our American investment markets would again absorb two hundred and thirty millions of European securities and world refunding securities and at the same time would leave the balance of the American investing market to absorb the large unfunded railroad debt of this country, and at the same time stabilize the railroad situation and enable the United States railroads to secure new money for much-needed equipment to take care of the coming fall trade. The railroad balance sheets of this country for the years 1921–22 show almost as bad a financial condition and inability to borrow as does the farm industry balance sheet for those years. (e) It presupposes reciprocal immigration treaties with France, Italy, Belgium, and Germany, so that Italy, particularly, can balance her food purchases with the United States through immigration labor, which has always had a fair opportunity in the past years in the American labor field. These reciprocal immigration treaties, too, based on United States State percentages instead of total United States percentages, will bring down the commodity prices to a more reasonable level to the farmers and to the great middle classes of the United States, consisting of lawyers, doctors, teachers, clerks, and those whose incomes have not risen with and in proportion to the war advance in commodity prices. The American farm industry needs two things: First, lower commodity prices, and, second, a stabilization and financial strengthening of its consuming European market, like the 1900–1914 period, in which to sell the farm surplus. The farm industry can not continue for the next two to five years to absorb annually $2,110,100,000 of increased labor costs in its commodity purchases and have its European market dry up and thus have this increased surplus of the American farm drive down its prices to an even lower basis than it is to-day to the complete and inevitable economic destruction of the American farm industry.

The hour is fraught with great danger to the American farm industry. Only exact information will help to hold the situation in its present critical position.

Most thoughtful minds in America understand that the United States has arrived at a new economic stage in its life in reference to world affairs, but because of the lack of definite information we have been unable to analyze this new stage of economic affairs, and thus the American business man, the American farmer, the American press, and our American statesmen are without the definite facts upon which to move, and the Government is without the machinery to establish these facts quickly and readily. The hour has arrived when a domestic and foreign policy for the Nation should be outlined in harmony with the Monroe doctrine, so clear and simple that all of our American people can readily and easily understand it, and so that our Congress may pass the necessary legislation to meet this new order of things and our administrative officers direct it.

Who is to blame for this state of affairs in our national life?

First. If one is fair and just, he will say the Republican and Democratic Parties equally, for during the last four years their leaders have not seen this new order of things and insisted that the statistical divisions of the great Departments of Commerce, Agriculture, Labor, and finance be reorganized so as to gather those important facts on our domestic conditions and their relation to international trade, and thus make the essential facts available to the administrative and legislative officers of our Government.

Second. The Department of Commerce (a) in 1917 discontinued the method of analyzing and totaling our agricultural exports to Europe, so that it is not possible to-day to find out the total amount of exports of agricultural products which since 1917 have gone to Europe as a whole and to the different countries of Europe. (b) Nor has that department gathered the international data on our trade-balance relation with the several countries of Europe, nor the world-trade balance of those several countries. Neither has it laid the machinery to gather and record the actual public sales of foreign securities in the American markets for the last four years, nor for the gathering of the essential information of those several items that go to make international balance sheets. Thus there is no data in that department available to Congress and the administrative branches of our Government upon which to establish a definite and clear foreign and domestic policy for this new order of things. As a result of this, the great press of our country is unable to speak in common terms to the American public for the creation of public opinion.

Third. The Department of Agriculture has not created any machinery to take care of this new order of things as it affects the farm industry and the products of the factory and mine. In the Department of Agriculture Yearbook for 1921, the issuance of which was delayed until September, 1922, one fails to find complete data for 1920 as to the world's exportable surplus of wheat and cotton by countries, let alone nothing for the year 1921. Nowhere in either of the above departments are their records so kept that the President of the United States, the Congress, the American banker, farmer, business man, and our public press can get definite information as to European trade and credit relationship with the United States in order that sound Government policy can be formed.

Fourth. The Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, composed of Senators and Congressmen from the Agricultural Committees of the Senate and House, in an investigation running for a period of two years failed to appreciate the importance of this new order of things as it related to agriculture, and thus did not point out the need for new statistical machinery to meet the new order of international trade.

Fifth. The Senate Commerce Committee and the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee have occupied four years of time trying to devise ways and means to compel Europe to buy shipping service from the United States to the extent of $35,000,000 a year, with a loss to Europe of an additional $50,000,000 a year, thereby causing a diminution of annual purchases of our exportable surplus of farm, factory, and mine, to the extent of $83,000,000 a year. It will be noted that the occupation of the minds of these great committees with this shipping question took away from them an opportunity to visualize the new order of things, to wit, the larger necessities for the sale of our exportable surpluses from farm, factory, and mine, and their relation to our foreign customers in Europe.

Sixth. The Shipping Board, in a desire to patriotically place our flag on the high seas, failed to investigate the simple, essential economic facts underlying our international trade and the relation of shipping thereto, and thus all the essential facts have not been placed before the President and the country.

Is it any wonder that to-day the patriotic American business man, farmer, banker, press, the Congress, and the President are not of a common mind and that we have confusion in our national life and thought?

In harmony with America's historic, usual condition, we are not prepared to-day to meet this new order of things any better than we were prepared to enter the war on April 6, 1917. We are not making a move to gather the essential data necessary to determine the economic condition of the American farmer and the interest of the United States in the European situation, nor has any preparation been made to find out the exact condition of the European countries and what economic move must be made to save France, Italy, Belgium, and Austria—in a word, Europe.

SUGGESTED REMEDY TO CLEAR UP THE NATION-WIDE CONFUSION.

If the financial house of J. P. Morgan & Co. were heavily interested in five great American corporations, which had become very badly involved financially, the first thing that the house of Morgan would do would be to put their expert minds on the job and inform themselves of detailed facts concerning the financial condition and future trade outlook of each of the five financially involved corporations and their interrelation with each other, as well as with Morgan & Co. In a word, Morgan & Co. would find out their exact interest in that situation. When the analysis was completed and Morgan had before them all the facts, they would (a) arrive at a judgment on the situation; (b) make plans to protect their common interest with the five corporations; and (c) they would call in the five great corporations and outline the plan of salvation for them. No one could induce Morgan & Co. to go into a conference with those five financially involved corporations until they have exactly arrived at:

First. All of their own relations and interest in the matter;
Second. The condition of each one of the five corporations;
Third. Their own decision as to policy; and Fourth. A definite plan for the salvation of the situation.

With the four steps above completed, Morgan & Co. would call in the five financially involved corporations and lay all the facts, together with their decision and plans, on the table for consideration. During the preparatory period the five corporations desiring salvation would know what Morgan & Co. were doing and would work in harmony, to the ultimate profit and interest of all.

Can not the United States, following a similar businesslike method, cause the creation of four great fact-finding commissions, with strong internationally trained chairmen, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, the chairman of each within a week to submit a list of the members of his commission to the President of the United States for confirmation?

The first fact-finding commission: To prepare all the data and draw an economic pact for Europe, based on the lines of the four-power peace pact, with a chairman like the Hon. Elihu Root, who knows the Monroe doctrine, all of our historic political relations with the countries of the world, and, too, knows the men to put on a commission who can work in harmony with him and who are learned on the subject. Within three months his commission would be prepared to report.

The second fact-finding commission: A finance commission which would proceed to get all of the financial data of each of our great European customers, their methods of taxation, the financial condition of their budgets and exchanges, the condition of the gold supply of those particular nations and of the world, together with the things necessary to be done to straighten out the financial systems and balance the budgets of those countries. For the chairmanship of this commission a man like the Hon. Benjamin Strong, head of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, a practical banker who has available through the Federal reserve system all of the financial data bearing on Europe, who understands international finance and to whom is available the best financial minds in America as well as the great forces of the Federal reserve bank. Mr. Strong could have his commission organized within a week. Within three months it would be able to report. To the financial commission should be attached such officers of the United States Army and Navy as are qualified to report on the size of the armies and navies necessary for a peace-time basis for those countries.

The third fact-finding commission: A reparations commission which would be organized and proceed at once to Germany to find out the present-day financial condition of that country and determine the amount of reparations and method of payment which Germany economically can stand, together with the things necessary to give life to the German nation so that it can again become a world customer for cotton and wheat. For the chairmanship of this commission a man of the type of the Hon. B. M. Baruch, formerly chairman of the War Industries Board and later economic adviser to the American peace commission at Paris during the armistice period; a man who has made an intimate study of the reparations question and to whom is available the membership of the great War Industries Board organization. Within two weeks this commission could be organized and on its way to Germany, and within three months this commission could report back.

The fourth fact-finding commission: An economic commission to make an examination of all the factors that enter into our national production and national surpluses, and especially those relating to the farm industry; gather definite data concerning our exportable surpluses and the international balance of trade with the European countries; make definite all the facts so that we can somewhat read the situation of our European customers in their present bad financial condition, and thus know what to expect of those markets for the next oncoming five years. For the chairmanship of that commission the Hon. Julius H. Barnes, formerly chairman of the United States Grain Corporation and assistant to the Hon. Herbert Hoover during the war, presently president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and in private life a grain exporter who has made a life study of the American farm situation. Within two weeks this commission could be organized and within three months its investigation completed.

For the general chairmanship or director of these four commissions, a fifth man of the type of the Hon. Alex Legge, president of the International Harvester Co., whose life work has been with the farm industry and the future of whose great institution to-day is absolutely dependent upon the economic welfare of this industry. Then, too, the International Harvester Co. has one great operating plant in Russia, one in France, and one in Germany. It will be recalled that Mr. Legge was vice chairman of the War Industries Board during the war and was associated with the Hon. B. M. Baruch during the peace negotiations of the armistice period. His duty would be to house the commissions, make and arrange the interrelations among the four commissions and their connections with the European countries so that they could send promptly to our commissions all the information necessary, and generally organize and drive the situation, as he drives so successfully in an executive way, at home and abroad, the big things of his company.

The American Economic Commission on Home Affairs to be constituted of the chairmen of the four fact-finding commissions and its director, the Hon. Alex Legge. When the fact-finding commissions' work is done, the American Economic Commission on Home Affairs to report publicly its facts, findings, and suggestive plans for the economic aid of the American farm industry and our great European customer—to the President, to the Congress, and to the American people, whereupon a special session of Congress can be promptly called to take the necessary action.

As soon as these commissions are authorized, under legislative enactment, and financed with a proper appropriation, the European governments could be promptly notified of our action and be asked to cooperate by appointing representatives who will aid the different fact-finding commissions in quickly gathering the required data from those countries.

In the meantime the domestic and foreign economics of the situation suggest two important things: (a) The passage of the rural credit legislation contained in the Capper bill, followed by an immediate intensive drive by the Government on all the small country banks of the United States to induce those which are sound to enter the Federal reserve system in order to promptly fill the place of the War Finance Corporation and thus have available, in case of national stress, a banking system for the farm industry to meet the crisis—should it arise—in a calm and orderly way; (b) the legislative acceptance of the recommendations of the American Debt Funding Commission on the settlement of the British debt and interest as a settlement with a single customer.

Under this suggested plan the Secretaries of State, Commerce, Agriculture, the Immigration Commissioner of the Department of Labor, and the Federal Reserve Board could immediately begin to reorganize and speed up their statistical departments so as to take on this new work. Thus would the forces of those great departments of our Government become quickly available to our American economic commission of home affairs. Would it not be an error if Cabinet members were placed on this commission? The answer lies in a reference to the action of this Nation when we met our great crisis in 1917 upon our entry into the World War, when five Cabinet members were formed into a national council of defense. For almost a year those Cabinet members worked in a dual capacity with dismal failure for results. It was only when the great fact-finding commission—the War Industries Board—was created that this Nation secured relief and started rapidly on its work of industrial mobilization for the aid of not only our own Army and Navy but for those of the Allies as well, greatly shortening the length of the war. Great tasks and responsibilities will fall upon the Departments of State, Commerce, Agriculture, and Labor when these fact-finding commissions begin their work and these great departments should be kept in orderly control during this critical period by the Secretaries now in charge.

When the American people know that our Government is proceeding on the lines suggested herein they will calmly await the results. Then, too, they will give loyal support to the Congress and to the President. There should be no criticism for the neglect of yesterday, for the criticisms fall equally on all men in all walks of life—if the fault is nation-wide. It is the action of to-day and to-morrow for which we can be criticized.

Upon the adoption of the suggestions contained herein the President of the United States will be relieved of the great pressure that is now on him due to this chaos, while the Members of the Senate and the House upon adjournment can proceed to thoroughly inform themselves upon our domestic situation and get the viewpoint of the American people back home. Then, too, our industry will be relieved from the threat of experimental legislation until based on known facts and conditions.

Respectfully submitted.

MARTIN J. GILLEN.

AUTHORITIES—UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT SOURCES.

Annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States—years 1914, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, and 1922.
Annual reports of the Director of the Mint—years 1915, 1919, 1921, and 1922.
Annual reports of the Secretary of War for the years 1919 and 1920.
Annual reports of the Secretary of Commerce—years 1919, 1920, 1921, and 1922.
Annual reports of the Director of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—years 1914 to 1922.
United States Department of Agriculture—Year Books for 1910 to 1921.
Annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for year 1922.
Annual report of the United States Shipping Board for 1922.
Report of Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry.
Annual report of War Finance Corporation for 1922.
Foreign commerce and navigation of the United States—years 1900 to 1922.
Monthly summary of foreign commerce of the Department of Commerce.
Final report of the United States Liquidating Commission.
Report on the fertilizer industry by Federal Trade Commission.
Wealth, debt, and taxation by the Bureau of the Census for 1913.
Fourteenth Census of United States manufacturers for year 1919 by Bureau of Census.
Fourteenth Census of United States—agriculture, farms and farm property—published by the Bureau of the Census.
Farm mortgage loans by banks, insurance companies, and other agencies by Department of Agriculture.
Monthly Crop Reporter—Department of Agriculture.
Monthly summary of economic conditions by United States Department of Agriculture.
Final report of allied purchasing commission of War Industries Board.
Personal interviews and correspondence with division chiefs of the Departments of Commerce, Agriculture, War, Treasury, and Bureau of the Budget.

OTHER SOURCES.

Income in the United States, by National Bureau of Economic Research, 1922.
Taxation and National Income, by National Industrial Conference Board.
French Public Finance, by Harvey E. Fisk, 1922.
Currency Inflation and Public Debts, by E. R. A. Seligman, 1922.
The War with Germany, by Leonard P. Ayres.
America and the Balance Sheet of Europe, by Bass and Moulton, 1922.
War Costs and Their Financing, by Ernest L. Bogart, 1921.
The Making of the Reparation and Economic Sections of the Treaty, by B. M. Baruch, 1920.

Agricultural Commerce, by Grosvenor G. Huebner.
Moody's Government and Municipals for 1922.
The National Monetary Commission (volume 20).
Journal of Royal Statistical Society, "National wealth and income of chief powers," by Sir J. C. Stamp, 1919.
Board of Trade of Chicago, statistics, 1921 and 1920.
Broomhall's Statistics.
International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.
Statistical Abstract of the United States, years 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921.
League of Nations bulletins.
Report of Italian Minister of the Treasury, July, 1922.
Whitaker's Almanac, London, 1923.
The Monetary Times, Toronto, 1922.
The London Economist, 1922.
The Statist, London, 1922.
Statesman's Yearbook for 1922.
Bureau of Railway Economics publications, 1922.
Dr. B. M. Anderson's economic bulletins, 1922.
Review of Economic Statistics, July, 1922.
American Economic Review, June, 1922.
Federal reserve bank bulletins, 1921, 1922.
Commerce and Finance, 1922.
Journal of Commerce.
The Annalist, January 8, 1923.
Annual report of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce for 1919, 1920, and 1921, with advance information for 1922.
Reports of the Rubber Association of America for 1921 and 1922.
Publications on foreign securities of banks and investment houses, 1921–22.
Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, July, 1922.
Report on Our Foreign Policy, by Chicago Association of Commerce, 1922.
United States Chamber of Commerce bulletins on (1) European budgets, (2) Chief obstacles to trade with Europe, (3) Interallied debts, (4) Russia before the war, (5) The tariff problem, (6) German reparations, (7) Problem of exchange, 1922.
Report on "European problems and their relation to American business," by committee of United States Chamber of Commerce appointed to visit continental Europe, 1922.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the debate upon the debt funding bill now before us and the ominous course of events in Europe lead me, contrary to my intention, to tax the time of the Senate to say a word.

We must decide, and decide shortly, whether we are to reject or to accept the proposed debt settlement. We must decide if, all things considered, the acceptance of the settlement is wise and sound as a matter of business and of national policy. There are Senators who find that the terms are too lenient to the British debtor, but who in this very Chamber once ran blood and sweat in anguished anxiety to defend the principles of six British votes to one American vote in the League of Nations which they sought to force us to join. In my humble judgment the terms of the settlement have been as much overpraised in some quarters as they have been too much condemned in others. By what standard would you measure the interest rate on a long-term Government bond? The rate of interest on British consols for 60 years before the Great War averaged some 3 per cent. These new British bonds are to run for 62 years, and for 52 of those years are to bear 3½ per cent, the same rate as the tax-free Liberty bonds of 1947, and three-quarters of 1 per cent less than the taxable Treasury notes of 1952—of taxable Treasury notes of which the life is about 30 years.

Since I prepared these notes I have received from the Treasury some tables for which I asked some days ago, bearing upon the diminution of the rate of interest on that part of the short-term public debt which has been refunded, some $6,000,000,000 in all. The tables show that the rate of interest has been diminished something over half of 1 per cent, or approximately $40,000,000 a year. I ask leave to introduce the tables in the RECORD as illustrative of the tendency of interest rates to diminish as normal credit conditions return.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator stated the amount of diminution but did not state the rate.

Mr. McCORMICK. The table which I have here shows that on that part of the debt which has been refunded, and which is set forth in the table, the rate is now about 4½ per cent, as against a little less than 5¼ per cent before the refunding operation began.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not seeking to disturb the Senator in his address, but let me ask him when we paid 5¼ per cent?

Mr. McCORMICK. Perhaps the Senator will let me hand him this table. Reading from it, he will find that series TM 4, 1921, paid as much as 5¼ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The date of that issue was June 15, 1921, right at the time when there was almost a panic in the world.

Mr. McCORMICK. The one to which I have alluded is dated October 15, 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. The date of the issue of the 4¾ per cent bonds was June 15, 1921.

Mr. McCORMICK. There were issues which bore as much as 5¾ per cent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Those were the short-time notes.

Mr. McCORMICK. So I stated at the outset of my comment upon this table.

Mr. REED of Missouri. They were not the bonded indebtedness. They were short-time notes.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have so stated two or three times.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I just wanted to be clear about it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have introduced the table only to indicate the tendency of interest rates as evidenced by the refunding of the short-time debt.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator realizes we are paying now more than 5 per cent on a considerable amount of our indebtedness.

Mr. McCORMICK. I do, and for that reason I instanced the rate which had been obtained on the taxable debt maturing in 1952, which, as the Senator will recall, is 4¼ per cent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We actually sold bonds last October at 4¼ per cent.

Mr. McCORMICK. Taxable?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; taxable bonds.

Mr. McCORMICK. As a matter of business, fault might be found with the settlement because before the maturity of the loan the British Government doubtless will be able to refund the unpaid balance at less than 3½ per cent, and pay its debt to the Government of the United States, but as a matter of international policy we should be happy to be rid of the debt.

If some Senators have complained that the interest rate on the average is too low, and that especially is it too low for the next 10 years, there are others who have objected still more vehemently that during those 10 years half of the interest due may remain unpaid and may be added to the capital sum of the debt. An amendment has been offered to strike out that provision, and this at a moment when some Senators have been seeking to establish additional European credits. It would be unwise and unworthy of us, sir, to deny to the debtor the privilege of postponing part payment of interest during the hard years when Britain alone among a score of our debtors is making ready to pay, when, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] pointed out, restoration of trade conditions is almost as important to the exporter in America as to the peoples of Europe.

Mr. President, I think we are agreed that in all probability the British Government will be harder pressed to meet the interest payments during the next 5 years, or the next 10 years, than at any other time during the life of the debt. The political and economic condition of Europe does not improve. Britain suffers therefrom more than we do. Consider for a moment the debts due us from nearly a score of European States besides Great Britain, ranging from nearly four billion due from France to two million due from Hungary.

Amounts owed the United States by foreign governments as of November 15, 1922.

	Loan.	Interest.	Total.
Great Britain	$4,135,818,358.44	$611,044,201.85	$4,746,862,560.29
France	3,340,746,215.16	503,386,035.61	3,844,132,250.77
Italy	1,648,034,050.90	284,681,434.61	1,932,715,485.51
Belgium	377,123,745.94	60,073,383.65	437,197,129.59
Russia	192,601,297.37	39,712,670.78	232,313,968.15
Czechoslovakia	91,887,668.65	14,404,536.67	106,292,205.32
Poland	135,662,867.80	17,618,809.01	153,281,676.81
Serbia	51,104,595.58	7,994,087.92	59,098,683.50
Rumania	36,128,494.94	5,864,104.34	41,992,599.28
Austria	24,055,708.92	2,886,685.08	26,942,394.00
Greece	15,000,000.00	750,000.00	15,750,000.00
Esthonia	13,999,145.60	2,089,625.66	16,088,771.26
Armenia	11,959,917.49	1,677,256.88	13,637,174.37
Finland	8,281,926.17	1,012,436.10	9,294,362.27
Latvia	5,132,287.14	643,576.87	5,775,864.01
Lithuania	4,981,628.03	747,244.20	5,728,872.23
Hungary	1,685,835.61	202,300.28	1,888,135.89

Not only do they owe us, they owe Britain, too, and the rivalry and hatred between them, their heavy military burdens, their unrestrained expenditures, and their growing debts injure British prosperity and threaten the future of British trade more than they injure our prosperity or threaten our trade. I submit for the record and for the information of those Senators who may care to study it a table showing how nearly universal was the increase of governmental indebtedness in Europe during the last year. I ask leave that the table may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

National debts of Europe, 1921 and 1922.

Country.	Unit of currency.	1921	1922
Austria-Hungary	Crown
Austria	do	169,893,000,000	[1] 1,437,568,000,000
Hungary	do	[2] 54,453,000,000
Belgium	Franc	33,927,000,000	36,493,000,000
Bulgaria	Lev	6,634,000,000	6,836,000,000
Czechoslovakia	Crown	[2] 28,500,000,000	44,712,000,000
Denmark	Krone	1,064,000,000	1,169,000,000
Finland	Fin mark	1,996,075,000	1,826,000,000
France	Franc	301,510,000,000	316,984,988,000
Germany	Mark	248,848,000,000	1,559,000,000,000
Greece	Drachma	4,150,000,000	4,750,000,000
Italy	Lire	[2] 72,974,000,000	113,203,000,000
Yugoslavia	Dinar	3,564,000,000	3,200,000,000
Netherlands	Florin	2,502,100,000	2,735,600,000
Norway	Krone	1,220,570,000	1,312,000,000
Poland	Mark	302,000,000,000	[3] 455,000,000,000
Portugal	Pound	35,831,000
	Escudo	1,862,000,000
Rumania	Leu	30,311,000,000
Russia	Ruble
Spain	Peseta	11,992,000,000	14,050,000,000
Sweden	Krone	1,270,400,000	1,526,000,000
Switzerland	Franc	1,738,000,000	[4] 2,083,000,000
Turkey	Turkish pound	No data.	[5] 400,000,000
United Kingdom	Pound	7,016,000,000	7,831,000,000

[1] Austrian exchequer bonds in Austrian bank, plus pre-war debt.
[2] 1920.
[3] Loans from Polish National Bank plus foreign debt.
[4] Dec. 31, 1921.
[5] Statement of Turkish delegation at Lausanne.

Mr. McCORMICK. It would almost seem that some of the governments of continental Europe have decided to commit economic suicide. They are destroying their own credit and that of their neighbors; they are reducing their own production and that of their neighbors, and thus they are madly diminishing their ability to sell and to buy from us. If I remember rightly, the British Empire buys over a third of all that we sell abroad. Together with the countries of Latin America, the British Empire will afford us during the years to come the best and safest market for our goods. This settlement ought to appeal to us partly because it is a lever, so to speak, upon which we can press to induce the payment of the six billions due us from the other creditors, but beyond that, Mr. President, because it is a just settlement and takes cognizance of the general industrial depression, the ruin of European continental markets, and the necessity for conserving the resources of the debtor in that common interest, of which so much has been said in America, and to which we believe France at the present moment has been so blind.

It was Wednesday last that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] alluded to the British monopoly of rubber, to which allusion has been made again to-day by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I think I was the first to call public attention to that monopoly, and the burden which the monopoly sought to place upon the shoulders of the American consumer. Our Government was slow in awakening to the necessity of protecting our interests in the production of rubber, as it has been slow in arousing our exporters to the importance of the South American market. We must vigilantly protect our trade against the competition of the most experienced and resourceful traders and bankers in the world—the British. But we are nevertheless concerned for the prosperity of the British Empire as we are for the prosperity of Europe. I believe that the proposed settlement is conducive to the restoration of trade and prosperity, and to the ultimate payment of debts due us from other countries. Nay, more, this settlement once made, the two creditors of the governments of continental Europe, America and Britain, have a common right and common interest to address themselves to the debtor governments which not only have made no plans to pay, but of which the progressive insolvency threatens not only their own ruin but the injury of our trade.

The occupation of the Ruhr has been unproductive of any economic or financial benefit to the French; the mining of coal almost has ceased, factories are closing, the costs of the occupation are rising, the mark has fallen and the franc is falling, the French minister of finance has announced a new internal loan for 13,000,000,000 francs at a higher rate of interest than that which has hitherto obtained. French bonds like those of a majority of the other states of continental Europe, are quoted at a great discount below par. The ruin of credit and currency which first overspread Russia, and then spread over all south central and central Europe, threatens to cross the Izonzo and the Rhine into Italy and France and Belgium. The time very well may come when the agreement presented to us for ratification may constitute the precedent from which steps can be taken to reorder the finances of continental Europe. I shall vote for it.

APPENDIX.

Statement showing (1) specified items of the public debt as of February 28, 1921, required to be refunded before the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; (2) the issue date; (3) the rate per cent per annum; (4) the principal amount outstanding; (5) the interest for one year on the outstanding principal at the interest rate for each issue; and (6) the average rate of interest per annum.

	Date of issue.	Rate per annum.	Principal amount outstanding.		Interest for one year on principal outstanding Feb. 28, 1921.
		Per cent.
Notes: Victory Liberty loan—4¼ per cent notes of 1922-23	May 20, 1919	4¼		$3,463,842,650		$164,532,525.87
Treasury certificates:
Tax—
Series TM, 1921	Mar. 15, 1920	4½	$184,370,500		$8,757,598.75
Series TJ, 1921	June 15, 1920	6	242,517,000		14,551,020.00
Series TM2, 1921	July 15, 1920	5½	74,278,000		4,270,985.00
Series TM3, 1921	Sept. 15, 1920	5¾	106,626,500		6,131,023.75
Series TS, 1921	do	6	341,969,500		20,518,170.00
Series TM4, 1921	Oct. 15, 1920	5¾	124,252,500		7,144,518.75
Series TJ2, 1921	Dec. 15, 1920	5¾	188,123,000		10,817,101.25
Series TD, 1921	do	6	389,557,500		23,373,450.00
				1,651,694,500		95,563,867.50
Loan—
Series C, 1921	Aug. 16, 1920	6	156,654,500		9,399,270.00
Series D, 1921	Nov. 15, 1920	5¾	232,124,000		13,347,130.00
Series E, 1921	Jan. 15, 1921	5½	118,660,000		6,526,300.00
Series F, 1921	do	5½	192,026,500		11,041,523.75
Series G, 1921	Feb. 15, 1921	5½	132,886,500		7,308,757.50
				832,351,500		47,622,981.25
Total				5,947,888,650		307,719,374.62
Average interest rate (per cent)					5.173590037

Statement showing (1) specified items of the public debt as of Jan. 31, 1923, consisting, for the most part, of issues to refund items of the public debt outstanding Feb. 28, 1921, maturing before the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; (2) the issue date; (3) the rate per cent per annum; (4) the principal amount outstanding; and (5) the amount of interest for one year on the principal amount outstanding Jan. 31, 1923, with comparative figures showing the average annual interest rates and the annual reduction in interest charges. (On the basis of daily Treasury statements.)

	Date of issue.	Rate per annum.	Principal amount outstanding.		Interest for 1 year on principal outstanding Jan. 31, 1923.
		Per cent.
Treasury bonds—4¼ per cent Treasury bonds of 1947–1952	Oct. 16, 1922	4¼		$763,915,800		$32,466,421.50
Notes:
Victory Liberty loan—4¼ per cent notes of 1922-23	May 20, 1919	4¼		843,634,500		40,072,638.75
Treasury notes—
Series A, 1924	June 15, 1921	5½	$311,191,600		$17,893,517.00
Series B, 1924	Sept. 15, 1921	5½	390,706,100		21,488,835.50
Series A, 1925	Feb. 1, 1922	4¾	598,384,200		28,423,249.50
Series B, 1925	June 15, 1922	4¾	330,334,800		14,452,147.50
Series C, 1925	Dec. 15, 1922	4¼	448,901,150		20,200,551.75
Series A, 1926	Mar. 15, 1922	4¼	616,769,700		29,296,560.75
Series B, 1926	Aug. 1, 1922	4¼	439,039,900		19,509,195.75
Series A, 1927	Jan. 15, 1923	4½	366,741,435		16,503,364.57
			3,522,068,885		167,767,422.32
Treasury certificates:
Series TM, 1923	Mar. 15, 1922	4½	265,170,000		11,269,725.00
Series TM2, 1923	Dec. 15, 1922	3¾	111,994,500		3,919,807.50
Series TJ, 1923	June 15, 1922	3¾	264,000,000		9,900,000.00
Series TS, 1923	Sept. 15, 1922	3¾	227,000,000		8,512,500.00
Series TD, 1923	Dec. 15, 1922	4	197,230,100		7,889,204.00
				1,065,394,600		41,491,236.50
Total				6,195,013,785		281,797,719.07
Average interest rate.....per cent					4.54878276
Annual interest and average interest rate Feb. 28, 1921, on same classes of the public debt for which the above are refunding issues.....per cent					5.173590037	320,504,615.97
Annual decrease in interest.....per cent					.624807277	38,706,896.90

Statement showing issues of Treasury bonds, Treasury notes, and Treasury certificates of indebtedness between March 1, 1921, and January 31, 1923.

Series.	Date of issue.	Date of maturity.	Rate.	Amount issued.
			Per ct.
Treasury bonds: 4¼ per cent Treasury bonds of 1947–1952	Oct. 16, 1922	Oct. 15, 1952	4¼	$763,962,300
Treasury notes:
A, 1924	June 15, 1921	June 15, 1924	5½	311,191,600
B, 1924	Sept. 15, 1921	Sept. 15, 1924	5½	390,706,100
A, 1925	Feb. 1, 1922	Mar. 15, 1925	4¾	601,599,500
A, 1926	Mar. 15, 1922	Mar. 15, 1926	4¾	617,769,700
B, 1925	June 15, 1922	Dec. 15, 1925	4¼	335,128,200
B, 1926	Aug. 1, 1922	Sept. 15, 1926	4¼	486,938,900
C, 1925	Dec. 15, 1922	June 15, 1925	4¼	469,188,100
A, 1927	Jan. 15, 1923	Dec. 15, 1927	4½	366,982,100
Treasury certificates:
Tax—
TS2, 1921	Mar. 15, 1921	Sept. 15, 1921	5½	193,302,000
TM, 1922	.....do.....	Mar. 15, 1922	5½	288,501,000
TJ, 1922	June 15, 1921	June 15, 1922	5½	314,184,000
TM2, 1922	Aug. 1, 1921	Mar. 15, 1922	5½	116,891,000
TM3, 1922	Sept. 15, 1921	.....do.....	5	124,572,000
TS, 1922	.....do.....	Sept. 15, 1922	5½	182,871,000
TS2, 1922	Nov. 1, 1921	.....do.....	4½	179,691,500
TJ2, 1922	Dec. 15, 1921	June 15, 1922	4½	64,903,000
TD, 1922	.....do.....	Dec. 15, 1922	4½	243,544,000
TM, 1923	Mar. 15, 1922	Mar. 15, 1923	4½	266,250,000
TD2, 1922	June 1, 1922	Dec. 15, 1922	3¾	200,000,000
TJ, 1923	June 15, 1922	June 15, 1923	3¾	273,000,000
TS, 1923	Sept. 15, 1922	Sept. 15, 1923	3¾	227,000,000
TM2, 1923	Dec. 15, 1922	Mar. 15, 1923	3¾	113,744,500
TD, 1923	.....do.....	Dec. 15, 1923	4	197,233,500
Loan—
H, 1921	Apr. 15, 1921	Oct. 15, 1921	5½	190,511,500
A, 1922	May 16, 1921	Feb. 16, 1922	5½	256,170,000
B, 1922	Aug. 1, 1921	Aug. 1, 1922	5½	239,471,500
C, 1922	Nov. 1, 1921	Apr. 1, 1922	4½	51,796,000
D, 1922	Apr. 15, 1922	Oct. 16, 1922	3½	150,000,000

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, apropos of the contention that the British Government is agreeing to pay all it is able to pay in view of its distressed financial conditions, a morning paper carries an interesting item, which I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

COMMONS IN AN UPROAR OVER YORK'S ALLOWANCE—LABORITE WOULD REDUCE £25,000 "WHILE LABOR CLASS IS STARVING."

LONDON, February 15 (by Associated Press).—The House of Commons was plunged into an uproar this afternoon by a suggestion from David Kirkwood, labor member, of the possibility of economizing in the allowance of £25,000 which the Duke of York will receive when he marries Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon in April.

The duke is allowed £10,000 a year, but the chancellor of the exchequer informed Mr. Kirkwood this sum would be increased to £25,000 under an act already passed by the Commons. The laborite then asked whether it was not the case that the Government desired to economize and that the wages of the working classes had been reduced? Kirkwood shouted that this was a glorious opportunity to start economizing at the top, while the labor class was starving. He tried to make further remarks, but was howled down.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In this connection I send to the desk the Statesman's Yearbook for the year 1922, which contains a paragraph showing the burden upon the English people of sustaining the royal house, which I also ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Provision is made for the support of the royal household by the settlement of the civil list soon after the commencement of each reign. (For historical details see Yearbook for 1908, p. 5.) By act of 10 Ed. VII and 1 Geo. V, c. 28 (August 3, 1910), the civil list of the King, after the usual surrender of hereditary revenues, is fixed at £470,000, of which £110,000 is appropriated to the privy purse of the King and Queen, £125,800 for salaries of the royal household and retired allowances, £193,000 for household expenses, £20,000 for works, £13,200 for alms and bounty, and £8,000 remains unappropriated. The same civil list act of 1910 also provides for an annuity of £70,000 to Queen Mary in the event of her surviving the King. Should the Prince of Wales marry, the Princess of Wales will receive an annuity of £10,000, and should she survive the Prince of Wales this annuity will be raised to one of £30,000. Further, there is to be paid to trustees for the benefit of the King's children, other than the Duke of Cornwall, an annual sum of £10,000 in respect of each son, other than the Duke of Cornwall, who attains the age of 21 years, and a further annual sum of £15,000 in respect of each such son who marries, and an annuity of £6,000 in respect of each daughter who attains the age of 21 or marries. The first commissioner of the treasury, the chancellor of the exchequer, and the keeper of the King's privy purse are appointed the royal trustees under this act. Queen Alexandra, the Queen mother, receives the annuity of £70,000 provided by the civil list act of 1901. Civil-list pensions may be granted, but are not chargeable on the sum paid for the civil list. All these payments are charged on the consolidated fund, into which the surrendered hereditary revenues are carried. The King has paid to him the revenues of the duchy of Lancaster, the payments made therefrom in 1920 being £43,000, for His Majesty's use.

On the consolidated fund are charged likewise the following sums allowed to members of the royal family: £25,000 a year to the Duke of Connaught; £6,000 to H. R. H. Helena Augusta Victoria (Princess Christian); £6,000 to Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll); £6,000 to H. R. H. Beatrice Mary Victoria Feodore; £6,000 to the Duchess of Albany; and £6,000 to each of the late King's daughters.

The heir apparent has an income from the revenues of the duchy of Cornwall, the payment in 1920 on his account being £10,000. (Statesman's Yearbook for 1922, p. 4.)

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. There was another item which appeared in last evening's newspapers which is equally interesting, and in some respects more significant so far as this particular measure is concerned. That item states:

BRITAIN IS TO SEEK EASIER TERMS ON WAR DEBT.

LONDON, February 15.—Great Britain will continue to seek more advantageous terms for paying the British war debt to the United States, Chancellor of the Exchequer Stanley Baldwin announced in the House of Commons this afternoon.

Everything now, he said, depends upon Britain's arrangements for redemption.

It would appear that the English Government does not regard this settlement as being final.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for just a moment, that I may read another statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to read another statement in order to show how our European friends find money for other purposes than to pay the interest on their debts to us.

PARIS, February 15 (by Associated Press).—A loan of 400,000,000 francs to Poland was voted by the French Parliament to-day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have no apology to make for being on the side of my own country in this debt settlement with Great Britain. I am now and always have been the friend of Great Britain. I have not said an unkind word against Great Britain. Indeed I have but the kindliest feeling for Great Britain. My first love is my own country and my first duty is to her. I did criticize Stanley Baldwin, a British official, for a statement that he made reflecting on the American Congress and some of the American people. My criticism was provoked by what he said. I was justified in making the criticism, and I have no apology to offer for it.

I come not to condemn Great Britain, but to praise her for the success that she has achieved through the marvelous skill and genius of the master minds that she sent here to perfect a debt settlement with certain innocent, raw, and inexperienced Republican diplomats. Oh, Mr. President, what a thrilling scene it must have been when the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and those under his command met in diplomatic battle the hypnotic eyes, persuasive voices, and overmastering intellects of the trained diplomats of Great Britain. When I saw them emerge from the conflict, having agreed on an interest rate for Great Britain lower than that which our own country is paying for the money she loaned Great Britain, I said, "Alas! alas! we drove the British troops from Kings Mountain; under Washington we whipped our British cousins at Yorktown; but what they did to us in Washington, in battle with General SMOOT and his Republican comrades, is enough to make the angels weep." [Laughter.] It was, indeed, a battle of the giants.

Had I the poetic genius of a Milton or a Homer and desired to hand down to posterity a poem portraying the skill and genius of the world's greatest diplomatic warriors I would sing not of Charles James Fox, Talleyrand, or Jefferson, but I would pause long enough to pour out my soul in praise of General SMOOT, Admiral BURTON, and Commander Mellon. Does any one here doubt the propriety of such a poem? Sir Stanley Baldwin would smile over such a poem until his face fairly ached. Mr. President, if anyone here feels that such praise would be improper and out of place, let him rise up and say so now or forever hereafter hold his peace.

Mr. President, was there ever such a triumph in international diplomacy as that achieved here by those whose praises in the future some poet is sure to sing? When they commenced to give attention to the debt due us by Great Britain they found that Great Britain had already acknowledged the debt by beginning to pay interest upon it; she was paying interest according to the contract, at the rate of 5 per cent; but when they emerged from the debt settlement conference with the British envoys they held aloft, with an air of victory, a white scroll on which was written a proposed settlement of the debt by which we are to receive a less interest rate than Great Britain is now paying, and by which we are to lose $5,530,000,000 under the magnificent settlement program they have submitted.

Not only that, but the interest Great Britain will pay us the first year under this plan at 3 per cent will be approximately $138,000,000; while on the same amount in our American bonds for money that we loaned to Great Britain we will pay, at the rate of 4½ per cent, $195,000,000. That is $57,000,000 more than we will receive from Great Britain on the same amount of money for the same length of time. Oh, Republican diplomacy, was there ever anything in all the annals of Republican stupidity that excelled this piece of remarkable Republican diplomacy?

Mr. President, it takes statesmanship of a high order and diplomacy of a marked and magnificent type to effect a debt settlement with Great Britain by which we borrow money and pay 4½ per cent for it and loan that money to Great Britain at 3 and 3½ per cent. Did you ever think of that, Senators?

Mr. President, those who lived in the day of the statesmen and diplomats of the Old World in the old days never experienced the thrill of joy and pride that comes to us when we contemplate the splendid diplomatic victory that we have just wrung from the superb diplomats and master minds of England. They came here no doubt desiring and expecting to induce us to permit them to pay us the same rate of interest—no more and no less—that we are now paying on the very money that we loaned to them, but when our peculiarly well-trained Republican diplomats waved the magic wand of their mesmeric influence over their stubborn and determined heads they appeared dazed for a moment, and then, remembering that they must submit to superior fulminations, roused themselves as a man from a strange deep sleep and nodded their heads in humble acquiescence to the stern decree that they solemnly obligate themselves to pay to us, the United States of America, not a rate that stood on equality with the proud rate that we paid for the money that we loaned to them, but that they must take their places down the column in the scale of interest rates below that point on which our debt-ridden and overburdened taxpayers stand; and be it said, as it were, to the genius and the glory of our Republican diplomats, the British envoys, without so much as one sign of bitterness or resentment on their faces, accepted the humiliating exactions of our Republican diplomats and acquiesced without one hostile look or gesture in the stipulation that denied them the privilege of paying as much interest on the money they owe us as we are now paying on the money we loaned them. Remembering that we as a country are not yet 150 years old, does not this one triumph in diplomacy over the mother country entitle us to rejoice and be glad, and also to take pride in our new-found Republican diplomats?

Mr. President, this great achievement of Republican diplomacy, through which we are forced to pay a higher rate of interest for the money we loaned to Great Britain than she pays to us for the money she got from us, is something worth considering. It should make us at least enthusiastically exclaim:

We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime.

Now, Mr. President, I want to bring to the attention of the Senate some of the provisions of this bill.

It is not only proposed here to tax the American people the first year for the benefit of Great Britain $57,000,000, but it is proposed to give to Great Britain a lower rate of interest than the interest that our taxpayers must pay on our bonds. That is not the only provision to which I object. There is included in this bill language, cleverly drawn, that seeks to take away from Congress the right to pass its judgment upon any other settlement that these remarkable Republican diplomats may suggest. Here is the language, Mr. President:

and settlements, similar, but not more favorable in terms, with other governments indebted to the United States, as set forth in this section, are hereby authorized to be made, subject to the approval of the President.

Mr. President, I have seen in the last two years the power of the people die day by day under Republican rule. I saw this Republican Congress take out of the hands of Congress the right to levy taxes in the way of a tariff in America. I saw this Senate and a Republican House solemnly give to the President of the United States the taxing power over 100,000,000 people. I saw a Republican Congress lodge in the hands of the Chief Executive the power and the privilege of lifting the taxes or lowering the taxes when Congress was closed and its Members were all at home. Those who framed the Constitution never intended that he should exercise such a power. It is stipulated that the Congress shall have the right to levy these taxes, and that these bills shall originate in the House, in the body that is closest to the people, whose Members must go every two years to renew their commissions. This was done for the purpose of keeping this dangerous thing called the taxing power lodged right in the hands of Congress so that the people to be taxed could have a say in the matter. I saw this Republican Congress take away from itself the right to levy these taxes, as the Constitution provided and intended, and confer upon the Chief Executive the power to raise the taxes of the tariff taxes on American people. And now, Mr. President, I see a bill proposed to turn over the debt settlement of the American people, involving nearly $9,000,000,000, to five Republican partisan diplomats and one Republican Chief Executive. Is Congress impotent? Is it going to surrender its power through this provision of the act?

Let me read it again:

Settlements, similar but not more favorable in terms, with other governments indebted to the United States, as set forth in this section, are hereby authorized to be made, subject to the approval of the President.

Who levies the tariff taxes on the American people? Congress? No; not solely. Who else? The President of the United States. Who loaned this money to the foreign powers? Congress provided for the loan. Who is going to make the settlement? Five partisan Republicans and one Republican President. You take it away from the people who are to pay the taxes, you take it away from the people's Congress, supposed to protect their interests, and lodge it in the hands of a Chief Executive; and these six men are to do as they please next year, in a presidential year, with an indebtedness of nearly $9,000,000,000 owed to the American people. Oh, Mr. President, if the people could but know what is going on in this Congress under Republican rule!

But they tell us that Great Britain is in a terrible condition. Mr. President, I have been reading recently of the glory and the power and the wealth of Great Britain. I have read how the sun never sets on her possessions, and how her drum beats sound around the world. She is a rich, powerful, puissant nation, with her vast interests, her vast wealth, her vast shipping resources. She owns the greatest merchant marine in all the world, and I am proud that she is a wealthy, great, and powerful nation. All this talk about Great Britain being about to break reminds me of what I have experienced as a lawyer, in the years gone, when I practiced law. When some fellow had a pretty hard case, and was trying to get it postponed or continued, he would stand up in the court and submit affidavit after affidavit about the terrible condition at home of some fellow who was a main witness; he could not be there; they were looking for him to die; and as soon as they got the case continued, and the court adjourned, you would see that fellow in a day or two walking around the streets, robust and strong, with no sign of illness about him. But to those who tell us about Great Britain's condition, let me invite their attention to the condition of our own people here at home. What is it?

You are going to give to Great Britain an interest rate of 3 per cent and 3½ per cent. I saw this Republican Senate go upon record as denying to the country bankers—the bankers in the little villages and towns and cities of the country—the merchants, and the farmers a restricted rate of rediscount of 5 per cent at the 12 Federal reserve banks. Then I saw them vote down a similar proposal for 6 per cent. I offered both of the amendments; and I saw this Republican Congress deny to the business men of America restrictions of any kind upon the interest to be charged on the money they must have to carry on their business in order to live at all.

Do you call that friendship for the American people? Listen, you who voted against restricting the rediscount rate even to 6 per cent: You are now going to give to Great Britain, a foreign nation, an interest rate of 3 per cent and 3½ per cent. I favored limiting the rediscount rate at our big Federal reserve banks to 5 per cent. It ought to have been done. I could not get it at 5 per cent, so I said, "Surely they will let us limit it to 6 per cent." But the money lords of America were so powerful that you would not even put it at 6 per cent.

What influence is it that caused this 3 and 3½ per cent rate to be granted to Great Britain when you would not give to our own people a rediscount rate at Federal reserve banks of 5 or even 6 per cent? Is the suggestion of the brave Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] true, that men in New York and other places have bought British bonds that bear 5 per cent, and do they want to continue to clip their coupons at 5 per cent and deny this Government even a rate that takes care of the rate that she herself pays for the money loaned? Who is it? What is it? Where is this influence? That is the question that propounds itself to my mind.

Mr. President, there is another provision here that I want to read. Listen:

> Any payment of interest or of principal may be made—meaning by Great Britain—in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest.

What does that mean? It means that we have to take a $100 bond at $100, with the interest that we agreed to pay of 4¼ per cent. We guarantee that. What did we do for the people of America who bought these bonds? They paid 100 cents on the dollar for them. They went into debt to buy them, to get this money to let Great Britain and other countries have. What did we do for them? Did we guarantee them a price at par? No. Did we guarantee them a price $5 below par? No. Did we see to it that they got a price of not more than $10 below par? No. Did we guarantee them a price of not more than $15 below par or $20 below par? No. You permitted those bonds to sell for $85 on the $100, $80 on the hundred. You drove them out of the hands of the people by deflation. That is how they went out, driven, forced out of the hands of the men and women of the country who were patriotic enough to stint themselves to the limit to buy these bonds to help their Government, to help Great Britain, to help save the liberty of the world; and now we come and do for Great Britain in making the bonds stand at par what we refused to do for the American citizen who bought the bond and helped to save the liberty of the world in the hour of its peril.

Senators, that may be good democracy, but it is not my kind of democracy. I am responsible to my own constituents for my own democracy and for my own conduct, but how am I treating the people of my own country when I vote for a rate of interest that gives to a power that owes us a smaller rate than the taxpayers of my own country have to pay for the money we loaned to that foreign power?

Suppose a guardian were to do that for an orphan child. Suppose the estate had borrowed money and was paying 4¼ per cent, and this guardian were to loan that money at 3 per cent and 3½ per cent. Where is the lawyer who will say that those children, when they became of age, could not recover from him on his bond the difference between 3 and 3½ and the 4¼ per cent? If that is a sound proposition, what right have we—the trustees of the American people, sworn to safeguard their interest, to protect it every day, every hour, all the time—to give Great Britain a lower rate of interest than we ourselves have to pay.

Mr. President, I saw under the reign of the Republican Party this deflation drive that slaughtered business in America. There never was a wholesale crime like it in all history. There never was a crime on such a colossal scale as that. There are men in Wall Street now who made not only millions but hundreds of millions out of that rotten and criminal conspiracy. I fought that; I exposed that, and continued to fight it until we drove from the head of the Federal Reserve Board the man under whose direction that national crime was committed.

I saw them raise the rediscount rate not only to 7 per cent but to 10, 15, 20, and on up to 87½ per cent to the people of America, the people who had borne the brunt of the war, the people who had furnished the sinews in the way of money, people whose sons had spilt their blood on the fields of France. I saw these cruel money lords pull this conspiracy off, using congressional machinery to knock down and rob sixty-odd millions of our people.

I know some people do not like to hear me discuss that, but that does not deter me in the least. I am here to fight as best I can for my own people and for justice to the American people. I do not have to court favor with any foreign power. I try to conduct myself so that I can take a position as I please, governed only by my sense of justice and fair play, and my obligation to my own country. That is my position.

I have had letters concerning some of the villainous little sheets which have assailed the Senator from Tennessee and me for daring to stand up here and speak for our country in discussing this debt settlement with Great Britain. I have had suggestions made to me that British capital owned some of the stock in certain newspapers over here, and I am satisfied it is true. I have a list somewhere in my office, giving the names of newspapers in the United States which are influenced by foreign powers. I want to find it. I think it will be interesting to read, and maybe to put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I think we have come to a pitiful pass, when the whole American press can not stand up and advocate what it believes is right for America, not for Great Britain and other foreign powers, but for our own country. I am not criticizing that part of the press that is American, whole-heartedly. I am not criticizing that part of the press that is honest. I am only criticizing that part of the press that is rotten, which you can buy as you can buy sheep in the market place.

A friend said to me the other day, "Aren't you afraid to attack the press as you do?" I said, "I do not attack the press. I attack only certain portions of the press." He said, "They can do you a heap of harm." I said, "Yes; and I can do them a heap of harm, too"; because 40,000 of these RECORDS go out every day, and I can talk the doctrine into this RECORD, and while I am here as a Senator, I will do my duty as I see it.

I want to comment on this now. Senators, the subsidized portion of the press that infests this Capitol to-day is a constant danger and a menace to the Republic. It never offends a brave and an honest man to condemn a coward and a dishonest man in his presence, and it ought not to offend the honest, brave press, to criticize the dishonest, corrupt portion of the press in their presence. I do not mean to offend a single newspaper man who is not in the corrupt class to which I have referred. I do not intend to lay the charge of wrong doing against a single man who is guiltless, not one; but I owe a duty to my country as I go along and I am trying to perform that duty.

I want to make this further suggestion. No country in all the history of the world ever fell until the press became corrupt and public officials became corrupt. They go together. As long as you have a courageous free press and courageous and incorruptible public officials your Government is planted on a rock and the gates of hell can not prevail against it. It will stand, and the storms of the corruptionists can not shake it, and God Almighty will preserve it; but when your press becomes corrupt and your public officials lose their backbone and begin to court favor with the sinister interests of their country, then the country begins to slide down and down the way other nations have gone as they perished from the earth.

Mr. President, I have not the time to discuss this matter as I wanted to discuss it, but I want to submit some figures to the Senate. We guarantee that these bonds shall be at par so far as Great Britain over the borderland is concerned, but the bond bought by the mother of a soldier, one who died in France, perhaps, may go down to $90 on the hundred, and there is no provision made to hold it up at par for her whose son gave his life for the flag. We make provision, however, to hold the bonds at par for Great Britain, a foreign power, one of the wealthiest nations in all the world.

I repeat, I have but the kindliest feeling for Great Britain. I have kindly feeling for men here in public life, personally, but I do not let my personal friendship keep me from discharging my duty to my country as I see it, and no other man should, because no matter how your failure to discharge your duty to the country comes about you are repsonsible for the evil that comes upon your country.

Let us see what happened in the United States. I am speaking for my own country now as God gives me light to see it. In 1920 there were 3,360,724 holders of registered bonds in the United States. In 1923 there were 2,533,754 of such registered bondholders in the United States, and thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions were never registered. The estimated number of holders of Government bonds, in general, for 1920, was between thirteen and fourteen million. The estimated number of subscribers to our bonds up to 1918 was 22,000,000.

Where are the ten million holders of Government bonds now? Stricken by the wayside, slaughtered under deflation by the bond sharks and big financiers of Wall Street. Where are these bonds? They are lodged in the vaults of Wall Street. What are they worth? They are worth par. What are they drawing on them? Four and a quarter per cent. Who is paying it? The American people. Where do they go to collect the 4¼ per cent? To the Treasury of the United States. They are getting every dollar of it. Here is the debt settlement arrangement proposed which lets Great Britain pay her debt at 3½ per cent.

Mr. President, there is another thought that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate. A provision is lodged in this bill which gives Great Britain the right to defer the payment of half this interest, if she chooses, for the first five years. As I said before, she pays $138,000,000 the first year, provided she wants to pay the full amount of interest, which is $138,000,000, but if she decides not to pay that amount, she will pay only $69,000,000, and then the additional $69,000,000 must be provided by the taxpayers of America, making not $57,000,000 that we lose but $126,500,000 the first year. Have Senators ever considered that phase of this matter?

Mr. Presidnt, the hour of 2 is about to arrive, and I have not time even to go into a full discussion of this matter. I want to do what is best for my own country, for the overburdened taxpayers of my country, and I want to be fair and just to Great Britain, and who can say that we would have been unfair if we had charged Great Britain the same rate of interest which we ourselves pay? Could anybody say we were unfair? No; and Great Britain would not have said it.

Here is a suggestion I want to bring to the attention of the Senate. We specifically instructed the Republican diplomats, five of them, not to agree to a longer period of time than 25 years, did we not? Yes; we did, by an act of Congress. Did we not say that they must not agree on an interest rate lower than that we paid? We did. What did they do? They fell under the hypnotic influence of these splendid, brainy, masterful diplomats of Great Britain and, instead of charging them the same rate that we pay, they emerged from the conflict having given them 3 and 3½ per cent.

Mr. President, here is a fact I want to put into the minds of Senators. Did these envoys or diplomats come back and tell us that they could not follow our instructions? No. Did they tell us that we had restricted them so that they could not carry through the negotiations? No. What did they do? They went through with some sort of a negotiation. Then what? Did they come and submit it, and ask us if we would accept it? No; they pigeonholed it, or held it back from us, until Great Britain's cabinet accepted it, and then they notified us, and the President came before Congress, after Great Britain had accepted a negotiation which violated an act of Congress. Then they came, not asking us merely to approve it, but asking us to surrender the right to have a voice in saying what the other settlements shall be in the future. How can you defend such conduct before the American people? Can you defend it?

Mr. President, what should they have done? They ought to have left that conference and said to British envoys, "Gentlemen, we have instructions. We are acting under a solemn act of Congress. We can not do it. Let us go back and call the Houses together and submit it to Congress, which represents the American people, who furnish this money, and let us see what they will do."

Did they do that? Not once. Could they have done it? Certainly. How far were they from this Capitol? Just a half a mile. Did they come? No. What was done? The whole thing was hugged tight to their hearts. Sh! Sh! Nothing said. The envoys of Great Britain went home, laughing, I suppose, all the way across the sea, and when they got over there and submitted their plan, they said "Well, now, the thing we have to do—pardon us for laughing—the thing we have to do is to make out we are not satisfied with this settlement. Pardon us again for laughing. We must make the American people think we are not satisfied with it, and we must let Stanley Baldwin say, 'The west knows nothing except how to grow grain and hogs; take a little dig at them. Make them think you are mad, and then they will think they have achieved a great diplomatic victory over us, and hug it to their bosoms, and say 'Hurrah for our Republican diplomats.'"

Oh, Mr. President, some talk about markets for American products. I will tell you what will make our food products yield the farmer a living price. Give them money with which to hold them off the market until the price will cover the cost of production plus a profit.

Senators talk about relieving Great Britain. The old settlement was better for her. We are not imposing any burdens upon her. Why, Mr. President, we were letting her go along and pay as best she could, and she was paying according to the contract about 5 per cent, the same amount that her bonds are paying to the bond sharks of Wall Street and the amount that she agreed to pay us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the 10-minute rule goes into effect. The Chair will allow any Senator to speak 10 minutes on any amendment when it is pending and 10 minutes on the bill when there is no amendment pending.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will consume a little more time. They were paying us the same rate of interest—and we were not hurrying them—that they were paying on their own bonds held by the bond sharks of Wall Street. Was that fair? Were we hard on them? Were we hard in imposing over here an interest rate that they themselves had fixed upon their own bonds over there? Can anybody say that we were? Under the old plan, Great Britain could pay along as she pleased. She was doing it. We were not crowding her, and I, for one, if she could convince me that by staying that debt payment for a year or two years it would enable her to pay a better price for our cotton and our corn and our meat, and thus help to bring prosperity to my own country, I would favor such a course. So we who oppose this settlement are not the enemies of Great Britain by any means.

Mr. President, if in the future I should be convinced that Great Britain—this great English-speaking people beyond the sea, for whom I have the greatest love and admiration—needed to have America make such a contribution to aid her in helping to save the liberty of the world and in establishing permanent peace, I would favor that plan. But I want the American people to know who is going to get the benefit over here of such an easy settlement or stay of payments. I do not propose that the bond sharks shall get it. I do not propose that the subsidized newspapers who have sold out and belong, soul and body, to the corrupt and crooked interests shall get it. I have no doubt they will get something. If this settlement goes through, several of them, in my judgment, will get theirs. They will get a nice little hand off on the side.

Now, about the markets and what it will do, I make just this suggestion. It is said it will loosen up things, but how will it? Great Britain owes us this money. She has not paid much on it. She has paid less than $100,000,000, I believe, and the war has been over for five years. Does that look like we have been hard on her? No. Do you know what it was intended to be done by Republican partisans? It was intended to pull off some sort of a deal by which all those were to be canceled. I have said so many times. Do we know what was done? Senator Penrose, as the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] pointed out this morning, introduced a bill in the Senate to turn over to Mr. Mellon, your Secretary of the Treasury, the power to settle all these debts as he saw fit. That announced the program, and that is what was intended to be done.

So those of us who stand here and fight as we think for America and America's side of the controversy may be subject to the foul and villainous attack of those corruptionists who write scurrilous articles for the subsidized press. Two or three of them have written things about me, cowardly and villainous, some of them, and in each instance the fellow who wrote them was what I would call a newspaper pimp or press prostitute. So much for that, and that statement is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for all time to come. That statement has no reference to the many honest newspaper men here and elsewhere. It does not mean the honest boys in the press gallery who are making an honest effort to do the right thing, and doing their duty as they see it. They are clean and honorable men. I know some of them that I would trust with anything. They are as honest as anybody and thoroughly trustworthy. God bless them, what an opportunity they have to serve their country. While they are here in the Capitol they owe it to their country to contribute to the strength and the perpetuity of the Republic, and that is what many of them are doing. But there are some who do not care anything about what happens to the Government; they are time servers that die in a day.

Talk about what the markets will do for cotton! I am for cotton. I have a record of 18 years of service in the two Houses of Congress that speaks for itself regarding my friendship for the cotton producer. No one can make the cotton producer think that I would take a stand that is against his highest and best interests. Great Britain has only paid $100,000,000 in all on the debt; or a little less. I do not remember the exact amount, but it is not much. But now we are tying them up in this debt arrangement where the amount must be stated, after she elects in the five years' time to pay half or not pay it, as she sees fit, and go on for a period of 62 years.

Cotton is bringing about 28 cents. It ought to be bringing 35 cents. Why? Does the law of supply and demand warrant it? Certainly. What are the facts? We have the smallest cotton crop, compared to the number of spindles in operation, that we have ever had. What are we doing in the United States? We consumed more cotton in January just passed than any other month except two times in the history of the Government. Has cotton gone where it ought to under the law of supply and demand? No. Why not? I read the reason the other morning in the headlines of the Washington Post, "Steady hands are operating on the exchange to prevent any wild boom." There you are.

So the steady hands can keep the producer from getting a fair deal. The steady hands can operate and manipulate the international indebtedness to satisfy themselves. Steady hands can help to take away from Congress the single power to levy tariff taxes. Steady hands can give $450,000,000 in profiteers' taxes back to the profiteers, as they did. Steady hands can take $90,000,000 annually off of the big income taxpayers, as you did. Steady hands can pay off $700,000,000 for questionable and crooked war contracts, as you did, and steady hands can wring out of the Treasury maybe $50,000,000 a year for a ship subsidy. But where is the steady hand that will pull to make foreign countries pay at least the interest rate that we pay, and deal with us on a business basis so as to help revive the drooping, aye, prostrate, business spirit of our own country?

In pleading for fair treatment and simple justice to my own country, Mr. President, I have no apology to offer to anybody for asking that my country have a fair deal in the debt settlement now pending before the Senate of the American people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the figures that I received from the Secretary of the Treasury yesterday and put in the RECORD showing what the settlement would have amounted to on a 4¼ per cent basis, as Great Britain has heretofore agreed, tells the whole story of this British debt settlement. These figures show conclusively, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, without any possibility of misunderstanding, that this bill will cancel the British debt to the extent of $1,666,700,000. That is a very large sum; it is more than one-third of the entire amount that Great Britain now owes us. My position is that we have no right to cancel so large a part of this indebtedness.

I take the position that Great Britain is not bankrupt; that Great Britain is perfectly solvent; that her bonds are above par; that her obligations are absolutely good, as good as those of any nation on earth; and that she announced she would pay her indebtedness, and that the only reason she is not paying it in full is because our commission has been led by her commission into making these more than generous terms which the commission has reported.

Mr. President, we are trustees of the American people so far as this indebtedness is concerned. It is not our individual money; it is theirs. We are trustees for them, and we ought to conduct ourselves as trustees. We have no right with a perfectly good and solvent debtor to cancel this debt to the extent of $1,666,700,000.

Mr. President, so that we may form some idea of the magnitude of that portion of the indebtedness of Great Britain which it is proposed to cancel, I call attention to the fact that it is more than the value of our entire cotton crop for 1922, which amounts to $1,192,461,000. It is more than the entire United States coal production for 1921, which was $1,652,288,600. It is more than the total South African diamond production up to 1921, that production being $1,040,626,272. It is almost as much as the value of the entire United States corn crop of 1922, which crop brought $1,801,900,000. It amounts to about two-thirds of all the gold and silver in the United States in 1922, the amount of gold and silver for that year being $4,287,122,887.

These figures show the enormous proportions of that portion of the indebtedness of Great Britain which we are canceling under the bill. It is an absolute cancellation of more than a billion and a half of dollars.

But, Mr. President, it is claimed that some time in the future the United States may be able to refund her bonds at less than the rate of 4¼ per cent, and in that way the amount of our cancellation will be reduced. Mr. President, with all due respect to all who maintain such a position, that is an irridescent dream. Not in the lifetime of the youngest Member of this body, if he lives to be 100 years old, will the rates for an issue of $4,600,000,000 bonds be less than 4¼ per cent; and in my judgment, based upon the opinion of those in whom I have great confidence, I do not believe it will ever during the life of this agreement be less than 4¼ per cent. If these shrewd, able British financiers believed it would ever be less than 3½ per cent at any time, we all know that they never would have agreed to settle at 3½ per cent.

Again, Mr. President, Senators who opposed a soldiers' bonus some time ago very carefully pointed out that the payments from these bonds ought not to be used to pay our soldiers, because in the acts under which these bonds were issued such payments were pledged to the satisfaction of these bonds. Now, many of the Senators who voted against the bonus are perfectly willing to disregard what they then claimed was the provision in the bond acts and are willing to give $1,666,700,000 to Great Britain, this being a part of the same sum that they formerly claimed was pledged to the taking up of American bonds. They can not justify that rate without yielding their former expressed rate.

Mr. President, in my campaign last year in Tennessee I told the people of my State in almost every speech I made that I was opposed to the cancellation of the debts that foreign nations owed us, either in whole or in part. According to my best recollection, I never made that statement that it was not greeted with applause. But however that may be, I told them then that I was opposed to the cancellation, in whole or in part. I was opposed to it then and I am opposed to it now, and under no circumstances will I vote for this bill, which, according to the figures of the Secretary of the Treasury, cancels more than one-third of the indebtedness of Great Briatin to the United States. It is unfair and unjust to the American people. It is especially unfair to the American taxpayer, already overburdened. It is in disregard of the laws we have already passed. It is in utter disregard of the pledge that the Congress made to the American people that these loans to foreign nations would be repaid on exactly the same terms that the American Government had to pay for the money.

Mr. President, that pledge was made during the war; it was made in good faith; we put it on our statute books; and it is a pledge that no man who voted for the law should now violate in the interest of the cancellation to Great Britain of a portion of her debt.

Mr. President, much has been said about Great Britain having to impose heavy taxation. This country also has to impose heavy taxation. When we consider State, county, and municipal governments, as well as our National Government, our taxes are probably quite as large as those of Great Britain. I have not the figures before me, but they show that our present taxes are exceedingly burdensome to our people; and I wish to say that I think before we agree to impose this burden of taxation upon our people we should at least ask Great Britain, a friendly nation, to live up to the obligations she then assumed—the obligations she gave to us for the money used for the defense and safety of her empire.

We have been more than generous to our former ally without this gift of $1,666,700,000.

Mr. President, I wish to say another thing at this point. The securities which we are to receive will be nonnegotiable. Our Government will have no right to negotiate them; we shall have to keep them in our Treasury. They will be no more negotiable than are the notes of Great Britain which we now hold. Talk about being a settlement of the debt! The only actual settlement under this agreement is that we shall reduce the rate of interest from 5 per cent, which England's obligations now bear, to a rate of interest of 3 per cent and 3½ per cent. The new obligations will lack just as much being marketable obligations as the obligations we now hold in the Treasury. These new obligations are to be worded so that they shall certainly not be negotiable. Great Britain has seen to that.

Mr. President, I am going to offer an amendment to the pending bill. On yesterday I received figures from the Secretary of the Treasury showing exactly what the payments would be during the 62 years that the loan is to run if the interest were calculated on a basis of 4¼ per cent. I am going to offer to substitute that rate in lieu of the rate proposed by the pending bill with the following proviso:

Provided, That should the United States at any time be able to refund any of her World War bonds for less than an average rate of 4¼ per cent the United States shall make good to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the amount of any such reduction of interest.

Mr. President, what could be fairer than such a settlement, taking bonds bearing exactly the same rate as that for which we borrowed the money in order to loan it to Great Britain, with the proviso that if in the future we are able to refund our bonds at a smaller rate of interest, Great Britain shall have the benefit of such rate? Great Britain could not in justice object to such a settlement. It would be absolutely fair to her. It would be fair to our own people. It is all right to be generous, but not with other people's money. This is not our money. It belongs to the people of the United States. With a perfectly good and solvent debtor, we violate our trust when we cancel more than one-third of the indebtedness.

Mr. President, we entered into a contract with the people of America, a solemn contract by law, and it is a contract which we ought to observe to the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to print, as a part of my remarks, the amendment which I expect later on to offer to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That the settlement of indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, as follows:

Principal of notes to be refunded		$4,074,818,358.44
Interest accrued and unpaid up to Dec. 15, 1922, at the rate of 4¼ per cent		629,836,106.99
		4,704,654,465.43
Deduct payments made Oct. 16, 1922, and Nov. 15, 1922, with interest at 4¼ per cent thereon to Dec. 15, 1922		100,526,379.69
		4,604,128,085.74
To be paid in cash		4,128,085.74
Total principal of indebtedness as of Dec. 15, 1922, for which British Government bonds are to be issued to the United States Government at par		4,600,000,000.00

"'The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on a fixed schedule. The amount of the first year's installment will be $23,000,000 and these annual installments will increase with due regularity during the life of the bonds until, in the sixty-second year, the amount of the installment will be $175,000,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

"'Interest is to be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rate, on December 15 and June 15 of each year: At the rate of 4¼ per cent per annum payable semiannually until final payment, as shown by the following table of payments:

	Statement of amount of interest payable to the United States on account of the proposed refunding bonds to be issued by Great Britain, money at 4¼ per cent per annum.[1]	Schedule of annual principal installments to be paid on account of principal.[2]	Total interest and principal.
1	$195,500,000	$23,000,000	$218,500,000
2	194,522,500	23,000,000	217,522,500
3	193,545,000	24,000,000	217,545,000
4	192,525,000	25,000,000	217,525,000
5	191,462,500	25,000,000	216,462,500
6	190,400,000	27,000,000	217,400,000
7	189,252,500	27,000,000	216,252,500
8	188,105,000	28,000,000	216,105,000
9	186,915,000	28,000,000	214,915,000
10	185,725,000	30,000,000	215,725,000
11	184,450,000	32,000,000	216,450,000
12	183,090,000	32,000,000	215,090,000
13	181,730,000	32,000,000	213,730,000
14	180,370,000	32,000,000	212,370,000
15	179,010,000	37,000,000	216,010,000
16	177,437,500	37,000,000	214,437,500
17	175,865,000	37,000,000	212,865,000
18	174,292,500	42,000,000	216,292,500
19	172,507,500	42,000,000	214,507,500
20	170,722,500	42,000,000	212,722,500
21	168,937,500	42,000,000	210,937,500
22	167,152,500	46,000,000	213,152,500
23	165,197,500	46,000,000	211,197,500
24	163,242,500	46,000,000	209,242,500
25	161,287,500	51,000,000	212,287,500
26	159,120,000	51,000,000	210,120,000
27	156,952,500	51,000,000	207,952,500
28	154,785,000	53,000,000	207,785,000
29	152,532,500	55,000,000	207,532,500
30	150,195,000	57,000,000	207,195,000
31	147,772,500	60,000,000	207,772,500
32	145,222,500	64,000,000	209,222,500
33	142,502,500	64,000,000	206,502,500
34	139,782,500	64,000,000	203,782,500
35	137,062,500	67,000,000	204,062,500
36	134,215,000	70,000,000	204,215,000
37	131,240,000	72,000,000	203,240,000
38	128,180,000	74,000,000	202,180,000
39	125,035,000	78,000,000	203,035,000
40	121,720,000	78,000,000	199,720,000
41	118,405,000	83,000,000	201,405,000
42	114,877,500	85,000,000	199,877,500
43	111,265,000	89,000,000	200,265,000
44	107,482,500	94,000,000	201,482,500
45	103,487,500	96,000,000	199,487,500
46	99,407,500	100,000,000	199,407,500
47	95,157,500	105,000,000	200,157,500
48	90,695,000	110,000,000	200,695,000
49	86,020,000	114,000,000	200,020,000
50	81,175,000	119,000,000	200,175,000
51	76,117,500	123,000,000	199,117,500
52	70,890,000	127,000,000	197,890,000
53	65,492,500	132,000,000	197,492,500
54	59,882,500	136,000,000	195,882,500
55	54,102,500	141,000,000	195,102,500
56	48,110,000	146,000,000	194,110,000
57	41,905,000	151,000,000	192,905,000
58	35,487,500	156,000,000	191,487,500
59	28,857,500	162,000,000	190,857,500
60	21,972,500	167,000,000	188,972,500
61	14,875,000	175,000,000	189,875,000
62	7,437,500	175,000,000	182,437,500
Total	8,172,665,000	4,600,000,000	12,772,665,000

[1] As furnished by Secretary Mellon.
[2] From page 3544, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

"'Provided, That should the United States at any time be able to refund any of her World War bonds for less than an average rate of 4¼ per cent, the United States shall make good to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the amount of any such reduction of interest.'"

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I can not regard this proposed settlement of the British debt to the United States as a cancellation of the debt, as has been urged by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. There is no cancellation of any part of the principal of the debt, but Great Britain, after an agreement to pay 4¼ per cent interest on the debt up until December 15, 1922, has asked that there be a readjustment which will allow of a lower interest rate from that time on. I do not think that in any of the Liberty loan acts which we have passed we have foreclosed ourselves against readjustment of any of the debts due us by foreign governments, whether it be the British debt, the French debt, the Italian debt, or any other debt.

If the position of the Senator from Tennessee is correct in that regard, we may, in the first place, have entered into an agreement against our own manifest advantage thereafter. I contend that it is to our own advantage, not alone to Great Britain's but to our advantage as well as hers, to refund the debt at the lower rate of interest.

Mr. President, it has been urged that we are sacrificing in making this debt settlement. We will sacrific, it is said, $830,000,000 during the first 10 years after the proposed law shall have been enacted. I doubt that. Let me state why. Of course, we shall be getting over $180,000,000 a year for each of the 62 years during which the loan is to run. There will be a tidy sum flowing into the Treasury of the United States of $185,000,000 or $186,000,000 every year, and in the aggregate and at the end of 62 years Great Britian will have paid nearly three times the present principal of the indebtedness, or over $11,000,000,000.

Eight hundred and thirty million dollars a year loss or sacrifice to the United States! Mr. President, suppose by adhering to the terms of the original understanding or by adhering to the terms of the present law we overburden the British people so that it will be impossible for them to avail themselves of what America wishes to find, namely, a market in Europe for American products. If we put upon the British people, always our best customers, a burden greater than they can bear, the injury will not fall alone on Great Britain, but, as I have said, it will be reflected in British trade and in greatly diminished markets for American wheat, for American cotton, for American foodstuffs, and for American raw materials, and our loss in this respect will, in my humble opinion, far exceed the loss, or sacrifice, as some Senators are free to call it, of $830,000,000 within the first 10 years the loan has to run. So, Mr. President, it is of a positive advantage to us, I think, that we reduce the interest rate to 3 per cent for the first 10 years the loan has to run and to 3½ per cent thereafter.

Think of the time—62 years. Think of the vast sums involved. Think, too, of the times as peace times, and ask yourselves the question as to whether or not 3½ per cent interest is not high enough rate to demand of Great Britain? Within the 10 years, if not now, we shall not have to pay a higher rate for any bonds that we ourselves might want to negotiate than 3 or 3½ per cent.

Mr. President, much has been said about what the people will think of this new agreement and the adjustment now proposed to be made by law, and there was the veiled intimation this morning in the address of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] as to what the people would do to those who supported the bill. We know something now about what the people think through the metropolitan press, first, but we can go beyond the metropolitan press, and I am confident that the country press throughout the United States favors the proposed readjustment. We need not stop with the press, Mr. President. I have here a little communication addressed to me and signed by 21 persons from my own State—and, for the most part, I think the men who signed the statement are farmers—from which it appears that at a little community meeting a short time ago they discussed this question of the adjustment of the British debt and were unanimous in favor of the contemplated adjustment. They are not quite accurate in everything they state in this paper, but it is of such importance and reflects such an excellent spirit that I am going to ask that it be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

MECKLING, S. DAK., February 2, 1923.

DEAR SIR: Believing that our Representatives desire to know the wishes of the home folks, a vote was taken in a community meeting of Meckling Township, Clay County, S. Dak., citizens upon the plan for funding the English debt to us. After discussion it was a unanimous vote of the undersigned that the debt-funding law should be changed, and that 3 per cent for three years, and 3½ per cent after that till paid is just. Not all of us love English individuals, but all do admire the bull-dog grit and the unwavering determination to pay which that nation has shown. Give our friends over there the friendly American hand and the wise suggestion that they put the toe of their boot to booze. They helped us abolish slavery, let's help them shake off a worse enemy.

E. E. COLLINS
(And 20 others).

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word further in conclusion.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator was correct when he said they were in error as to some of the facts.

Mr. STERLING. The one fact concerning which they are in error is that in regard to the time the 3 per cent interest rate would run.

Mr. BORAH. That was not what I had in mind.

Mr. STERLING. Well, they are not so much in error in regard to the other fact to which the Senator, I know, has reference, as he perhaps at first blush imagines, and I hope he will look into that.

Mr. BORAH. Not at first blush, but after considerable blushing. [Laughter.]

Mr. STERLING. Well, the Senator may blush again when he examines the subject further and ascertains all the facts.

Mr. President, I think a settlement of this kind with Great Britain under these circumstances will have a splendid effect with reference to other foreign debts which are owed to the United States. It will inspire our other foreign debtors with the belief that this great Government of ours is disposed to be fair and just and generous, and, being so inspired, they will redouble their efforts to bring about the day when they can enter into a similar agreement and have a similar understanding as to the time within which they may pay their debts. I believe that France—brave, gallant, as she is—wishes to be true to her obligations, and will want to pay her great debt to the United States. We appreciate her position now and realize that under existing conditions she is not prepared to enter into negotiations for a readjustment of the debt she owes us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from South Dakota has expired.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

S. 2531. An act to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 3169. An act to equalize pensions of retired policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

POSITIONS IN UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement as of February 1, 1923, indicating the total number of positions at a rate of $2,000 or more per annum, the rate of salary attached to each position, and the number of positions at each rate in the central office; also the corresponding information as of January 1, 1923, for the district and subdistrict offices, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion upon this bill. I have read and reread the bill; and in the light of the facts surrounding the transaction I am impressed with the view that it is entirely a one-sided contract, all in favor of Great Britain, and that the interests of the American people have not been safeguarded in the proposal.

This money was borrowed by Great Britain with an express agreement that that nation was to pay the American Government 4½ per cent interest, and that when any new arrangements were made the British Government would pay the American Government the amount of interest that America was required to pay in order to readjust the bonded indebtedness of America. When Great Britain comes to America and asks for a change of the terms so as to reduce the rate of interest from 4½ per cent to 3 per cent for the first 10 years, and 3½ per cent for the remainder of the period, Great Britain asks for a change and a modification of its contract prior to the occurrence of the condition precedent for a reduction of interest, the condition precedent being that America shall float bonds at a lower rate of interest.

We are to-day paying 4½ per cent interest per annum on the $4,600,000,000 which Great Britain now seeks to have this Government allow her to continue to use, for an extended period of time, at 3 per cent for a period of 10 years, and 3½ per cent for the remainder of the period, up to 62 years.

Of course, if we say that we want to do some little friendly act to Great Britain and reduce that rate of interest, which will amount the first year to something over $57,000,000, then of course we can do it. My idea of the matter is that we should endeavor to obtain the present rate of interest until our bonds can be floated at a reduced rate of interest, and that the Congress should not say to the American people: "In order to adjust this matter with Great Britain we are going to reduce her obligation to the United States $57,000,000 in interest alone for the first year, and transfer the burden to you for that amount." The American people have some interest at stake. They are the ones who are to bear the burden, and it means an increase of the taxes of the American people to the extent of $57,000,000 and odd the very first year.

I can not quite understand why we should make any such reduction. There has been no change of conditions. In my opinion, there is nothing to justify this Government in reducing the interest or the amount that Great Britain is to pay us on account of the obligations assumed during the war.

There is talk to the effect that interest rates may be less in the future. If that is true, under the provisions of the act now in force, had we fixed the rate as it is under the existing contract, then Great Britain could have enjoyed the advantage of that reduced rate of interest by floating her bonds at the reduced rate of interest; but instead of that, upon a contingency, upon guesswork, upon a probability that may not occur, we start out in the very beginning to make a reduction of interest from 4½ to 3 per cent, amounting to $57,000,000 a year. We fought here for a week on the question of whether or not we should make an appropriation of $56,000,000 to carry on our river and harbor improvements for a year. Many of the distinguished Senators opposing it said that such appropriation should not be made, that it was too much of an expenditure. When it came to a question of expressing substantially the Nation's gratitude to its soldiers who won the day, who defended the country's liberty and rescued not only America but the entire world from the threatened military dominance of Germany, Senators stood here upon this floor and said: "Why, you will wreck the finances of the Government if you pass a bill appropriating fifty or sixty million dollars a year to pay the soldiers' adjusted compensation." The Secretary of the Treasury, who was a member of the commission that is recommending this settlement in which, unless there is a change in the rate of interest, America will lose over a billion dollars, sent a letter to Congress saying, "You can not do it, because the finances of the country will not stand any such adjusted compensation." The President of the United States set himself up in opposition to it. Now they both favor a proposition which will mean an increase in taxation to the American people of more than $50,000,000 a year in order to make a settlement with Great Britain and to make a reduction in her obligation to this country.

I think the contract should be made upon the basis proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]. Under that proposal, if we are able to float our bonds at a less rate of interest, then Great Britain will participate in that reduction, and that is proper. That is a perfectly fair proposition.

I never knew a party to an individual transaction, when he found that he was not able to pay according to the time specified, to try to get reductions and reductions. He might ask for an extension of time, and no one objects to giving an extension of time; but the proposal before us now involves a donation, under the financial conditions as they exist to-day in this country, of something over one and one-half billion dollars to the British Government; and that more than one and one-half billion dollars, whether it is to be paid out in 10 years, in two decades, or in 62 years, becomes a burden upon the American people, and will have to be provided by taxing the American people.

I think, Mr. President, that it is the duty of those in positions of responsibility in this country to guard the interests of the American people as zealously as those representing Great Britain have guarded her interests, and in this particular instance, in my opinion, have succeeded in bringing about the proposal of a contract which is largely one sided and in the interest of Great Britain, and, upon the other hand, to the detriment of the American people, because they untimately have to bear the burden. I have always felt that those in positions of responsibility and trust, representing the people, have no right to be generous at the expense of the taxpayers whom they represent. I feel that it is our duty to insist upon the contract being performed by Great Britain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, have I occupied 10 minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Can I consume 10 minutes on the bill now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announced that a Senator can speak 10 minutes on an amendment that is pending, and 10 minutes on the bill when no amendment is pending. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I always favor settlement, and when this matter was first proposed I felt that we and the world were making progress by bringing about a settlement of this debt between Great Britain and the United States. I felt that to do so would stabilize conditions, would help our trade, and that a magnificent example would be set to the other nations of the world to proceed to pay what they owed and put their houses in order; but, Mr. President, I must say that I am a little disappointed in the terms of this settlement. It occurs to me that it would have been much better to have insisted upon at least the same rate of interest that we are paying for money.

The statement that this money was expended in the United States has no force with me. To calculate the amount that Great Britain will pay during the 62 years seems to me to be childish. Money is worthy of its hire. The debt is due, and if the debtor does not want to pay interest he has the privilege of paying the principal and not paying interest; so it is simply silly to produce a great string of figures about the amount that we will have received at the end of 62 years. There is no business in that and no common sense in it, to my mind.

I am also disappointed, Mr. President, in these bonds not being strictly negotiable. There is a great deal of force in the argument of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] on this point. It is true, perhaps, that to-day there would not be a market for these bonds, but no one can tell what world conditions will be 10 or 20 years hence. If anyone had predicted along in 1910 that the United States to-day would have in its vaults about half the gold of the world, no one would have believed it. Instead of being a debtor nation, we have become a creditor nation. My experience in life has taught me that the best time to make a settlement is at the time the transaction is entered into. It is always a bad plan to lend money without security and then to be uneasy during the life of the loan. The proper time to settle it is at the time the money is transferred, or, in this case, now, before we make this extension, instead of wanting to kick ourselves for the next 62 years, feeling mean, feeling that we have been overreached a little, or something of that sort. After we shall have made the settlement it will be too late to complain, and it is not sportsmanlike to complain, anyway. Therefore, Mr. President, I very much wish our representatives had insisted upon a rate of interest equal to that which we are paying now.

In one sense this money does not belong to the United States Government. The Government has not a dollar except what it takes from its citizens by taxation or what it receives from selling its bonds. Money is borrowed from the people. We appealed to the citizens of the United States to lend us money to lend to other countries, and we assured them that the Government would receive a rate of interest equal to that which it paid for the money, and I say that I feel a humiliation that we are not to fulfill that promise.

Furthermore, Mr. President, it is not necessary to talk about our good feeling toward England or toward France or toward any other country. In fact, every gentleman ought to feel well toward everybody else. I have no particular ill will and no particular love, myself, toward those countries. No doubt they did their duty and we did our duty, and we did it liberally and promptly. We did more than our duty. Neither do I believe in buying trade or buying friendship. Any friendship you can buy is not worth the price. That does not appeal to me. England and the other countries are not going to trade with us unless it is to their interest to do so. This is not a question of friendship.

I wish these bonds were strictly negotiable, therefore, so that the United States could sell them to investors of the world and that we could get out of the transaction, so that we could take that money and reduce our obligations. It is a pretty miserable feeling to be in debt. I have felt miserable a good many times along that line individually, and I am a little sorry for my Government when it has to borrow money, and I know that the taxpayers feel badly. The burdens are more than a great many of them can bear. No wonder the people are trying to put their wealth into nontaxable securities, because we go ahead and tax the people most liberally.

I feel that these other nations ought to begin to curtail expenses. I am not going into detail about how it ought to be done, because that would be arrogating too much to myself; but when they are spending our money, I believe that their citizens should not be treated any better than our citizens, and I hope the day will come when they will curtail expenditures and levy taxes to make ends meet, pay what they owe us, and let us pay our debts. There is not much use in somebody else owing us and our owing someone else. We ought to collect, settle, and cancel. The cancellation of obligations helps bookkeeping.

Not only that, but I think it is time our commission was hinting to the other countries of the world that we would like to have them get busy and bring in at least a part of what they owe us and arrange the balance. If they can not pay in full, let them pay something, and let us take care of the interests of the people of the United States.

I have not studied the amendments which have been offered, but I shall vote for some amendments along the lines I have mentioned. On the whole, I will vote for the bill because I believe that if we do not get a settlement now there may be a good deal of uncertainty about the kind of settlement we might get later; and for the sake of stabilizing conditions in the world and of improving our markets I trust the bill will pass in amended form.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, nearly all the Senators opposing this bill insist that England should pay according to the letter of the contract. I wonder if all Senators who are taking that position with reference to England will take the same position with reference to all the other foreign nations indebted to us. I wonder if all those Senators will insist that to Germany shall be applied the same rule as they want applied to England. Germany owes us more than $200,000,000, and I wonder if they will insist that the same demand be made of Germany. Poland owes us over $120,000,000. I wonder if the same demand will be made with reference to the indebtedness of Poland.

I do not believe that foreign nations who are indebted to us are in any position to urge that we should be more liberal or generous in our terms to them because of any benefits which may have accrued to us by reason of those loans, but I do believe that is a proper consideration for us ourselves to reflect upon. If these loans had not been made, what would have been the position of the United States? We were already engaged in the war. If we had not made this loan to Great Britain of something over $4,000,000,000, Great Britain would not have been able to maintain her armies on the soil of France as she did. They would have been compelled to retire, to an extent at least; the war would have been prolonged; more American lives would have been sacrificed; and it would have cost us more money, not in the way of loans to our allies, but outright expenditures to carry on the war for a longer period than it became necessary to carry it on.

With reference to the expenditure, it has been sought to be shown that munition makers were the only beneficiaries of this expenditure. Mr. President, every farmer, every laboring man, in the United States got the benefit of these loans. Two dollar and twenty cent wheat has been spoken of. If it had not been for these loans of $11,000,000,000 to our allies, wheat would not have been $2.20, but it would have been down to $1 inside of six months.

But I do not base my support of this bill upon that consideration to any great extent. I support the bill because if there is to be stability and peace in Europe there must be readjustment of indebtedness between the different nations of Europe, and if the United States is to start with the proposition that every indebtedness shall be lived up to according to the letter of the contract, that there is to be no liberalizing of terms, then we may not look for peace in Europe next year or the year after, or perhaps for a decade to come.

Will the same gentlemen who are insisting upon the letter of the contract likewise insist that Germany shall pay to the last dollar provided in the Versailles treaty? Do they? What right have we to insist that the Versailles treaty shall not be carried out to the very letter if we are going to insist that the technical contract made upon our behalf shall be carried out to the last letter, without any liberalization of the terms?

Mr. President, under this settlement there is no forgiveness of a dollar of the debt, no cancellation of a penny of the debt. There is some liberalization in the matter of the rate of interest, and that is all; but it is a very good example for the United States to set to Europe. If we demand of England the last penny, will not England demand of France the last penny, and will not France demand of Germany the last penny? How is any economic reconstruction of Europe possible under such a theory?

This is a contract freely entered into on the part of England, if we shall assent to it, that contains liberal terms. The parties have agreed upon it, and if this be now ratified this afternoon, as I hope it will be, I think we may look forward to the other nations of Europe getting together in mutual accord upon their indebtedness as between each other, and we will have gone a long way, by the passage of this bill, toward bringing about stability and peace in Europe.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] referred to a matter which has been uppermost in my mind from the beginning with reference to this settlement, and that is the fact that there are those who are unwilling that Germany should be relieved from any part of her indebtedness, and the question is asked, if we insist upon the full amount of our debt, shall not the nations interested in the collection of the debt from Germany insist upon the full amount which Germany owes?

If Senators will turn that about, it presents the very proposition which has disturbed my mind concerning this settlement. If this settlement, or any other settlement which we could make, would lead to an amelioration of the terms which are being imposed upon Germany, and thereby give an opportunity, possibly, for Europe to recover, I should vote for this bill with a great deal of pleasure. If I thought that this precedent established here, what is called a liberal settlement, would have a particle of effect of leading to the adoption of a more liberal policy toward Germany upon the part of England, or upon the part of France particularly, I should see my way clear to vote for the bill, and I would feel that I was doing the American people a distinct favor, both from a humanitarian standpoint and from an economic standpoint, in doing so. But so long as the present policies in Europe obtain with reference to reparations and with reference to the collections from Germany, the forgiving of the amount of interest which we are forgiving in this instance will not have the slightest effect, in my humble opinion, in stabilizing anything in Europe or in opening any of the markets of Europe. In other words, the Allies are now undertaking in Germany to collect by sheer force the amount which Germany owes, and that policy will negative and absolutely destroy any effort we may make toward stabilizing Europe if the policy is to be continued.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] said that England was one of our best purchasers; but it must be self-evident that if the conditions continue in Europe for the next year as they have been for the last six months, or for the last two months particularly, England will not by reason of this settlement be in a position to purchase anything of moment from the United States above that which she must actually have in order to live. Indeed, sir, if the present program is continued, Europe will go down, and this settlement will have no more effect in bringing relief to suffering humanity, no more effect in opening up markets than if these I O U's were lying up here in the Treasury. The causes of our troubles lie deeper than debts; they rest in the hideous inhuman policies which are now heaping misery upon a whole continent.

Why are $110,000,000 being expended in England to-day as a dole to the unemployed? It is because England's market upon the Continent has gone to pieces. It is because the economic conditions upon the Continent are such that there is no occasion for the employment of her men in her industries. She has no market. The mere acquittal of $40,000,000 a year in the way of interest, with the markets of Europe closed and with her unemployment continuing, will neither give us nor England any markets.

So I say, Mr. President, if this matter of the indebtedness could have been considered in connection with this very proposition which the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested, it would have presented altogether a different matter for our consideration. We know that the invasion of the Ruhr, considered, now, not from the standpoint of whether France had a right to go in or not, for that can be debated upon another day, but considered from the standpoint of world peace or the restoration of economic conditions in Europe, has been utterly disastrous of all which was promised or expected upon the part of the French people.

Instead of it benefiting the French people themselves, bread has gone higher and grown more scarce, taxes have necessarily been increased, expenditures have been increased, the franc has gone down, coal has not come out, and hunger is more nearly at the door of France to-day by reason of it than it has been at any time since the signing of the armistice.

Not only, therefore, have they punished Germany and disordered and demoralized the possible recovery of Germany, but they are bringing disaster and demoralization to France herself. If that policy is to continue, what are we to gain by the mere forgiving of a small amount of interest? It is by reason of the policy which is being pursued that, to my mind, makes this a more difficult problem to solve, so far as we are concerned. In other words, if conditions could be changed or would be changed so that the masses of England or the masses of Europe or the people who are hungering and dying in Europe would get the benefit, who would withhold his vote for a moment against our forgiving of the indebtedness as here provided? If it would tend to restore the markets of Europe so our own people would get the benefit of it, who would withhold his vote for a moment? But if the policies are to be continued, we know that that is not to be the result, either from a humanitarian standpoint or from an economic standpoint.

Every dollar of the forgiveness will ultimately find its way, not into the mouths of the hungry of Europe, but into the military coffers of Europe. Only a few days ago France loaned 400,000,000 francs to Poland for the purpose of maintaining her army. By reason of her invasion of the Ruhr, every army in Europe is either actually or potentially being mobilized. The benefit which might flow from this money would eventually find its way in augmenting those conditions rather than in diminishing them. So long as that condition continues in Europe, England will and can do nothing else, in my humble opinion, than to increase her naval strength and to increase her army. What the American taxpayer is being asked to do is in fact to underwrite, or in a sense strengthen, the militaristic and the imperialistic policies which now obtain in Europe. This money will not find its way to those whom we here to-day would like to help.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BORAH. I will wait until another amendment is offered to conclude.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I would like to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that the same administration which has presented to us the proposition that we should loan money to Great Britain at 3 per cent at a time when we are paying 4½ per cent to get the money, the same administration which has made the proposition to Congress that we borrow the money at one rate and loan it at a lower rate, was entirely silent when France last month made an invasion of Germany and practically began a new war.

There was a psychological moment when this country, represented by its administration, could have made a legitimate protest against that step which threatens to wreck not only Germany but France and demoralize all continental Europe. But the same administration which has now proposed to load upon the American people $57,000,000 a year by giving to Great Britain a rate of interest lower than that for which we can borrow money, lower than that for which we are borrowing money, was apparently silent and impotent when the great opportunity came for the United States, in the name of stabilizing the world and in the interest of peace, to protest against the folly which France has committed and which may cost her almost as much economically as it will cost Germany.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin said that we should not exact the pound of flesh from Great Britain. I agree with him. Congress agrees with him. It was nominated in the bond that Great Britain, when she borrowed this amount of money of us, should pay 5 per cent interest. That is the obligation as it stands. But last year the Congress of the United States voluntarily reduced that rate of interest to 4½ per cent, a rate lower than that for which Great Britain can borrow anywhere else in the world.

Now, what is the English view of the situation? I hold in my hand a recent copy of the London Times, weekly edition, and here is a frank, honest statement from that great newspaper:

> The facts of the case are by this time beyond dispute. Britain borrowed from the American Government during the war period a capital sum which now stands at £851,000,000. The debt is repayable on demand and carries 5 per cent interest. The bond of indebtedness lays upon this country the obligation to fund it, when requested to do so, at 5 per cent. In 1919 a general understanding, which, however, did not take the form of a written agreement, was reached among the Allies that no payment of interest should be demanded until 1922.

Then the editorial goes on to discuss the unpaid interest. Now, Mr. President, here we have a statement, a bold, honest, just statement, that Great Britain borrowed of us that great sum of money and agreed to pay 5 per cent interest on it. The Government of the United States, by an act of Congress one year ago, has voluntarily reduced that rate of interest to 4½ per cent. Why was it named at 4½ per cent? It was because it was estimated that approximately that was the rate of interest which the United States is paying for money now, and having gained a lower rate of interest, Congress, in its justice and in its generosity, thought we should accord it to Great Britain. I thought so then. I think so now.

I shall offer an amendment which proposes that the great sum of money which Great Britain owes us shall be represented by an obligation in the Treasury of the United States, and that the rate of interest upon it shall agree with the rate of interest that the United States is compelled to pay from year to year on borrowed money. It may be 4½ per cent this year. Ten years from now it may be 4 per cent or 3.75. But, whatever it is, Great Britain should pay it. The Senator from Wisconsin took the position that we owe in friendship something to Great Britain, something to the fact that we were in a great adventure together. But suppose I should approach the Senator from Wisconsin and say, "Senator, I want to borrow $5,000."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at the moment.

And the Senator from Wisconsin would say, "I have to borrow the money to loan to you." "Very well," I would say, "you borrow the money and I will pay you not only the principal, but what interest you have to pay on it." Would it then be a reasonable thing for me to demand of him, after he had borrowed the $5,000 at 5 per cent, and has to pay that rate of interest on it, that he let me have it for 3 per cent interest?

The just and generous thing for the United States to do is to put in the bond now that Great Britain shall pay us the same rate of interest that we are compelled to pay in borrowing money from now on. We can be generous enough to give to Great Britain the high credit which our country enjoys. We can say to Great Britain, "We will allow this loan to remain as long as you want it and only charge you exactly the amount of interest that we are compelled to pay from year to year for the credit." That would be generous to Great Britain and just to the American taxpayer, and nothing else would be just to the American taxpayer, although it might be overgenerous to Great Britain.

So I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that, having voluntarily cut off three-quarters of 1 per cent interest, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars in the aggregate, it is preposterous now to ask us to sacrifice $1,666,000,000 more during the next 62 years in allowing a loan to remain at one rate of interest while we are paying a greater rate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in the few minutes available I do not propose to discuss the details of the measure. I do wish to state very briefly my reason for opposing the passage of the bill. I shall not discuss the partisan character of the composition of the commission which negotiated with our debtor. I shall not discuss the haste with which this most important legislation is being rushed through Congress. I shall not discuss the absence of information. I shall not discuss the details in the measure which may increase the financial burdens of the American people more than what appear on the surface of this measure. It is to no purpose to discuss the particular terms of this bill or the various details concerning it. Much on these points has already been said, especially those features of it which indicate possible future disadvantage to the finances of our country.

We are imposing upon our people an additional war debt of $1,666,000,000 four years after the termination of the war. We are canceling part of the debt of one of our allies in the late war and adding that debt to our own staggering indebtedness. In a word, this bill is a measure to shift a debt of $1,666,000,000 from the taxpayers of Great Britain to the taxpayers of America. It is a bill to levy an additional tax upon our people of $1,666,000,000. Are not the war-tax burdens of our people sufficient? Are not the obligations which they assumed ample, without this additional legislation fastened at this time?

Who is asking for the refunding of this debt? Who is to benefit by the adjustment of this obligation at this time? The English Government did not ask to have this debt refunded. The initiative was taken by the American Government; in fact, the British Government never asked to have one dollar subtracted from its debt. Nowhere is there a petition or a request from the British Government that their former contract be altered or modified. The evidence before the Finance Committee is that the first proposition presented to the British Government was by the American debt commission for a rate of 3½ per cent, without even a request from our debtor that the reduction in the interest rate be made.

Whom is this legislation to benefit? Surely not the American people, who are to bear the burden of this additional debt of $1,666,000,000. This amount is but the minimum estimate. One actuary from the New York Life Insurance Co. estimates by a method of compounding interest that the real gift of the American people to the British Government on this settlement is the enormous sum of $27,000,000,000. I do not, however, vouch for this estimate. It is evidently a method of computing the value of this gift based on the use of this money by compounding the interest.

Mr. President, Great Britain has a right to urge and expect one, and only one, modification of this debt—the fixing of a rate of interest on her indebtedness equal to that paid by our Government on the money she borrowed from her citizens to loan Great Britain. That rate to-day is far in excess of 3½ per cent, and that is why this is not the time to change or refund this debt.

Mr. President, there is one class of American citizens who will benefit by this partial cancellation of Great Britain's obligations to the United States. It is the class who have been behind the agitation for the refunding of this debt; the class of American citizens who have private debts to collect in Great Britain and other countries of Europe; the class of American citizens who will now find the financial atmosphere of Europe cleared by having, so far as Great Britain is concerned, the American debt fixed and postponed 62 years for final payment. It is the international bankers in America who benefit by this legislation.

It is contended that the settlement of this debt will stabilize—tend to stabilize is their expression—the finances of the world and bring about the economic equilibrium of the world. Will the rate of 3½ per cent stabilize the finances of the world better than would a rate of 2 or 2½ per cent—better than would the cancellation of the debt itself? Senators will have great difficulty when the American taxpayer looks at this question from the standpoint of his tax bill to explain to him the increase in his taxes by stating that the change of the interest rate on this loan by reducing it by 1 per cent will stabilize the finances of the whole world.

Oh, it is said, we must be generous. To give of another's money is not generosity. It is not right; it is not just; it is not honest. The money is not our money, but is the money of the American people. We are but trustees. This bill is a proposition to extract from the pockets of the American people an enormous sum of money and to give it to the British people. Yes; it is easy to be generous with other people's money. I refuse, without the people's voice being heard, to give away their money. I repeat, the only two arguments which are made in its favor are, first, that it will tend to stabilize the finances of the world, and, second, that we should be generous—generous with other people's money. Let us see how generous the beneficiary of this gift has been. Let us see what she has done to stabilize the finances of the world. I have before me a memorandum of an agreement made by Great Britain with Persia in which she exacted an interest of 7 per cent on a loan of $10,000,000. It comments upon a bipartite agreement between the British and Persian Governments that was entered into on August 15, 1919. Under this agreement "expert advisers" are to be furnished the Persian administrative departments at Persian expense. British munitions and equipment were to be utilized under British officers in building up a Persian military and police force. British money was to be loaned on security of the customs and telegraph receipts, and the amount of the first loan was $10,000,00, bearing interest at 7 per cent.

I have also before me a news clipping which shows what Great Britain exacted from France and from Italy when she loaned those allies sums of money during the war. Let me read this memorandum, which is an editorial from one of our American newspapers:

WHO ARE THE SHYLOCKS?

France and Italy deposited nearly 2,000,000,000 gold francs—worth as much now as ever—in London banks when they borrowed money from England during the war. England required that money as security for the loans. Now England tells France it [England] may take that money. That arouses French ire. The fact is that the money has probably been seized already. Bonar Law says it has been sent to America, inferring that we had pressed England to pay and that it had been forced to use the deposit. Of course that is not the case. This country has asked none of its debtors to pay, and the inference Europe has drawn from Bonar Law's statement is misleading.

Why are we Shylocks of the world, let Europe tell us, but we are not as cold, calculating, or as cautious, apparently, as England. When it made loans it called for gold security. Not so with us. We opened wide our Treasury to England, France, Italy, Belgium, and others and took in return their unsecured notes. In fact, we got hardly that. They simply gave us a memorandum that the money would be returned some day and that they would proceed after the war to say in what way and how it should be returned. Shylocks, it will be observed, do not act that way. They take security for their loans and exact their pound of flesh upon failure to pay.

Nothing has been more striking than the revelation that England required gold security for its war-time loans, while the United States did not. If there is any fairness in Europe, it can not fail to be impressed by this difference in methods. But Europe does not condemn England, even when it seizes the gold left with it for security and thereby depletes by one-third the reserve of the Bank of France. If we had done anything like that, imagine the outcry. We have not even asked our debtors to pay. We have simply suggested that they consider what they can do in the course of the next 25 years. But they do not consider that. They insist that we wipe out the debt. England has remarked that it will forgive its debtors if we forgive it. But England has been careful to see that it had its hands on nearly 2,000,000,000 gold francs; it has a partial payment anyway. Perhaps if we were more nearly Shylocks we should command greater respect abroad. (Aberdeen (Wash.) World.)

But why prolong this line of argument? What evidence has been presented here as to the present financial resources and assets and as to the possible future assets of our debtor? What right have we to discount or cancel in part the assets, the credits, of our people without knowledge not only of the existing conditions of Great Britain's finances but of all her possible future assets? The only evidence is that now, at this hour, it is hard and difficult for Great Britain to raise the necessary ready money in order to meet the terms of this debt contract. Who ever heard of bank directors settling debts based on present ability to pay rather than the debtor's resources and assets?

Mr. President, there is no need of refunding this debt now. It should not be refunded at this time. The American people have not asked that it be refunded. They are not Shylocks; they do not demand this money, or even the interest due. They were willing to let it go four years, and it should have gone for 10 years if necessary, letting these debtor countries pay as they can.

The after-the-war financial atmosphere ought to have been cleared. We ought to wait until our debtors get back to production. We ought to have settled this debt in the light of peace and prosperity and not when the dark clouds of war envelop us. The time for our Government to move was not when our debtor nations have reached the low-water mark of their finances. Its refunding now is being brought about by the sinister influence in this country of those who are looking after their own interests and not the interests of the American people. We should be serving the American people better if we should let this indebtedness stand as a valuable asset, to be collected on some future occasion when it would equally be advantageous to the American and British peoples.

Let those that have been preaching economy, renouncing tax exemption, reducing Government employees, fighting to reduce appropriation bills, and in various ways seeking to lower taxation pause and realize what their vote upon this measure means. In one fell swoop your efforts at economy are reduced to nil, for your vote on this measure is nothing more or less than to increase the war-tax burdens of our people. What right have you to deal with this matter, because it happens to be a war debt, any different than if it were a peace-time loan? Where is your mandate from the people to levy this burden upon them? In what election did you submit this question to the voters? No one here would advocate before election this bill and expect to be elected to give away this enormous sum of money that belongs to our people.

Mr. President, this asset, one of the most valuable which the American people have, is being converted by this proposed law into a possible liability, the magnitude of which no man can now conceive with definiteness. International complications arise more frequently out of financial dealings and agreements than any other cause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I come from an agricultural State, the greater part of whose interests are bound up in the prosperity of the farmer. We have all said that for four years the farmer has suffered a tremendous loss because he has had no foreign market. The farmer is dependent upon a foreign market. The excess of the commodities which he produces must be sold. We can not increase the consumption ability of the people of this country or we have not been able to do so; and therefore the farmer has been suffering tremendously each year because he had no foreign market for his products. We can have no foreign market until conditions in Europe are stabilized, and they can never be stabilized until there shall be a beginning. The way is not long to peace when contending nations once decide to negotiate peace; the way is not long to economic reconstruction whenever the peoples of the world shall set their faces toward reconstruction. The great trouble is a beginning. The European war could have ended much sooner if nations could have made a beginning to attain peace. Economic reconstruction could have come much earlier if a beginning could have been made. At least the proposed settlement is a beginning.

I do not think that anybody contends that it is such a settlement as he approves in every particular; I do not. I do not think it is the best possible settlement that could have been made. I do know, however, Mr. President, it is the only settlement that is here before the Senate; it is the only one that will or can be before this Congress in a year. If it is rejected, I know that the American farmers for at least 12 months more must have the same chaotic conditions confront them which now confront them, if, in fact, they shall not grow worse.

I sympathize with those Senators who say that the interest rate is low, too low; and yet I am sure as I am of anything that if every dollar of our foreign indebtedness had been canceled in November, 1918, and every dollar of this foreign debt had been levied upon the agricultural interests of America, they could have paid it and been richer to-day than they now are, provided Europe had become a normal consumer of American products.

It may be said that better economic conditions are going to come about whether we accept this agreement or not. I say they have not come about, and therefore it is for you who oppose this plan to show that they will come. You can not do it. I therefore must act on conditions which now exist.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], of whom I am very fond, said that this proposed settlement amounts to giving away $58,000,000 of American money, and he read from the London Times what he characterized as a frank and manly statement of the contract betwten the British Empire and the American people—that is, that Great Britain owes us £851,000,000, to be refunded upon demand at a rate of interest of 5 per cent. If that is the contract, American citizens have a right to demand 5 per cent; yet the Senator from Nebraska, as trustee for the American people, voted very recently to give away three-quarters of a per cent on every dollar they owed us in the way of an interest charge. If the Senator has a right to say, "If I vote to reduce your interest charge from 5 to 4¼ per cent without being asked to do so, I am a patriot," how does a Senator become a criminal who, when he sees that a better settlement can not be made, says, "Therefore we will accept a settlement providing for the payment of 3½ per cent interest?" I should like to know. Where does the difference lie that makes one act statesmanship and the other just a little bit less than criminal?

I sympathize, Mr. President, with what has been said about the taxation of the American people; but it is true that not a dollar of this money that is coming back is going to take a dollar of taxation off of the poor people of America, and every Senator knows it; because the poor people, the farmers in Alabama, the farmers in Arkansas and Nebraska, are not paying Federal taxes; they are being crushed by State and county and municipal taxes; they are being crushed because they have no markets for their farm products. It is the rich people in the country that pay the Federal tax, because under the law no man pays a Federal tax—I am speaking of income tax now, and the rich alone would profit by the defeat of this measure—if he be married, until he has above $2,000 a year net above all of the charges he has a right to make.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I feel sure that my colleague has made a statement in the heat of argument that is broader than he intends. The Senator surely does not mean that the farmers of this country are not being taxed by the Federal Government. The income tax, it is true, rests more heavily upon the people with large incomes than upon those with small ones, but in my country the farmers are being skinned and gouged by this iniquitous tariff bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well; that is not the question that we have before us, and if the Senator from Kentucky wants to interrupt me, I hope that he will confine himself to the legislation that is before the Senate.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I did not mean to start a debate. I simply thought perhaps the Senator had expressed himself more broadly than he intended.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I was talking about direct taxes; and if the farmers are ruined, as we have been saying, if they have not been getting the cost of production out of the things they grow, they can not have any income that will make them subject to paying income taxes—direct taxes. That is what we are talking about. If we were to get back to-morrow every dollar that all the European powers owe us, no movement would be made to reduce tariff rates, and therefore they are not affected one way or the other by the legislation now before the Senate.

Mr. President, here is the question before us: Are we willing that the world shall make a beginning toward readjustment, toward economic recovery, or are we willing to plunge it into another 12 months of nightmare and darkness in order that possibly a better settlement may be made with Great Britain next year than we get out of her this year?

I know, Mr. President, that there are some people who are racially so antagonistic to the English-speaking people that whenever the British Empire is mentioned—and I do not criticize them; people are swayed by their prejudices—they can not help opposing it. They have hated Great Britain for hundreds of years, and for hundreds of years their children after them will hate her. I hold no brief for the British Empire. All my people were put out of Ireland by the sword when Cromwell was "pacifying" that island. I drew in, with all my family traditions, a hatred of the British Empire; but, Mr. President, I hope to God the time shall never come when I am willing to be a party to destroying the world because for hundreds of years there has been a feud between the people from whom I sprang and England. I am not willing to do it. Some hate the British Empire because of religious differences. I do not. This question is not racial; it is not religious; and it is not, as I understand it, a question of charity. It is a question of good business; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. I say had not we lent this money to England and the British armies had been compelled to slacken their efforts in resisting the German assaults of 1917–18, we would have expended every dollar of it and more in making soldiers of American boys, and instead of 50,000 of them dead by battle wounds in France there would have been a million of them, and instead of 50,000 mothers weeping for boys who went beyond the seas and never returned there would have been a million of them.

I was astonished the other day when one Senator, of whom I am exceedingly fond——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the ruling of the Chair that I can not now discuss the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can discuss the pending amendment, which he has already done, for 10 minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Both the measure itself and the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just the pending amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If a Senator has not addressed himself to the bill, is he precluded from speaking 10 minutes on the bill now and also 10 minutes on any amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the notice that the Chair gave.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope some Senator will get recognition and yield to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have submitted an amendment which I will explain before the Senate in a few minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the other day——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not any objection at all to this program, but if that rule is to obtain let us have it settled now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to waive my time on the pending amendment, or I will take the floor and yield to my colleague if the Senator objects.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, if there is any objection, I will sit down.

Mr. BORAH. If that is parliamentary and can be done, of course it simplifies a situation here which has been embarrassing to some of us. I have not any objection to its being done if the Chair holds that that is proper.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to my colleague my time on this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], of whom I am exceedingly fond, day before yesterday made the statement which I shall read. After having read the law under which the loans to the allied powers had been made he said:

> And upon that we went to the American people for the money. We employed everybody from McAdoo to Mary Pickford, or from Mary Pickford to McAdoo—and I speak of them both with the utmost respect and kindliness—everybody from statesman to moving-picture actress. Hundreds of thousands of volunteers all over the country, on every husting, on every platform, from the steps of the Capitol, from the stages of the theaters, in country press and everywhere, told the American people that the money we were going to get from them to loan to foreign countries would be loaned upon bonds that would mature when our bonds matured and would bear the rate of interest our bonds bore, so that whatever money we thus loaned would come back to us and not be a burden upon the taxpayers of the United States.

That, he says, was the contract we entered into.

Later he said:

> That was the contract with the people of the United States, and any attempt to repudiate it would be as disgraceful a proceeding as ever was engaged in by any government on earth.

First, Mr. President, I deny that we made such a contract. The question of what was to be done with the money was not discussed when the people bought the bonds. It was to be used in winning the war. I say, sir, that those who bought bonds would much rather have loaned it to equip and keep a British, a French, or a Russian soldier in the trenches than to have loaned it to have their own boys put in the trenches. They would have loaned it with more willingness to maintain the armies who were fighting this war with us than to have let those armies quit for lack of means with which to fight and replace them with American boys. But, Mr. President, that was not the contract we entered into with the American people when we commenced this war. I want to read from what was declared to be the purposes and obligation that inspired us in going to war.

I read from the greatest state paper ever written by any statesman of any country. I read from the message delivered by Woodrow Wilson to the Senate and the House in joint session asking that we declare a state of war to exist between the Imperial German Government and the American people. In that immortal document we entered into a covenant with the American people to do certain things, and here is what it was, Mr. President.

Speaking of his former message, the President said:

> Our object, now as then, is to vindicate the principles of peace and justice in the life of the world as against selfish and autocratic power and to set up amongst the really free and self-governed peoples of the world such a concert of purpose and of action as will henceforth insure the observance of those principles.

That was it, Mr. President; and again, in the same message, he said:

> It is a fearful thing to lead this great peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance. But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free.

Those were the pledges, Mr. President, we made to the American people. We made them to the mothers and fathers of this land; that "If they would loan us their sons, and let us equip them as soldiers, and send them 4,000 miles beyond the seas and across the mountains to destroy the military autocracy of Germany, when they should have done so, so help us Almighty God, we would arrange a peace that would bring about a concert of nations, so that never again in the history of the world would a mother be required to sacrifice her son in international disputes."

We assumed that obligation, Mr. President, and 4,500,000 boys gave up their hopes, their dreams, their aspirations, and became soldiers in the armies of this Republic. They went beyond the seas, 2,000,000 of them, and 100,000 of them laid down their lives from battle wounds or disease, and to-day more than 80,000 of them still sleep in that foreign land, and shall so sleep until time shall be no more.

We assumed that obligation; and yet, Mr. President, after these boys, believing what we had said, had gone beyond the seas, and some of them had died, and 250,000 of them were made invalids for life in attempting to bring about the condition under which we might keep our contract and arrange a community of nations that would end wars, we repudiated it here on the floor of the Senate. We made them die in vain, Mr. President. We made 100,000 mothers weep for sons that never will return. We made 250,000 invalids that never will be strong, and we made them sacrifice life and health in vain, Mr. President, because we broke the contract we made with them; and now, Mr. President, we are upbraided because some Senators say we want to compromise on the rate of interest England is to pay; that that "is the most shameful breach of contract, Mr. President, that a nation ever made."

Oh, my God, Mr. President! If every dollar that was expended in this war had been lost, if every international debt had been canceled and we had voted for it, it would not approach to so shocking a breach of contract as the one that broke the contract with the boys, living and dead, and the mothers of a hundred thousand boys that weep to-day for sons that never will return, the contract for a league of nations which would end wars and bring again to a troubled world the blessings of international peace. It is in a measure to redeem that pledge I shall vote to accept this settlement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 16, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "settlements" down to the end of line 20, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

> With other governments indebted to the United States are hereby authorized to be made upon such terms as the commission may believe to be just, subject to the approval of the Congress by act or joint resolution.

So that, if amended, it will read as follows:

> Any payment of interest or of principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest, is hereby approved and authorized, and settlements with other governments indebted to the United States are hereby authorized to be made upon such terms as the commission may believe to be just, subject to the approval of the Congress by act or joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. That part of this amendment which was put in by the House has nothing whatever to do with the indebtedness of Great Britain, and I stated, I think, in the first day's discussion, that I had no objection whatever to taking that part of the amendment out, and if I may, as far as I can, I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the statement just made by the Senator from Utah in the RECORD, I apprehend it will not be necessary to discuss the amendment at length now. It was discussed a day or two ago.

The purpose of the amendment is, first, to require all future settlements hereafter sought to be entered into to be ratified by the Congress of the United States, rather than by the President of the United States, as is provided by the bill presented by the committee.

Another purpose is to relax the provisions of existing law and the provisions, for that matter, carried in the pending bill, so that the commission may have the power to negotiate just settlements with other governments indebted to the United States, subject to the approval of Congress.

We all know, and it has been admitted throughout the progress of the debate, that the remaining governments indebted to the United States can not settle, in all probability—certainly we know all of them can not—on the terms provided in this settlement. For that reason I believe it essential, if settlements are to be made or promoted with other governments, that the commission be authorized to effectuate just settlements, provided always that the same shall be submitted to Congress for approval.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the vote upon this amendment will virtually decide what course we should take regarding the amendment which I offered the other day. The commission was authorized to make settlements of indebtedness according to definite terms fixed in the act at a rate of interest of not less than 4¼ per cent and for a term of years not exceeding 25. It was recognized by the commission that it was impracticable to make settlements upon that basis. In fact, when the legislation was originally enacted that was the view of practically all of us, and we realized that it would be necessary for the commission to enter into negotiations and subsequently report to Congress, as the commission has done in this case.

The legislation which is proposed by the commission, and reported favorably by the Finance Committee, is in the nature of an amendment to the proviso of the original act creating the commission, that they shall not make any settlement on more favorable terms than those specified in the original act. That is the proviso which is amended by this bill. It occurred to me that that was not a proper form of legislation; that instead of amending the proviso, which would raise again the question of terms, we should simply ratify, if we see fit to do so, the settlement made by the commission, and leave the original act as it was enacted.

The effect of the amendment which I propose would be precisely the same as that of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. He proposes now to provide that the commission shall make such settlements as it deems advisable and report back to Congress for congressional approval. I think the law has been given that effect, practically, by the commission, and it is simply a question of whether we shall put that language in the bill in its present form or enact the amendment which I propose, which provides simply that we ratify the present settlement, and automatically that would put the commission in the same position with regard to future settlements as it is in in framing this settlement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The practical result of the two amendments probably would be the same. It has seemed advisable to me, however, since everyone admits that future settlements with governments can not be effectuated under the provisions of the existing law, that the fair and proper course to pursue is to relax the rule in the existing law, which we know can not be complied with by the commission. I think the preservation of that statute would operate as a discouragement, unless the commission should prove its readiness to disregard the law which Congress has passed, as they have been accused of doing in connection with the pending settlement, although, of course, their acts are now submitted for ratification.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what would be the effect if we simply ratified this settlement, and left the law as it now stands untouched?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It would leave the commission in the same position it was in when it conducted the present negotiations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senator from New Mexico, it would require an interest adjustment at approximately 4½ per cent, and the commission would be estopped from remitting any portion of the principal or interest under any conditions, or from extending the time for payment of any part of the indebtedness beyond 25 years, which, I think, are such impossible terms that they will be harmful rather than beneficial.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to misunderstand. If the law were left as it is now, could not the commission go out and do as it did in this case, make whatever terms it saw fit to make, and ask Congress to approve them?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; somewhat in disregard of the statute under which the powers are vested in them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Apparently that would be no obstacle at all, either with the commission or with the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. What can be the purpose of retaining in the statute instructions to and requirements of the commission which every Senator knows can not be complied with? If there is a bona fide purpose to invite and promote settlements with other nations, we must recognize in the beginning that concessions must be made. There was a reason for imposing these limitations in the present law, because everyone understood——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I realize I am consuming the Senator's time. I discontinue my remarks.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator that it would be better not to have the commission violate the law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly we do not want the commission to violate the law, but if we adopt this amendment we are assuming that the commission has already violated the law, and I do not believe it has.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not, either, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think it was generally understood at the time the original act was passed that the commission would change the terms. I do not believe anyone anticipated we would settle a single debt upon the conditions mentioned in the original act creating the commission, and I think the commission has acted quite within the understanding of the Congress when the law was enacted. If we now simply ratify this settlement, we will leave the commission to do in the future precisely as it has done in this regard. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas would seem to infer that the commission had exceeded its authority in bringing about this settlement and that we want to obviate that for the future. I still believe that it will be better to pass the bill in the way in which I have proposed to amend it, simply ratifying this settlement, leaving the commission free to proceed under existing law with regard to other settlements, as it has with regard to this.

If, however, the Senate should see fit to adopt the proposal of the Senator from Arkansas, then, of course, I shall acquiesce, and it would be unnecessary to consider the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not mean to charge the commission with violating the law. What I meant was that the commission made a settlement which was not authorized by statute.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is exactly my thought.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to call attention rather to the framing of the bill than to the subject matter of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah to my suggestion, merely for the purpose of endeavoring to improve the form of the bill. The bill starts out: "That the first proviso of section 2 of the act entitled," and so forth, "is amended to read as follows." Then the bill proceeds. The first proviso of the act of February 9, 1922, reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or other obligations due the United States of America by any foreign government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than 4½ per cent per annum.

As the bill was originally framed, without the House amendment, this bill would take the place of the proviso which I have read; and as there was no restriction at all in the bill as originally drawn, the commission would be authorized to negotiate with the other debtor nations and absolutely close out with them upon any terms they saw fit and without submitting the matter to Congress at all.

Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, the arrangement made would be submitted for the approval of Congress. It takes care of that matter. But I submit to everyone that it is altogether inappropriate to make the bill a substitute for this proviso. It does not fit in with the statute in any wise whatever. It provides that the first proviso of the act "shall hereafter read as follows," which is a most inartistic way of framing a statute.

If the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should be agreed to, there would be no occasion for anything in the bill, I submit to the Senator from Utah, down to the word "the" on line 3, page 2; that is, cut out all of the language making it a bill to amend that proviso, and just start in with the words "The settlement of the indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States of America, as follows, is hereby approved."

Then, with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas agreed to, hereafter any settlements made will be subject to the approval of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. The only difference between what the Senator suggests and what we have here is that we set it out in the bill. The Senator says he would like to have it read in this way: "The settlement of the indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States of America, as follows," then on line 16, page 3, "is hereby approved and authorized."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. It reads "as follows" and then follow the terms of the agreement.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But I suggest to the Senator that everything preceding that be stricken out, so that it will start with the word "the" in line 3, on page 2, and read:

The settlement of indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, as follows, is hereby ratified and approved.

And do not insert the proviso that the act of February 9, 1922, shall hereafter read this way. It would be too long. I shall submit the amendment later on.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall examine the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to make another suggestion to the Senator. I was not able to follow the exact reading of the amendment tendered by the Senator from Arkansas, but I believe that it would be improved if after line 15 there were inserted language as follows:

notwithstanding any restrictions in the act approved February 9, 1922.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would have no objection, but——

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. Nor do I think it is necessary. This being the latest enactment covering the subject of the indebtedness of other governments, it would control.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, it is interesting to note the fact that we voted on such an amendment once before; that is to say, on an exactly similar proposition. When we were discussing the bill which, when finally passed, authorized the commission an amendment was offered which read as follows:

When, under and in accordance with section 2, the said commission shall with any country reach an agreement of adjustment, settlement, or refunding, such agreement, before it is consummated or becomes final, shall be reported to and shall be approved by Congress.

Voting for that amendment were 36 Senators. Among them was the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I accord to him and every other man the right to change his mind. I do not offer this by way of criticism, but rather by way of introduction to the statement that we appear to be engaged in a general business of wholesale or partial repudiation of our own debts.

When the original act was under discussion we were not talking about 8 per cent interest. We were talking about receiving from every solvent country dollar for dollar of the money we had loaned, including dollar for dollar of the interest we were compelled to pay. That was the position then, as is evidenced by the remarks which I shall read as uttered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] who undertook to outline the position of the administration and of the proponents of the bill then pending. He said:

Where do we stand in regard to the whole question? In the first place, the Secretary of the Treasury says that he intends, so far as is humanly possible, to collect 5 per cent interest and that 5 per cent interest is the rate that should be collected; that is, because our bonds bear 4½ per cent interest; and secondly, because they are nontaxable, which, of course, indirectly makes the rate higher, and in the third place, because of what it costs us to sell the bonds and to incur the obligation. Therefore he thinks that 5 per cent is a legitimate rate of interest. That being true, the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to be at the head of the proposed commission, asserting with all confidence and sincerity that he intends to attempt to collect 5 per cent interest, why should we attempt to write it into the bond that it will be thus collected and collected semiannually?

Now, that was the position of the Senate a few months ago. However, disregarding the advice and in order to make certain that our commissioners would go forth with positive instructions from this body, we wrote into the act 4½ per cent interest. We sent the commission forth as our agents authorized to make that kind of contract and no other and to bring it back to us or to come back and report that they were unable to reach an agreement. The commission, when it went outside of the letter of that statute, proceeded with no more authority than if it had never been named as the commission, for an agent who goes outside of his authority ceases to be an agent and becomes a mere intermeddler or usurper.

If the commission had properly performed its duty, it would have laid those terms of the agreement upon the table and said to the British commission, "This is all we are authorized to offer, and you must take it or leave it." If that course had been followed, I have not the slighest hesitation in the world in saying that Great Britain would have accepted the proposition, possibly asking the right to refund the indebtedness at a lower rate of interest or to take up the bonds at will whenever she could get the money at a lower rate of interest.

But the commission acceded to the demands of Great Britain and came back here, of course, unable to conclude a contract and brought it to the Senate. The Senate, which had taken the position only a few months ago of asking 4½ per cent, yields to the importunities of the commission and proposes to ratify its unauthorized act.

But that is not all. We stand before the world to-day as a creditor, and the accredited representatives of the American people in this body proceed to tell every other nation on earth, "We do not expect you to pay your debt." I wonder how long a lawyer could remain in the employ of a client who started out to collect money and who in advance advised the debtor that he did not expect him to pay. What reason is there for a European statesman, a statesman of France, of Belgium, of Poland, of the Slovakian States, or of Italy to propose to his people to pay an indebtedness due to the American people when distinguished Senators stand upon the floor of the Senate and say, "We ought not to expect payment"?

We are standing here the temporary representatives of the American taxpayers, who must be the permanent payers of this obligation which we have incurred through our bonds, and we propose to say to the world, "You can pay or not pay, just as you please; but we do not expect you to pay." Is not that very unfortunate talk to be heard on the floor of this body? It is not my business to lecture anybody. I am not trying to lecture anybody, but I say that no nation can collect its money that is justly due it unless it at least presents its claim and asks that the claim be recognized and paid.

Neither do I agree with the proposition that these nations can not pay. They may need the indulgence of time, and reasonable indulgence would not be objected to by reasonable men. But that nations should undertake to insist that they have the right to exist as nations and to maintain armies and great navies, and at the same time insist that they can not pay their debts is an anomaly that is not to be tolerated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Missouri desire further time? If so, I yield him my 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have said what I desired to say on the particular amendment. I thank the Senator from California, however, for his courtesy.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to answer briefly the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], made a few moments ago. He asked if I went to him and asked for a loan of $5,000, and he told me he had not the money himself, but could get it for me; what I thought would be the ethics of the situation if I should suggest afterwards to him that I should pay a less rate of interest to him than I had agreed.

To make the situation exactly parallel, if I went to the Senator from Nebraska and asked for a loan of $5,000, and he replied that he did not have it, but would get it from the members of his family, and did so, and I received credits and the members of his family received the proceeds of the loan, and by reason of those proceeds I was able to save the lives and fortunes of the Senator from Nebraska and the members of his family, and then I afterwards went to him and said to him, "I propose to pay every penny of the $5,000, I am perfectly willing to pay a rate of interest, but I suggest that you do not exact from me the full rate," if the Senator insisted that he wanted the pound of flesh, I would pay it if I had the money, but as long as I lived, Mr. President, down deep in my heart I would feel that the Senator from Nebraska was a shylock compared to whom the Shylock of Shakespeare would be the soul of generosity. The Senator from Nebraska would never exact any such terms in his individual capacity. Of course not. So the parallel that the Senator would make does not apply in any way to the present question before us.

Then the Senator criticized the present administration for not protesting the invasion of the Ruhr by France. This is not the time nor the place for a discussion of that question, but I will say I can not follow the reasoning of the Senator from Nebraska when he criticizes the present administration for not assisting Germany to secure a modification of her contract, and at the same time contends that we shall insist upon the full letter of ours. If we have a right, sir, to insist, and if it is our duty to insist, as representing the American people, on the full amount of interest, upon what ground would the Senator from Nebraska criticize the administration for not protesting to France when she is trying to enforce her contract?

Mr. President, I believe that though, of course, this is not the time to discuss the matter, that the reparation terms and certain other provisions of the Versailles treaty are too severe. I think they ought to be modified; but the United States will be in a poor position, indeed, ever to suggest its good offices for a modification of the contracts that exist in Europe if the policy proposed by the Senator from Nebraska be now followed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin has possibly forgotten what provoked my remark. He defended this bill as being a great effort on the part of the United States to stabilize conditions in Europe, and he sought to justify a sacrifice of $1,666,000,000 and the levying of a corresponding amount of taxes on the American people for that purpose. I called his attention to the fact that the present administration, which seeks to impose upon the American people that sacrifice for the alleged purpose of stabilizing conditions in the Old World, had neglected the opportunity which it had to prevent the exploitation of the Ruhr, the demoralization of Germany, and, probably, also the demoralization of France and the whole European continent consequent upon that reckless and foolish invasion.

I said that if the administration had desired to stabilize the conditions in Europe, that threatened invasion presented the opportunity, without one dollar's expense to the American people, to make a great contribution to the cause of stabilization by making a strong protest.

The Senator from Wisconsin has somewhat mixed my illustration. I put myself in the attitude of going to him to seek the loan of $5,000, but I will accept it the other way and assume that he comes to me and seeks a loan of $5,000. I make him the loan, as he has stated, I borrow it from my own family, and he spends the money, as he has stated, among members of my family, and my life and my family are saved. Has the Senator forgotten the one who borrowed the money? He did not borrow that money of me, figuratively speaking, to save my life, but he borrowed it to save his own life—and that is why Great Britain borrowed the money from the United States, and it did save her life. The Senator has forgotten that side of the transaction.

Senators, in their anxiety to consider the equities on the other side, forget all the great sacrifices that the United States made. The British Empire was saved by that loan.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course I assume that the Senator and every other American understands that that money was borrowed primarily by England in order to save herself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. But it also at the same time assisted in saving the lives of Americans and a great amount of money for Americans.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice the Senator in his speech failed to suggest anything of that sort. He spoke of borrowing $5,000 of me and spending it with my family for the sake of saving my life and my family's life; but the real motive in borrowing the money was to save his own life, and the motive Great Britain had in borrowing this money was to save the life of the British Empire.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator admit that the expenditure of that money did have the effect of saving any American lives or saving any American dollars?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I am not going into that question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a suggestion, we saved the lives of, perhaps, a million English soldiers at the same time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am not here in an anti-British attitude. I have said that I had expected when this proposition came up to vote for it. I quite approve the present attitude of Great Britain in world affairs. I realize that we were in a great cause together; and I realize that we ought to deal justly and even generously with Great Britain; but I say there is a limit. I contend that we should say to Great Britain, "Repay that money when you can, in 25 years or 40 years, or 50 years, or 60 years, and make the terms to suit yourself, but do not expect us to tax the American people in order to let you have the money at 3 per cent or 3½ per cent when we have got to pay 4 per cent or 4¼ per cent."

I am entirely willing that Great Britain should use the credit of the United States, the finest in the world. I am willing that Great Britain should be able to borrow through us as cheaply as we can borrow for our own purposes; but I say that is the limit; that is where the representatives of the American people ought to stop. We have not any right to lay this extra interest burden of $1,666,000,000 upon the people of the United States.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] criticized me because, while I voted for reducing the rate of interest from 5 per cent to 4¼ per cent, I am not willing to go further. The cases are entirely different. Why did I vote to reduce the rate of interest to 4¼ per cent? It was because that was all we were paying, and we could afford to loan Great Britain money at the rate of 4¼ per cent. Being able to borrow it at that rate, we could lend it at the same rate without laying any additional burden upon the American taxpayer. That is what we ought to do. I am not in favor of making any money out of Great Britain. All I think Great Britain should do is to compensate the American Government for what it is compelled to expend in extending her this great credit.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is entirely right when he says that the members of the American Debt Funding Commission violated the act of Congress. There can be no question about that. We ought to get that clearly settled in our minds. The American members of the Debt Funding Commission have either complied with that act or they have not complied with it. Congress either meant to say that they could give a longer time for the payment of this debt than 25 years or they did not mean to say that; they either meant to say that less than 4¼ per cent interest could not be charged on the debt or they did not mean to say that. We intended to fix the limit at 25 years. We certainly intended to fix the rate at 4¼ per cent. The American debt commissioners, however, met the British envoys in secret conclave. The public knew nothing about their discussions; they were sitting behind closed doors with the Secretary of the Treasury, and every member of our commission was a partisan Republican. No Democrat was permitted to sit upon that commission. As a Democrat, I resent that. The Democratic people of America were entitled to have representation upon that commission. The fact that they were not allowed representation upon it has always clouded the whole thing with suspicion. It did so in my mind and it did so in the minds of millions of people in America. Why were not the Democrats given representation upon that commission? Well, they were not given representation.

When the Republican members of the Debt Funding Commission met the brilliant and overmastering intellects of Great Britain what happened? Did the representatives of Great Britain ask us to concede them an interest rate of 3 per cent or 3½ per cent? No. Who was it that made that proposition? It was the American commissioners. Who was it that went to the British envoys and said, in substance, "We will make you this proposition: To tax the American people $57,000,000 a year for the first 10 years on this indebtedness in order to give you that amount; and we are willing to make you a proposition of 3 per cent and 3½ per cent when we have to pay 4¼ per cent." Who was it that made that proposition? We are told that it was the American commissioners who made it and not the British envoys.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the commission has not agreed that the rate should be anything. Your commission said that they would present the question to Congress, as they had no power under the law to say that there should be an agreement between this country and Great Britain for a rate of interest of 3 per cent for 10 years and 3½ per cent thereafter. I will say further to the Senator that is what we are here for now; we are presenting the proposal to Congress, and it is for Congress to say whether or not we shall make the final agreement.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. As my time is very limited, I hope the Senators will not consume my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The Chair understands the Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts if he will be brief.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I merely wish to say to the Senator that the record of the Finance Committee shows that his statement is correct. The members of the American Debt Funding Commission first presented the proposition of 3½ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. It was a compromise, as I have stated a number of times, and no one tried in any way, shape, or form to have any Senator or any Representative or any American believe that it was otherwise.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have not the time to yield to the Senator to make a speech. If he desires to make a speech he will have to make it in his own time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask one question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if the American commissioners ever laid these terms down on the table and said to the British representatives: "This is the limit of our authority; we expect you to accede to it?" Did the American representatives ever do that or anything like that?

Mr. SMOOT. Great Britain knew that before she ever sent her representatives over here, and every other country likewise knew it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I take it the American representatives did not do it, then.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it was impossible to settle upon those terms, and everybody knows it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can not yield for the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to yield to me at all.

Mr. HEFLIN. Why did not the Senator or the commission of which he is a member come back here and ask Congress to change the law?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what we are doing now.

Mr. HEFLIN. Here is what the Senator said in a colloquy with me on the floor of the Senate when I was demanding that the Democrats be represented in the handling of this indebtedness owed to the American people and amounting to $12,000,000,000:

> I will say to the Senator right now that no human being can settle the debt under the law existing to-day, and a request will be made, I hope, for the modification of the law.

Did they ever make such a request? No, Mr. President, they did not. They did not come back and ask us while the British envoys were here to change the law and let the Congress or the American people say whether or not this thing could be done. They waited; the British envoys went home; the British cabinet acted, and it was submitted to us after our instructions had been violated and an interest rate granted below that which the overburdened taxpayers of America must pay.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If we are going to continue this commission in the task of handling this foreign indebtedness, for God's sake let Congress have some right to pass upon the settlements proposed, because in this instance they did not wait for the British envoys to suggest what they could do but they themselves suggested a rate away below that which we paid. What would any business man do if his agent were to go out to collect a debt and begin by offering a lower rate of interest than his employer had to pay for the money he was sent to collect? He would be discharged. What ought to be done with this debt commission? Discharged, of course. Yet it is provided in the proposed law that the commission shall continue to handle debts aggregating about $9,000,000,000 owed to the American people, and it is proposed to give the President, another Republican, the right to approve it by signing his name to the settlement proposed. Oh, Senators, if you put that thing over it will be the culmination of a lot of big deals and smooth-artist work that this Republican Congress has put over to the detriment and injury of 100,000,000 people.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read resolutions urging the approval of the British debt settlement, recently adopted at Louisville, Ky., by the executive committee of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations, representing about 1,000,000 producers in Southern and Western States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations in Louisville, Ky., February 3, 1923.

The executive committee of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations recognizes:

That the farmers of the United States have a more important and more direct interest in the establishment of normal economic conditions in Europe than all other commercial groups in this country; and

That approximately half of the cotton, one-third of the tobacco, one-fourth of the wheat, and vast quantities of corn, beef, pork products, and fruits produced in the United States are normally sold into European consumption; and

That the ability of the European nations to purchase and pay for the exported portions of these great crops is the determining factor in the prosperity of more than 5,000,000 American farm families; and

That the Government of the United States, in order to enable the majority of the American farmers to sell their crops and to maintain a decent standard of living in their homes, must exert itself in every way to aid in the economic readjustment of Europe; and

That the first step in this economic readjustment is the preservation, as far as possible, of the purchasing power of Great Britain; and

That in the first 11 months of the year 1922, out of less than $800,000,000 value of exports from this country to Great Britain, more than $500,000,000 was represented in cotton, tobacco, grains, and live stock products, and that the ability of Great Britain to buy such crops is today the most critical and vital factor in the markets for American farm products, and that the weakening or crippling of the purchasing power of Great Britain would be a calamity to the American farmer; and

That any attempt to force Great Britain to pay its existing indebtedness in such annual amounts as will decrease the normal purchasing power of Great Britain will harm the American farmer and, through him, the entire American people without a corresponding benefit to any group whatsoever; and

That every effort ought to be made by Congress to extend the payment of the British debt over the longest possible number of years and with the lowest interest rate compatible with the position of this country as the leading international creditor; and

That this executive committee, representing the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations, herewith urges upon Congress immediate approval and acceptance of the terms recommended by the American commission on the refunding of the British debt, namely, an extension in time of payment to a period of 62 years, with the interest immediately at 3 per cent, and later at 3½ per cent, under the specific conditions recommended by Secretary Mellon and his associates on that commission and accepted by the British Government.

* * * * * * *

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, who signs this document?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper contains this heading:

Resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations, in Louisville, Ky., February 3, 1923.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What Senator presented the memorial?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Missouri, since I received a similar communication, that it was forwarded to me by Colonel Bingham, the owner and publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, who is, as I am told, an officer of this association.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I send to the desk a statement made by President Wilson in reference to the cancellation of these debts and ask to have it read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

PRESIDENT WILSON SAYS THERE IS NO INCENTIVE, DESIRE, OR REASON TO CALL UPON THE UNITED STATES FOR FURTHER CONTRIBUTIONS.

President Wilson, in refusing the cancellation plea of the chancellor of the exchequer, replied that he would not "transfer from the peoples of the debtor Governments to the shoulders of the people of the United States the taxes necessary to liquidate the outstanding obligations of the United States Government, representing the loans made by it to the allied Governments. The United States Government in little over two years raised for war purposes through taxes and loans approximately $37,000,000,000, out of which were made to the allied Governments the loans to assist them in winning the war. The United States Government has neither received nor sought substantial material benefits from the war or under the terms of the treaty of peace. On the other hand, the Allies, although having suffered greatly in loss of lives and property, have under the terms of the treaty and otherwise acquired accessions of territory, properties, raw materials, and other advantages, including their claims against Germany for vast indemnities. It would seem that if full account were taken of these there would be no incentive, desire, or reason to call upon the United States for further contributions."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah rise to speak upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator has already spoken once.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, I have not spoken on the amendment at all. I have not been recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary so advised the Chair. The present occupant of the chair was not present at the time, and will accept the statement of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] yielded to me.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think the Senator from Utah has spoken on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know why Senators are trying to lug in the question of the cancellation of the foreign debts. President Harding never has been in favor of canceling the debt. Not one member of the commission has been in favor of canceling the debt. I do not know of any American, outside of the propagandists in this country who are carrying on this agitation, who are in favor of canceling the debt. I know that argument was used from one end of the country to the other in the last campaign, but there was not a particle of truth in it. I know that the commission was charged upon the stump with being in favor of canceling the debt, but there was not a word of truth in the charge. Not a syllable can be found, in the public press or otherwise, where the President or a member of the Cabinet has ever intimated that the debt ought to be canceled.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If we should extend this loan 62 years and not charge any interest, would not that be equivalent to cancellation of the principal?

Mr. SMOOT. And not charge any interest?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes. Would not that be just as bad as canceling the principal?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no such proposition, and no one wants to cancel the interest.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, the Senator concedes the point——

Mr. SMOOT. No; that would not be canceling the debt. It would be canceling the interest.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes. Does the Senator pretend to say that if we make this loan at less than a fair rate of interest, it is not exactly the equivalent of reducing the principal?

Mr. SMOOT. It is reducing the interest, Mr. President.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does it not have the same effect in dollars and cents as reducing the principal?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it does not, Mr. President.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then the Senator's mathematics are defective.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time to discuss that matter. The principal is $4,600,000,000, and they are to pay it. The only question is as to the rate of interest.

The Senator speaks of a fair rate of interest. The rates of interest provided are fair as between two solvent governments. I know that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] says, of course, that this commission is composed of ignoramuses who know nothing about finance, and that the great, brilliant minds of England overawed the commission.

I expected the Senator from Alabama to be more severe than that. I have said twice on the floor of the Senate already that the only proposition that was made by the American commission was that the rate of interest should be 3½ per cent straight through the 62 years. We did not say that that could be accomplished. We said that we would submit it to the President of the United States and ask the President of the United States to request Congress to ratify it. There never has been a word said by any member of this commission to the British representatives to the effect that we had power to settle at any rate other than 4½ per cent and the 25-year limit of time.

Now, Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just there?

Mr. SMOOT. Just wait until I finish the sentence, and then I will yield.

Mr. President, the 3½ per cent rate of interest was cabled to England, and the British Government, through its premier, cabled back that it was impossible for the British commission to accept it. Then there were further conferences held, as I have said before; and in those conferences, after the explanations that were made, knowing the conditions existing in Europe and in the world to-day, knowing that something had to be done to bring about stability in the economic condition of the world, we did say that we would present this modification looking to the payment of 3 per cent interest for 10 years and 3½ per cent for the balance of the 62 years.

Mr. HEFLIN. That was the question I was going to ask the Senator. Did not the American commission offer that suggestion to the British envoys themselves?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have stated here on the floor of the Senate—and I have not time to repeat now the whole story—that it began with a proposition from Great Britain of an annuity plan. There is no need of my going over that.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did they ask for 3 or 3½ per cent, or did we offer that as a suggestion?

Mr. SMOOT. It was a compromise proposition, and the commission thought there could be no better arrangement; and I want to say to the Senate of the United States that if we fail now to make this settlement I do not know whether we are going to secure a settlement or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. Who suggested the compromise?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, of course, the Senator ought to know who suggested it from what I have already stated.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know anything about what you did behind closed doors.

Mr. SMOOT. There was nothing done behind closed doors that the whole world may not know. After the British Government said that it was impossible to pay 3½ per cent, then they did submit this proposal and ask us if we would not yield that amount—that is, one-half of 1 per cent per annum for 10 years.

I see that my 10 minutes are up, and I should like to have a vote as soon as possible.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, those favoring the debt settlement set forth in the pending bill, or many of them, at least, seem to think that America still owes a debt to Great Britain for the way in which Great Britain saved us from sudden disaster when war was impending. Very seldom have I heard any of those advocating the adoption of this bill say one thing in regard to any debt of gratitude Great Britain owes to the United States. Their line of argument throughout seems to be that we owe a great debt to Great Britain, that we did not do our duty during the war, that we did not assist them sufficiently during the war, and that now we must forgive them a billion eight hundred million dollars of the indebtedness they incurred for loans obtained from us.

Well do I recall when the British mission came here appealing for assistance and appealing to the American Congress and to the Chief Executive of this Nation for financial aid and for aid in men to go to the front to save them from the disaster that was impending. I dare say that at the time Great Britain borrowed this money from this Government they felt they were getting a great accommodation from the American Congress; they felt that, in justice, they should pay the interest which had to be borne by the American people for the money which was being loaned to them.

Had it been heralded throughout the United States, when we were floating our Liberty bonds, that we were giving 4¼ per cent on those Liberty bonds for a loan to Great Britain, contemplating that three or four years after the war we would reduce the rate of interest to Great Britain to 3 per cent, although the American people had to continue to pay the 4¼ per cent, I dare say there would not have been such enthusiasm and such response to the calls of the American Government for our people to purchase Liberty bonds.

The people of this Nation naturally thought, when they were providing those funds, that America was carrying its part of the expenses of the war—and it was, and nobly so—that Great Britain would return to this Nation the money she was borrowing, and that she would at least pay the rate of interest which the American Government was required to pay for the loans.

This proposition, leaving off all of the frills, involves the proposition of the American people having the debt for interest shifted from Great Britain and placed upon them, to the extent of the difference between 3 and 4¼ per cent. America was generous with Great Britain throughout the war, rendered every assistance she could, and I think properly so, and she has been generous since the war. We proposed to allow them until 1922 to make an adjustment; we proposed to give them a long time in which to pay the bonds; and then to say that we will shift the burden from the British people to the American people of paying the interest upon the funds which we loaned them I think is asking a little too much generosity, more generosity than should be expected of the American people.

Many Senators here have talked about what would have happened to our boys if the British had not secured the loan and carried on the war as vigorously as they did. What would have happened? But what would have happened to Great Britain had America not loaned them the money? What would have happened to her had we not sent our forces to the front? Where would Great Britain have been? Whatever I say upon the subject I say with no unfriendly spirit to Great Britain. I feel very friendly to that nation. Some talk about unfriendly spirit and the pound of flesh. We do not want to exact the pound of flesh from Great Britain, nor do we want the pound of flesh extracted from the American people. I can not see why, in justice, this debt should not be paid by Great Britain, and in my opinion it is an injustice to shift the obligation for the payment of the interest upon the debt to the American people to the extent of $57,000,000 the first year, and throughout the life of this contract to the extent, as suggested here, of $1,800,000,000 in principal—and in effect, if we cancel a part of our interest it is the same as canceling a part of our debt. I dare say that Great Britain would just as soon have us say we cancel $1,000,000,000 of the indebtedness and maintain our interest rate. What difference does it make? But instead of that the rate has been reduced.

We should not charge the British Government any greater rate of interest than we have to pay upon these funds, but, on the other hand, in my opinion we should not require the American people to contribute the difference between 3 and 4¼ per cent, the latter being the rate we are required to pay on this indebtedness.

Of course, some Senators say that it is not a question of taxation, and that it does not make any difference about this money one way or the other. If that is true with regard to the interest, it must be true with regard to the principal, so why not cancel it all? You say the people will never get any benefit from this fund. Then why ask them to reimburse the Federal Treasury for money expended on that account? The argument is unsound.

As far as stabilizing conditions is concerned, all favor that, but it is a matter of settling a debt in a just way. We all want to see an adjustment, but it should be settled and adjusted without requiring the American people to suffer this great loss.

I feel that if there had been a little more vigor, a little more energy, a little more seeing the question from the American standpoint rather than seeing it from the British standpoint, we could have gotten a better contract for adjustment.

I never saw anybody who set out to do a thing who could accomplish it if he said that he could not do it—in finance or in endeavor of any character—and when our commission set out and said they could not expect to get over 3½ per cent; that we were paying 4¼, but that Great Britain would not be able to pay that, although they obligated themselves to do it, we should not have expected them to accomplish anything. But the fact that our commission may not have exerted the energy and the eagerness in behalf of America which should have been exerted does not commit me to a policy of voting for a contract or for a bill which, in my opinion, does not represent a zealous conservation of American interests.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it is my purpose to vote for this adjustment of Great Britain's indebtedness to the United States, primarily because I am one of those who think that the indebtedness of the United States to Great Britain is quite as great as Great Britain's indebtedness to the United States.

Secondarily, I will vote for the adjustment because I believe it a sound economic business arrangement. I shall briefly discuss these two aspects of the case, taking the last proposition first.

Great Britain has not sought to reduce her indebtedness to the United States. No responsible statesman of Great Britain has ever suggested, for her own advantage, the making of any specific settlement contrary to the intent of the original transaction. The British premier on one occasion did suggest that Great Britain would be willing to forgive the indebtedness of the nations which were indebted to her, provided the United States would consider a similar adjustment of Great Britain's indebtedness to this country. But an arrangement of that sort would never have been of advantage to Great Britain. She would have lost billions of dollars by the adjustment.

What have we immediately confronting us? The Congress of the United States proposed a settlement of our foreign indebtedness. It appointed a commission, its complexion of one party, it is true; but that does not affect the merits of the discussion. That commission invited representatives of Great Britain to come to America to discuss and adjust the debt.

The American commission, finding it could not impose on our former ally the rates and maturities prescribed by the act of Congress, suggested an arrangement to the representatives of Great Britain which the commission would be willing to submit to the President of the United States, and the President in turn submit to the Congress of the United States; and here we are now discussing that arrangement.

INTEREST RATE FAIR.

I say, Mr. President, it is eminently a fair arrangement, as far as the interests of the United States are concerned. The interest basis is fixed in the light of the experience of all great nations in the world with national debts over a long period of time; and the assumption that we will lose $1,666,000,000 by the transaction is a figment of imagination. It is contrary to the history of national indebtedness the world over. It is based upon the idea, which is preposterous, that the rate of interest which this great, rich and powerful Nation will be compelled to pay for 62 years on its indebtedness will be 4½ per cent. The consensus of opinion among men schooled in matters of this sort is that for that period, in the aggregate, the United States will receive more from Great Britain than this Nation will ultimately pay on interest account. That, I assume, without being in the confidence of the commission, is why these rates of interest were fixed at the figures indicated. So I say that, as a business proposition, it will inure to our advantage.

But it is said we must consider only the economics of the case. Let us extend our vision a little and see what the economics of the case are.

MONEY SPENT HERE.

Every dollar of the $10,000,000,000 was expended in our own country, among our own people, for the wares and supplies which they furnished to Great Britain, sold at profiteering prices three years before we entered the war, sold at profiteering prices after we entered the war. But it is said we may not properly take into consideration the great era of prosperity in America that the expenditure of the $10,000,000,000 brought about. It is said that because some American manufacturers made money and American business men made money out of the transaction it is of no moment to the Congress of the United States in the adjustment of a question like this. Has it not an intimate bearing upon the economics of the transaction?

ENORMOUS TAXES DERIVED.

I draw the attention of the Senate to one fact which has not been mentioned in the discussion, which is that the Government of the United States itself derived from taxable profits for the two years that we were in the war, largely by reason of the expenditure of the $10,000,000,000, at least $4,453,000,000 in taxes. In short, this Government in two years of the war derived in taxes on excess war profits $4,453,000,000, a sum in the aggregate almost as great as the total principal indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States. Is not that a question of economics?

DOLLARS TO SAVE LIVES.

Mr. President, it has been said—and perhaps too greatly accentuated and exaggerated—that this Government was in no state of preparedness when it went into the war, when it assumed a part of the burden of that cause for which Great Britain struggled three years before we took our place beside her. We were not, in point of fact, well prepared. But in the course of time, Mr. President, we transported across the seas 2,000,000 American boys, not one of whom suffered death on the water at the hands of the enemy. We did this when hospital ships, under protection of the Red Cross, could not safely cross the English Channel. Let us suppose that Great Britain's fleet had not held the German fleet behind Helgoland, cowering and afraid to venture out. Let us suppose that by our failure to loan the $10,000,000,000 the German fleet had come out and ranged the high seas, what would have been the story? Instead of transporting 2,000,000 troops without the loss of a man, hundreds of thousands of American soldiers would have found a grave at the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean, food for sharks and other monsters of the sea.

Oh, it is set up in reply that had we not made the loan, had we not gone to the rescue, what would have become of Great Britain? The same thing would have become of her as later would have become of us. She and we would have been the prey of an autocratic barbarian power. That is what would have become of her and that is what would have become of us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the 10 minutes to which I am entitled may be used by my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to consent, but really I do not think we ought to do that.

Mr. GLASS. Very well; I shall avail myself of an opportunity later to conclude.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia a question in my time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I would like to ask the Senator from Virginia to give us the number of men that were transported overseas, and to do it in such an elaborate way as that he will take 10 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent order be so construed that a Senator may occupy 10 minutes on an amendment and continue for 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think I can consent to that.

Mr. GLASS. I hope no modification of the order will be made in my favor. If I am not contributing to the debate in the sense that I would like to contribute to it, and thereby impressing the Senate with the importance of passing the measure, I do not care to speak further.

Mr. SMOOT. I was about to ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Virginia be allowed to proceed 10 minutes longer, but I want to give notice now that hereafter, no matter on which side of the question a Senator may speak, I shall object to any such arrangement. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah why it is that he would not permit the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to yield 10 minutes of his time to his colleague, just as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] yielded his 10 minutes to his colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. The order adopted allows 10 minutes discussion on amendments and 10 minutes additional on the bill. It has been construed that we have to utilize that period at different times. It would seem to me, and I have seen it so enforced here before, that we might be permitted to take 10 minutes on an amendment and continue for 10 minutes on the bill. It is merely utilizing the time on the bill in continuing the remarks which the Senator has been making on the amendment, a course which certain Senators may prefer. It is applying the rule not alone to the Senator from Virginia but to everyone else.

Mr. SMOOT. If we do not live up to the unanimous-consent agreement, I do not know when we shall get through with the bill. However, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Virginia be allowed to proceed 10 minutes longer on the pending amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Utah has said that if we do not observe the unanimous-consent agreement we will never get through with the bill. I am perfectly willing that we should proceed as we have already done, which is in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, but if we apply it to one Senator then why not let everybody else have the same opportunity?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. If we extend it to one Senator, let us make it open and let it apply to everybody. Either do that or else let it apply to nobody.

Mr. SWANSON. No time would be taken by the Senate that would not otherwise be occupied. I am entitled to speak 10 minutes on the amendment. Every Senator here is entitled to speak 10 minutes on it, whether it pleases the Senator from Utah or not. I asked unanimous consent that my 10 minutes be transferred to my colleague, the junior Senator from Virginia. The Senator from Utah objected. It would not increase the total time taken on the bill, because every Senator is entitled to 10 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. If we are to start on such an arrangement, let us understand that if the Senator from Virginia can yield 10 minutes to his colleague, I can yield 10 minutes to some other Senator as well.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall not object to that general arrangement, but I do not want it applied to one Senator and not to every other.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska is quite right. I am able to take care of myself. Later on I will get time to say what I have to say on the subject.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that my unanimous-consent request be put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has submitted a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on that request. I think there is no one in the Senate who could have admired more the speech being made by the Senator from Virginia and the power with which it was being made or who could be more anxious to give him all the time he needs than I am; but if we do not enforce unanimous-consent agreements literally and absolutely, it will be impossible to do any business in the Senate. Unanimous-consent agreements have always been sacredly observed, and I do not think they ought to be violated now.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Utah to object. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has not the Senator from Montana spoken once on the amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am merely suggesting a modification to the Senator from Arkansas. If the amendment which he has presented should be adopted the Senator would have to identify in some specific way the commission referred to in his amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall have no objection to that. I shall make no objection to the modification of my amendment if it becomes necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia may now take 10 minutes on the bill if he desires.

Mr. GLASS. I believe I was trying to discuss the economic aspects of the question when my time expired.

BRITAIN'S "CONTEMPTIBLES."

Mr. President, I do not concede that there are no sentimental aspects of the question. I think there are. I think it is ungracious in a great American legislative body to forget some things that have happened in recent years. It seems, however, that we may forget England's "Little Contemptibles," 100,000 strong, which, in a very exigent moment, held back the horde that was threatening the civilization of the earth until ultimately every man of this army perished and went to his reward. To forget an incident like that, Mr. President, and turn to caviling over the fact that Great Britain took into prize courts American schooners laden with guncotton for the Kaiser's artillery seems to me unseemly in the Senate of the United States in adjusting a matter of this moment.

EDITH CAVELL.

As I conceive, Mr. President, it is an affront to the high spirit of American womanhood that we should shut out the sublime vision of Edith Cavell in order that we may turn to taunt Great Britain with having taken some oil from the "unspeakable Turk," whose hands are yet dripping with the blood of a million helpless women and children because followers of Jesus Christ. I am willing momentarily to risk my salvation in eternity, Mr. President, for the satisfaction of saying I keenly regret Great Britain did not do a service to civilization by driving every one of these savage creatures into the unmeasured depths of the Mediterranean Sea.

YPRES!

I could wish it had been the privilege of every American citizen, as it was mine, to stand on the battle field of Ypres and behold that shattered little village, not worth the life, perhaps, of one heroic Briton, except as a symbol of human liberty; and follow there the trail of butchery and blood as it led over that fateful plain to the heights of Passchendael and Kemel from which the German hordes could see the waters of the British channel and felicitate themselves upon an early triumph over the forces of righteousness. It was there that civilization was again saved by the valor and prowess of British arms; and it is sickening to turn from a scene like that, where lives were cheerfully given for a cause which was our cause, though belatedly espoused, to praise our own generosity in refraining from making a profit out of loaning our ally a few silver dollars to bring back India from the verge of financial collapse, perhaps of revolution. Had we hesitated an hour, we might have cut off the train of supplies for all the eastern armies of those nations with whom we were fighting the war.

"POOR GERMANY!"

Oh, Mr. President, it seems that we may submerge all recollection of the Lusitania in our tears for "poor Germany." We forget that her idealists, as well as her men of practical activities, deliberately sat at the council board and wrote down in plain words, textually and in figures, what Germany proposed to do when she should have won the war. What a shame it is that French and Belgian troops now tramp the sacred soil of Germany, the nation that profaned every shrine, desecrated every temple in Belgium, dynamited every mine, and robbed every industrial establishment in northern France. And it was proposed by these Germans, deliberately and in cold blood, to exterminate the kingdom of Belgium and to bring it, geographically and politically, under serfdom to the German Empire. It was proposed to confiscate every foot of the industrial territory of northern France and to exact in tribute of money an inconceivable sum. With a cunning and cruelty almost beyond the human imagination, these Prussians sat down, cut Paris into districts, first one, then another, to be destroyed, unless the French, fighting in our cause, would submit to the tyranny of these autocrats, these Huns, over whom we are now shedding tears and uttering phrases of pity—aye, not merely phrases of pity, but of violent condemnation of the men by whose side our boys fought. Perchance it may be that France has made a mistake economically, but it is a mistake that mighty few men of spirit in America similarly circumstanced would not have made.

FORGETTING OUR DEAD.

Oh, "we won the war." Yes; Great Britain was first to say so; France at another time said so; and ever since we have delighted to think so. Yet there are resting beneath the sod today one and a half million of British boys and quite as many of the French, not to speak of the Italians and the Belgians. Our boys would have won the war; there are none braver, no greater valor was ever exhibited anywhere; and yet we are forgetting Belleau Wood, we are forgetting Chateau-Thierry; we are forgetting St. Miheil; we are forgetting our dead, as well as the dead of Britain and the dead of France, in a maudlin sympathy for a whimpering bully who would have conquered the earth but for having been intercepted in his barbarous and inhuman warfare.

We won the war! Yes. We entered it opportunely. I conceive, as others conceive, that without our having gone in the war might have been lost. God pity America had it been lost, for already the tyrant was impudent enough to tell the American ambassador at Berlin that it would be our turn next; and it would have been our turn next, when, instead of fighting side by side with Britain's sons and the sons of France and Belgium and Italy, we would have had to fight alone. There would have been no economics in that.

Our contribution was money and theirs was lives. "Nominated in the bond," as the phrase of Shylock runs, and as repeated here to-day. Mr. President, under the Venetian contract there was to be no drop of blood shed in penalty of capital reprisal; but in this case, my God, British blood flowed in streams before the bond was executed and after the bond was made. We can not avoid seeing some things of this sort. Oh, Mr. President, I believe I have, in very indignation, exhausted myself if not the subject of the moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I desire to consume the 10 minutes which I have on the bill.

I do not have to defend my record when the World War program was being carried out. I have a statement in my office that I prize very highly made about me by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, Woodrow Wilson, when the World War was on. I recall very vividly the important part played by America in the great world conflict. I recall how I, as a Member of the House, advocated aid to the allied cause, and how our brave boys went to the rescue. I recall how they, in ships with no lights upon their decks at night, traversed seas infested with German submarines and how down in the body of those ships they moved slowly through the night to the battlefront to save the liberty of the world.

I recall how French fathers and mothers hailed them with delight when they stepped off the decks of our ships in the ports of France. I remember how the old men and women of France whose sons had died in battle hugged our boys' rifles and kissed our flag, and I recall the compliment paid to them by Marshal Foch when the World War was over. I recall what Sir Roger Borden, Premier of Canada, said, that the American soldiers snatched victory from defeat on the western front. I recall what happened at the Battle of Chateau-Thierry, when American troops proclaimed with united voices, "They shall not pass," and turned back the German tide, and many British officials said that was the decisive battle. I remember how in the Argonne forest and on other hard fought battlefields the American soldier beat back the German Army and saved the day. I remember how all the Allies praised America and the valor of the American soldier.

I am fond of our British cousins. God bless them! I recall very well when General Haig said to his brave British soldiers, "Our backs are to the wall; there is nothing to do but to die." What were the mothers of America doing then? I answer the Senator from Virginia that they were sending their sons, sending the priceless jewels of their household, the things they loved best, to fight and die on the battle front in France. What were the patriotic men and women of America doing? They were stinting themselves, buying Liberty bonds to send money to Great Britain to help her in the war against Germany. Has America been derelict in her friendship or duty to Great Britain? Has she been at all ungenerous with Great Britain? No.

Why, Mr. President, when Great Britain demanded that Italy store her gold in the vaults in London, when she demanded that France, bleeding white, should store her gold in the vaults in London, in order to get a loan from Great Britain, America did not demand one pound of gold from Great Britain. Were we not generous then? Were we not generous when we paid Great Britain the price she charged—many millions of dollars—for convoying our troops to the battle front to save her life? Were we not generous when we permitted Great Britain to fix her own charges against us for other war expenses, and we paid them without a murmur? I ask, in the name of our own dead who sleep in the soil of France, whose fathers and mothers are hard pressed in America to get money to pay their taxes much less their debts, are we ungenerous to Great Britain now when we ask that she pay simply and solely no more, no less, than the interest rate that we ourselves have to pay for the money that we loaned to her?

I submit to the Senate and to the country that we at least ought to be just to our own people before we are generous to any people beyond the confines of our own country. Who can say, now, that we are being hard on Great Britain?

Coming back to the cold facts of the question now before us, this Republican commission violated the instructions given it by Congress. What else? It submitted to us an interest rate lower than that which we ourselves have to pay on the very money loaned, and that puts an additional burden on the American taxpayer even for the first year of $57,000,000, a bonus given to Great Britain, more money than you will appropriate for all the rivers and harbors of the United States; and still some Senators talk about being ungenerous to Great Britain!

We have been generous to her—God bless her! I bid her Godspeed in all of her noble and peaceful endeavors; but while I love Great Britain, I love my own country more. While I love her soldiers, I love these boys who wore the khaki, who spilt their blood on the fields of France, whose fathers and mothers are contributing to the support and preservation of my own country more than I love the soldier boys of any other country in the world. I stand and plead for fair treatment of the American soldier at home. I have voted for such treatment while others have not. I have asked at your hands adjusted compensation when others have turned the American World War soldier away. I have pleaded that the local bank which serves his father and mother should be able to borrow money at the Federal reserve banks at 5 per cent, or 6 per cent at most, while others have voted to deny them such a rate. I have pleaded for the people at home.

Not only have I paid tribute to the valor of those who are dead, but I have dared to plead for justice to the living, and I will continue to do that.

I do not have to defend my democracy or my Americanism here or elsewhere. I am willing to have the fathers and mothers of this country, and the soldier himself who bore the flag to the battle front in France, spilt his blood in its defense and offered to die for his country, to read these debates and measure me by the 100 per cent American yardstick, and see whether or not I am entitled to be classed with those who love and serve their country.

It is well enough to pay tribute to the heroic sons and daughters of Great Britain. I am willing to do that and I share in it, but I do not want us to forget our own people; God bless and help them!—a sorely distressed debt-ridden and tax-burdened people. Nine-tenths of our farmers' homes and farms are mortgaged; their Liberty bonds bought at $80 on the hundred were taken from them. Wall Street got them, and Wall Street will make millions out of the settlement that you are putting over here to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I hope there will be no objection to it. I shall have nothing to say in regard to it unless some Senator objects to it. I do not want to take the time of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add as new sections the following:

SEC. 2. That the first section of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"That a World War Foreign Debt Commission is hereby created consisting of eight members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall serve as chairman, and seven of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than four members so appointed shall be from the same political party."

SEC. 3. That the provisions of section 2 of this act shall not affect the tenure of office of any person who is a member of the World War Foreign Debt Commission at the time this act takes effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Georgia will not insist upon that amendment at this time. It can be brought up later. I do not want any amendment put upon this bill that is going to bring a dispute between the Senate and the House, or even that may bring a dispute between the Senate and the House. That is one reason why I was really anxious, as I said before, to have the last part of this bill eliminated and just have it include the terms of this settlement.

I want the Senator from Georgia to know that I very much prefer, and I think it would be better, to have the Senator offer this proposal as a bill by itself and let it come up in its regular order. We have only a little while left in this session and I think the Congress of the United States wants this measure enacted into law. Let us not take any action that will lead to any long discussion or misunderstanding.

For that reason I am going to ask that the amendment be not adopted on this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am surprised that after the debate to-day, which was devoid of partisanship, any Senator should object to putting three Democrats on the commission. The Senator from Utah knows that he has delayed the bill I introduced several weeks ago in an effort to kill it. I understood from Republican members of the committee that I would get a vote on my bill weeks ago. The Senator from Utah tried to prevent it. I was assured that there would be no objection to this bill on the other side of the Chamber, so far as the members of the committee knew. The Member of the House who is on this commission, former Senator BURTON, one of the ablest public men in this country, is not afraid of having some Democrats on it. He is not afraid of their taking any of the glory from him. There is glory enough for all.

I do not believe there is a Member of the Senate who believes that the President ought to have appointed a partisan commission to settle this matter. Under the last administration Republicans criticized President Wilson for appointing independent instead of partisan Republicans on commissions, and they often referred to this in partisan debates in the Senate in the settlement of questions after the war which should have been kept out of politics, but President Harding appointed all Republicans on this commission. The money we loaned these countries was raised by subscriptions to our bonds; widows, soldiers fighting at the front, the rich and poor, every class and section subscribed, and all are interested in the settlement of these debts. It is not a partisan question.

I can not understand why any Republican should vote against this amendment; and certainly if there is any Democrat who wants to make this a partisan measure, the best way to do it is to defeat my amendment and keep Democrats off of the commission. These are the largest financial transactions in the history of our Government, and my amendment is offered with the hope that it may be helpful to the President in the settlement of these debts.

Mr. President, this settlement with Great Britain has been comparatively simple and easy, and it is going to pass with very few votes against it; but the next settlements are going to be most difficult. The majority party will have very small majorities in the Senate and the House in the next Congress, and if there is any partisan spirit it is likely to defeat or delay the settlement of any of these debts owed us by the other countries.

In my judgment, there is not anything that will help that settlement more than putting on three Democrats and prevent, as far as possible, any partisanship in its consideration. I know Senators on this side who are going to vote against this settlement who would, I believe, be supporting it if we had had representation on this side of the Chamber that could have given us the facts. We have not had the facts; and I hope, Mr. President, that no objection like that which the Senator from Utah urges will be allowed to have any weight now. This amendment is not going to be objected to by the House. When this settlement was before the House party lines were broken and most of the Democrats supported it. If the House does object to it and it comes back here, I will not insist upon the Senate standing by our vote and delay the passage of the bill.

I hope the Senator from Utah, after knowing that I have been assured by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and other members of the Finance Committee that I would get a vote weeks ago on my bill, which embodies this amendment, will not now take advantage of his position here to get the Members on the other side to vote against it when in good faith they have told me that by waiting and not bringing up the matter when the British Debt Commission was here, I would get a vote on it soon.

This is not the first time the Senator from Utah has tried to kill a measure that I have introduced by delaying it and asking me to wait.

The Senator from Utah is one of the ablest and most useful men in the Senate. All the members of the commission are men of great ability and will do their full duty. I am not criticizing them; I am trying to help them by having a nonpartisan commission, so that their recommendations to Congress in the settlement of these debts may be considered in such way as to avoid partisan discussion. I am trying to help the taxpayers of our country, whose burdens are so heavy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the House did not put this amendment on the bill. The Senator knows that the House understood at the time that the Senator from Georgia had introduced a bill to this effect. Representative BURTON, to whom the Senator refers, knew it; but it was not put on this bill, and I hope it will not be put on the bill here.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, former Senator BURTON and others knew that my bill had been introduced in the Senate, and they expected some action here. I have talked to a number of Republican Members of the House, and every one of them approved this measure, and I believe that there will be hardly any votes against it in the Senate if the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] will be adopted. I do not see how it could result in delaying the consideration of the great measure that the Senate is now considering. It has been thoroughly discussed here for weeks. It is very well understood. It is a very simple proposition.

I do not suppose that the President of the United States, when he originally appointed this commission, had any deliberate purpose of making it a partisan commission. I have no knowledge whatever of the circumstances under which he made the selections. So far as the commission went, the selections, in my opinion, could not have been improved upon. I have no doubt that the Prisident of the United States himself, in pursuance of any action of the Senate, would be very glad indeed to add to this commission the number of Democrats called for by the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, if for no other purpose than to remove the controversy which has existed in regard to that question.

There ought not to be any controversy on the subject. It is not a party question. It ought not to be discussed in a partisan spirit. In my opinion, the way to arrive at that conclusion is to appoint some Democrats on the commission under discussion, and there is no more appropriate time to do that than in connection with the passage of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on the statement made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] that if the conferees of the House do not agree to this amendment he is not going to make a fight against the conference report when it comes back into the Senate, and delay this legislation, I have no objection to agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, that is going a long way. I am very much interested in this proposition. I have been with the Senator from Georgia all along in his fight; but it would be a very easy matter for the Senator from Utah, if he wanted to have opposition turn up in the House, to suggest it to some partisan Republican and have him object to it; and then it would go out under the agreement made by the Senator from Georgia, I am afraid.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah can do nothing of the kind. I think the conferees of the House have minds of their own. I do not think the Senator from Utah is going to influence them at all in their judgment in the matter; and I think the Senator from Georgia made a fair statement.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us adopt the amendment without any agreement.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Alabama will not object to this agreement, with the understanding that the Senator from Utah, as a Member of the Senate, will act in good faith and try to get the House to agree to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will leave that entirely with the Members of the House.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS. No; I want the Senate conferees to urge agreement to it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate conferees, of course, are bound to stand by it; but if the House insists that it be not put in the bill, then, of course, I do not want to hold up the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. With that understanding, Mr. President, I am satisfied.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah promises that he will help, if this amendment is adopted, to hold it in the bill and will do his best to have it become a part of the law. This statement being made to the Senate, I am satisfied he will do that. I hope he will display a little more zeal in it than he did in helping to make this debt settlement with the British envoys. I am afraid that if he displays the same amount of enthusiasm in talking to the conferees in the House as he did in trying to get 4¼ per cent, it is a gone coon skin already.

I am not going to object to the amendment, because I have advocated it all along and demanded at the beginning that we have Democratic representation on this commission. We ought to have had it all the time. We lost several billion dollars by not having some Democrats on the commission, and now, since we are about to have ourselves tied up hard and fast with some other debt arrangements, and restrictions are being put on us so that we will have to follow in the footsteps of this commission we already have, the only purpose, it may be, that Democrats can serve on the commission will be to give us information so that we can tell the American people just what sort of a wheel in a wheel there is in the settlement of these foreign debts, and we can find out what happens behind closed doors and tell the American people about it. This foreign debt of $12,000,000,000 is due not to Republican leaders but to the whole people of the United States—Democrats, Republicans, and others.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have refrained from taking up the time of the Senate in the discussion of this bill, but, owing to the remarks made by the Senator from Utah a few minutes ago, I believe that I will say a few words. The Senator from Utah stated, in the very strongest manner, that this settlement did not mean the cancellation of any part of the debt of Great Britain. I submit that it does, if that language is used in its ordinary sense. It may be said that it is no cancellation; Senators may prefer to use the word "remission," or "forgiveness," or some other word, but the result of it is that we are receiving less than the obligation, regardless of the language which may be used in the settlement.

While I intend to vote for this settlement, I do not want the American people to be deceived as to just what it means. It does mean a cancellation of a part of the honest indebtedness of Great Britain to the people and the Government of the United States.

I have before me here a copy of one of the obligations which the United States holds at the present time from the Government of Great Britain. I shall not take the time to read all of them. I may state that in the beginning acknowledgments of indebtedness were given at one rate of interest, later on at another rate of interest, and later on at a still higher rate of interest. Some of those promises to pay bear as much as 5 per cent interest, and an agreement to pay an additional rate of interest provided the Government of the United States is required to pay more than 4½ per cent upon the money which it obtained from the people of the United States.

I want to read just one of the typical obligations which we hold to-day from the Government of Great Britain. It reads:

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for value received, promises to pay to the United States of America, or assigns, the sum of —— dollars—

There are a number of them in the particular language of the one I am reading. Certificates of Great Britain were accepted in the amount $735,000,000. The obligation continues:

on demand, with interest from the date hereof, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum. Such principal sum and the interest thereon will be paid without deduction for any British taxes, present or future, in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard of weight and fineness at the subtreasury of the United States in New York or, at the option of the holder, at the Treasury of the United States in Washington.

The certificate will be converted by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, if requested by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America, at par, with an adjustment of accrued interest, into an equal par amount of 4½ per cent convertible gold bonds of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland conforming to the provisions of an act of Congress of the United States approved September 24, 1917. If bonds of the United States issued under authority of said act shall be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4 per cent per annum a proportionate part of the obligations of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland acquired by the United States under authority of said act shall, at the request of said Secretary of the Treasury, be converted into obligations of said Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland bearing a proportionately higher rate of interest no less than the highest rate of interest borne by such bonds of the United States.

Subsequent to that the rate of interest was increased, and there can be no doubt but that the Government of Great Britain is obligated to pay at least as much as the highest rate of interest which this Government shall have to pay to her own people when she borrows the money. There is no question about that. It is a cancellation of a part of this debt.

What are the reasons for it, and why is it that we are entering into this settlement? We have before us a very meager history of the settlement—the transaction which actually occurred. We have, however, a statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain, Mr. Baldwin, which he presented to the commission created by the United States, and in that he does not say that the Government of Great Britain does not owe every dollar mentioned in these certificates now lodged with the Treasury of the United States. He admits it. Then what does he suggest as the reason for bringing about any settlement at all? There are just two things mentioned in the communication of the Chancellor of the British Exchequer I wish to read briefly. He said:

Further taxation would decrease the purchasing power of the British workingman and reduce our consumption of American products. There would be a diminished export demand for American cereals, cotton, meats, and other products of the soil, the mine, and the factory.

In another place he said:

Having regard to all these circumstances the British Government has to consider very carefully the terms of the liquidation of the debt lest an annual obligation be assumed which it might be impossible to meet in years of bad trade and falling revenue.

* * * * * * *

We want, on such terms as will produce the least possible disturbance in the trade relations of the two countries, a fair business settlement, a square deal, a settlement that will secure for America the repayment to the last cent of those credits which the United States Government established in America for us, their associates in the war.

* * * * * * *

May I put it in this way: We intend to pay, but how best can international credits be made liquid when the creditor nation is unwilling to permit liquidation through the direct delivery of goods and is also unwilling to see the current sale of her products to the debtor nation interrupted, and when the debtor nation is unwilling to be put in the position of being unable to buy the products of the creditor nation.

The cordial and prompt agreement of the two greatest democracies of the world on a question of this intricacy and magnitude will be an example to the nations and a long step forward in effecting a solution of the economic troubles of Europe. Let us never forget that until these troubles are solved there can be no general revival of international trade.

There is not a single line in the communication to which I have just referred which denies that they owe to the Government of the United States every dollar of principal and every dollar of interest at the rate specified in those certificates; but he does claim that if they make payment according to the bond, according to those certificates, it will interfere with our international trade.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, before the debate closes, I wish to call attention to the table introduced into the RECORD by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], a table prepared by Martin J. Gillen. I myself received a copy of the table some time ago, and the figures seemed unusually strange to me. I understand the Senator from Alabama does not vouch for the correctness of the table or the figures. I desire to challenge them in many details, indeed in almost all the vital details.

I think this document is a propaganda, first, probably for the cancellation of the British debt, and, in the next place, a propaganda to charge the wages of labor in the United States up to the farmer.

I call attention to one statement on Table 7, near the bottom of the table, under the letter "C":

Of the total exported merchandise to Europe and to Canada, excluding supplies to Army and Navy in Europe, $26,184,701,270 was agricultural products. This was for the past eight years.

I asked Mr. Hoover, the Secretary of Commerce, about these figures, and many others which I will not comment upon at this time, and this is what he said of that document:

The amount of agricultural products sold abroad is grossly exaggerated. The author figures $26,184,000,000 as our exports of agricultural products to Canada and Europe. According to the Statistical Abstract our total exports of fruit and prepared foodstuffs for the 8-year period to the entire world were $12,880,000,000, or less than half as much to the entire world as the author claims were shipped to Europe and to Canada alone.

Similar exaggerations are found in these figures all the way through, and this table, I think, should not be taken as authoritative upon any product.

Perhaps as a little side light on why that has occurred, I learn that this man, Martin J. Gillen, is the same Gillen who was indicted and is now under a Federal indictment with Charles W. Morse for defrauding the Government of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the document I introduced this morning came to me as it has come to other Senators. I think it is a document very pertinent to the discussion. The question is whether the figures I introduced this morning, as prepared by Mr. Gillen, threw light on the subject and the general subject involved.

I know there is a grave difference between Mr. Hoover's department and some of those who disagree on the fundamental question of the tariff. I have read, for instance, some articles given out by Mr. Hoover and his department going to show that imports are greater since we passed the high protective prohibitive tariff than they were before that time. That statement has been challenged in the magazines by some authors of great note. It is a matter in controversy—the Republican columns operating on the one side and those who believe in a lower tariff and increasing our export trade by allowing reasonable imports on the other side. So I am not surprised that the Senator from Iowa challenges the statement.

Of course, as I said this morning, I have only given the paper a reading. I have not investigated and made a comparison with statistics in reference to the figures contained in it, and I presented it for what it is worth. But I think the statement which I put in the RECORD this morning is one which should challenge not only the attention of the Congress but of the people of the United States on the question as to where our agricultural products must look for payment in the final analysis and how we are to receive payment for the surplus agricultural products of America.

Whether Mr. Gillen is right or whether the statement the Senator from Iowa attributes to Secretary Hoover is right, both contend that there is a large exportation of surplus farm products from America to the countries of Europe. The question is a matter of degree, not a question where the principle is involved. Whether it is the amount given by the Senator from Iowa coming from Mr. Hoover's office, or whether it is the amount given by Mr. Gillen, the sale of surplus agricultural products in Europe is the point. I contend there is but one way for them to be paid for, and that is by the importation of foreign goods. In other words, they must be paid for in trade.

The Senator from Iowa, I know, belongs to the Republican Party and, I understand, accepts their faith on the tariff, while I belong to the Democratic Party and am certainly a low-tariff man. Of course we have a fundamental difference of principle, and we would radically differ about it. I do not believe the farmer of America is helped by a Republican tariff. I have no doubt the Senator from Iowa thinks that he is. I believe it is more necessary for the American farmer to find the foreign markets for his surplus products than to solve any other problem which confronts us. If the Senator from Iowa believes, as I understand he does, in a protective tariff, he believes that under the shadow of protection the farmer will find his relief. Therefore we differ. There are a vast number of figures in the table, and I think perhaps that the particular figures in some points may be subject to challenge, but I have no doubt that in the end they will point to the fact which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate.

The real problem in this settlement in the last analysis is the stabilizing of international credit, the establishment of a credit system abroad, so that it may encourage the stabilizing of markets for our export trade. It is for that reason that I introduced in the RECORD the table I did, because I think it is a valuable document, looking at it from that standpoint, and one which ought to be called to the attention of the American people.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am prompted to take the floor for a moment because of the reference just made to Mr. Gillen by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART]. The Senator from Iowa, I know, desires to be fair and would not intentionally do an injustice to any person. It is true, as the Senator stated, an indictment was found against Mr. Gillen in connection with the Morse case, which is now in the courts, and undoubtedly there are many thoughtless people who will infer from that fact that there was ground for the indictment and that Mr. Gillen was guilty of some offense. People do not always know the modus operandi by which indictments are obtained and are prone to regard the fact that an indictment has been found as prima facie evidence, if not strong evidence, of the guilt of the person so charged; and, of course, a reference to an indictment made by a Senator upon the floor of the Senate challenges attention in a public way, and by some will be regarded as strengthening the impression that sufficient reasons exist for the finding of such indictment.

I know Mr. Gillen and believe him to be a man of character and integrity. He is not of my political faith, and I have no doubt but that in many ways our views upon economic and political questions are at variance; but I believe that the Government has wronged him and will be compelled to confess its course as unwarranted. There are matters connected with the finding of the indictment which I believe are not creditable to the Government. I shall not say that there were sinister influences back of the persecution, but in my opinion the persecution of Mr. Gillen was not prompted by a desire for the public good nor inspired by a purpose to execute the law or do justice as between an individual, the public, and the Government. So far as I am advised Mr. Gillen in his business activities and in his public life has demonstrated that he is a man of ability, of courage, and of fidelity and truth, and adheres to the principles of honesty and fair dealing among men.

I did not know that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] had offered for the RECORD the document referred to by the Senator from Iowa until the latter addressed the Senate a moment ago. I have had the opportunity of rather hastily examining this rather monumental work prepared by Mr. Gillen. It is a comprehensive document dealing with the economic and financial conditions of the United States and Europe. There are many tables and figures of the highest importance, which, in my opinion, will furnish to the Senate and to the country information of great value.

This paper submits reasons for the economic distress that has come to our country, particularly to the agricultural classes. It presents facts, from which deductions are irresistible, that the prosperity of our country, and particularly the prosperity of the farmers, largely depends upon the prosperity of Europe. It emphasizes what must be apparent to all dispassionate observers of economic conditions and fiscal affairs: That if we would have prosperity in the United States there must be peace in Europe and such rehabilitation as will permit production and enlarge the purchasing power of the European peoples. In other words, the paper of Mr. Gillen shows that, with the resources of our country, there are enormous surplus products for which foreign markets must be obtained, and that foreign markets are largely closed to these products when chaos and disorder and confusion are found in European nations.

As I interpret Mr. Gillen's position, it is that if the flames of revolution or the destructive forces of economic and industrial warfare envelop Europe we may not escape; indeed, we will be powerfully and disastrously affected thereby. Some of his figures may be erroneous and some of the conclusions stated by him may not be justified. However, he presents a study for the consideration of the American people which they can read with profit.

The debate upon the pending measure reveals how interdependent are nations and how impossible it is for any nation to live unto itself. The Senator from Iowa has referred to Mr. Hoover, and, as I understood him, Mr. Hoover challenges some of the statements contained in Mr. Gillen's paper. I shall not participate in any controversy between Mr. Hoover and Mr. Gillen. They are both able men and doughty warriors and can ably defend whatever positions they take. I recall that Mr. Gillen in his paper does not quite agree with the triangular theory of trade balances announced by Mr. Hoover, and upon the complex questions connected with international trade, invisible credits, and the equilibrium of commerce there may be wide differences between them. If Mr. Gillen's paper will induce the American people to think more deeply and earnestly about international trade and the causes which make for prosperity and economic peace, then it will have accomplished a great good.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I rise to protest against the idea that the American people shall have further shifted upon them the burden of any excess-profit taxes that may have been imposed upon purchases made by Great Britain in this country during the war. One Senator upon the floor has advocated in substance that policy. All during the war the American people upon their purchases from a paper of pins to a steam engine were subject to excess profits by these greedy, merciless profiteers. Of the four billion and odd dollars that were contributed in excess profits—I have not the statistics, but I dare say that at least $3,900,000,000 were contributed by the American people.

Now we have it held up to us in argument, in behalf of an adjustment to make a contribution to Great Britain, that Great Britain had to pay some excess-profits taxes on the purchases made in this country. It is urged that that is one of the reasons why we should deal generously with Great Britain. I say if we shift that burden from Great Britain in a readjustment at the present time it would add to the excess profits already contributed by the American people to the amount of money deducted from the indebtedness. That is what it means. I am not an expert financier, but a plain common-sense proposition like that is plain to anyone.

I say that the American people have already contributed far more than they should in excess profits. We should not agree that because Great Britain paid excess-profits taxes on some of those goods we should now refund to them and transfer the burden to the American people, who paid the same kind of excess profits on all their purchases.

The question of the excess-profits tax some time ago was before the Congress and now the great financial interests of the country are trying to push this proposition through. Formerly the profiteers came to Congress and knocked at the door and said, "We want the excess-profits tax removed," and this Congress, that now wants to be so generous with Great Britain at the expense of the American taxpayers, was again generous with the great financial interests of the country and removed the excess-profits taxes to the extent of $450,000,000 per year, as well as modifying the tax laws along many other lines.

I dare say that the reason why some of the great financial interests of New York are so energetically and enthusiastically behind this settlement with Great Britain is that it will enable them to collect their loans at 4½ or 5 per cent from Great Britain, because Great Britain will use our 3 per cent money to pay off their indebtedness to the financial interests of the country that are obtaining 4½ and 5 per cent interest. While the American taxpayer is paying 4½ per cent and letting England pay us on 3 per cent, the American bankers who hold debts against Great Britain will be getting their 4½ to 5 per cent or more. I do not think the American people ought to be required to contribute in that way to the American financial interests that advanced to Great Britain. I do not think they ought to be required to contribute it to Great Britain even directly, much as we appreciate that nation.

America did her full duty during the war. We gave the lives of our boys. We sent 4,500,000 of them to the front and to the camps and expended $23,000,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on our part of the work. There is no reason on the face of the earth, as I see it, why America should now make a donation to the extent of $1,800,000,000, as far as we can ascertain readily from the figures now before us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I do not care to discuss it, but I would like a record vote on it. I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the language contained in lines 4 to 12, both inclusive, on page 3, and insert the following:

Interest to be payable upon the unpaid balances on December 15 and June 15 of each year at a rate which shall be the average rate of interest paid by the United States for the same year upon bonds issued by the United States since April 15, 1917, and still outstanding.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment covering the same thought but in quite a different form. I am going to ask that my amendment be read, and I think the Senator from Nebraska perhaps will accept it in lieu of his amendment and perhaps he will not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, beginning in line 6, it is proposed to strike out "At the rate of 3 per cent per annum payable semiannually from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932, thereafter at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum payable semiannually until final payment," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

At the rate of 4¼ per cent per annum payable semiannually until final payment: Provided, however, That if at any time the United States shall refund at a rate less than 4¼ per cent the indebtedness by it incurred to secure the money which was afterwards loaned to the British Government, the interest above provided to be paid by Great Britain shall be correspondingly reduced.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment which has just been offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is, in substance, the amendment which when I was on the floor this morning I stated that I intended to offer. I think perhaps the amendment which the Senator from Missouri has offered is more nearly in accord with the exact situation than the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and I hope the Senator from Nebraska will let us have a record vote on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. Of course, personally I should prefer a vote on the amendment which I have offered, but it is in substance the same as the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the difficulty is in ascertaining exactly on what loans the money was secured which we loaned to Great Britain. The money was advanced at different periods, beginning immediately upon our entry into the war until some time after the armistice, and it is very difficult on that account to ascertain exactly which refunding operations would cover the matter. I therefore shall ask for a vote on my amendment. I do not care to discuss it any further.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire merely to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that his amendment does not fix the rate of interest; and the objection which is made to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri, it seems to me, is cured by the proviso which states that the United States Government shall make good any reduction in interest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; it is not sufficient, for the reason that I have stated. We began making those loans in April, 1917, and we kept on loaning money to Great Britain until after the armistice. In the meantime there were a number of issues of bonds, and nobody could tell exactly from what issue of bonds the loans to Great Britain were made. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to ask at the beginning of my remarks the exact purport of the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. Does it provide that on the proposed British bonds the average rate of interest shall be the same as that on the bonds which were issued by the United States with which to furnish the money to Great Britain?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; but that each year Great Britain shall pay interest into the United States Treasury at a rate which shall be the average rate paid by the United States for the same year. There is no difficulty in ascertaining that. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has produced here a computation furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury showing exactly what the average rate of interest is that will be paid during any particular period, and all the Treasury possibly would be required to do would be to figure out for any particular year the total amount of interest paid and the total principal upon which it was paid and thus ascertain the average rate. The amendment would give to Great Britain the free use of the great credit of the United States. Then if we should be able to borrow money at a lower rate of interest Great Britain would get the same advantage that we would get and the American taxpayer would not be burdened by paying the difference.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have not hitherto spoken upon the pending measure, for it has been difficult for me to decide a question which involves two elements which are so conflicting. It is apparent to every Member of this body that on the face of the contract made with those to whom the money was loaned the rate of interest which they were to pay for the money borrowed was to be the same as the rate which the Government of the United States had to pay our people for the money which it borrowed from them in order to make the loan to the foreign government. That meant that whenever the Government, in the form of taxes, collected the interest to be paid on our obligations to our own people or to those who hold our bonds we should collect a like amount of interest, and at the same rate, on our loans to the foreign government, so that the interest so collected might cancel the interest paid out.

I recognize also that under the pressing conditions in which we found ourselves when were were preparing to enter the war the rate of interest was unusually high, perhaps higher than the rate of interest ever paid upon a like amount of money on the obligations of any sovereign power. It was so high that it justified in a way the higher rates of interest charged to those who were dependent upon borrowed money to conduct the ordinary affairs of commerce. I hesitate between the impulse, on the one side, to favor the payment of a rate of interest equal to that which the Government of the United States is required to pay on its bonds and on the other to see the general rate on this vast volume of money lowered in order that the ordinary commercial rate might not be maintained at a figure detrimental to business. Although the maturity of our bonds is not coincident with the maturity of the bonds which we propose to accept from Great Britain, yet it is doubtless true that the bonded indebtedness of the United States will not be paid any sooner than the bonds proposed to be issued by Great Britain to us will be paid. I expect that the children and the grandchildren of those who are in this body will still be paying interest on the war debt of America 62 years from now. We will have to refund our indebtedness from time to time. I had hoped that when the Debt Funding Commission reported it would submit a proposal that would call upon Great Britain to pay the same interest that we were paying in order that the interest on the amount due us would cancel the interest on the like amount of bonds issued by us.

Inasmuch as such an amendment has been offered by the Senator from Nebraska, I shall vote for it, hoping that when our bonds have reached their maturity and are either paid or refunded the bonds proposed to be issued by Great Britain may possibly also be refunded at a lower rate of interest, so that Great Britain may enjoy the same benefit which we ourselves may enjoy from a lowering of the rate; in other words, that we take Great Britain into the same financial arrangement that we make with our own people—no more and no less. It does not boot us to say that whereas we fixed the rate of interest on the bonds issued by us at 4¼ per cent, when it comes to determine the rate of interest on the bonds to be issued to us by Great Britain we will agree to fix the rate on such bonds at 3 per cent.

Let us provide that the rate of interest on the bonds to be issued by Great Britain shall be equal to the rate of interest which we ourselves may be required to pay. Then, when we refund our bonds, if we can lower the rate to 3 per cent or perchance to 2½ per cent, we will have dealt with her as we deal with our own.

I recognize the fact that we must find some way to settle this question, and so I am going to vote, although reluctantly, for the bill. The paramount reason why I intend to vote for the bill is that I believe that we, the great creditor Nation, should set the example, even to the extent of making a sacrifice, in order to begin the process of stabilizing and settling the financial chaos which is now demoralizing commerce and affecting the prosperity of this country, particularly as to agricultural products and other forms of raw material. I believe the settlement of this question will have the moral effect of hastening the settlement of the other questions that are now vexing the world; and the amount of good that will accrue to our people in the form of increased markets and enhanced prices will more than offset any discount in interest rates such as are proposed even in the original bill. However, in order to satisfy the tax-burdened people of this country, I am going to vote with great pleasure for this amendment. It is just on its face. It is just to the American people; it is just and fair to England, because, when all is said and done, no man will deny but what the recuperative powers of England, her potential wealth, the accretion to that wealth which will come to her by virtue of the war, will enable her at the maturity of our bonds to meet the payment of her bonds along with ours and to pay the same rate of interest, even though she must defer the entire payment of interest during the period of the initial year. For that reason I am, I repeat, going to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and then, for the reason that it may aid the process of stabilizing a demoralized, war-weary world, I shall vote for the bill in order that we may be enabled to take the initiative in inaugurating that process.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word further, somewhat in connection with the remarks

I was making a while ago, and also in connection with the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

There is no question that the purpose of the proposed amendment is to carry out the spirit of the original arrangement with Great Britain and the other countries to which we made loans; but we are met with this difficulty: We have a commission appointed to adjust our foreign indebtedness. That commission consists of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, the able Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives. There is not any question that the commission as it is constituted to-day represents the real sentiment of the present administration. It is unfortunate that the Senate has not the benefit of facts which it should have in order to arrive at its own judgment entirely upon facts which can be presented to the Senate. In the Finance Committee it was sought to have a statement made of the reason this arrangement was entered into. The only witness called before the Finance Committee was the able Senator from Utah, who is a member of that commission. That Senator was asked to state the reasons why this proposed agreement was made by the commission. The Senator from Utah declined to do so. He made this statement:

> I do not think it would be proper for me at this time to discuss the reasons why, because it was based upon conditions existing that might affect the financial ability of England to meet the terms.

So at no time have we had a disclosure of the real reasons for the agreement which has been presented to us for ratification.

The Senator, however, makes this further statement:

> I think every member of the committee understands that there are conditions existing that should be taken into consideration.

He further says:

> I think that the rates contained in the settlement are the best rates that could possibly be secured.

That statement comes to us as an administrative statement. It bears the approval of the three highest officials in this administration, together with the approval of a distinguished Member of this body, and also one from the other House of the Congress. What hope is there that there will ever be obtained any better agreement than has been proposed? I submit that there is absolutely no hope; and if we recognize that fact, and adopt the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska—which, I do believe, represents the spirit in which the loans were made to Great Britain and the other countries—if we adopt it, according to the evidence and the only evidence which we have, it means a disagreement and an unsettlement of the indebtedness and international affairs between this country and Great Britain.

We shall not have another session of Congress for nine months, in all probability; and with no assurance that we will ever secure any better terms, and with chaos existing in the economic world, if we are ever going to ratify any settlement, let us ratify the settlement which has been agreed to and presented here for our consideration.

I think various reasons could be urged both for and against the ratification of this agreement; but I do believe that if we are going to ratify any agreement less than the original undertaking of Great Britain we ought to take the agreement which has been entered into just as it is or not at all. I do not believe in the Congress of the United States sending back a counterproposition in a matter of this sort.

My judgment is that in all these matters involving international affairs the administration should assume responsibility for negotiation, and then submit its proposals to the Congress. This should be considered an administration settlement, and it comes here as such, and we are told that it is the best we can get. In the interest of American commerce, in the interest of the farmers of the country who have products for sale, and likewise in the interest of others who are dependent upon foreign markets, if we are going to settle this thing at all for less than the original agreement let us take this settlement and get at least a start upon stabilization of world affairs.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, just one moment. I only wish to read something from the London Times.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has spoken once.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] embraces the same thought that is contained in the amendment that I myself intended to propose. We may indulge in all the sentimental statements we desire, and may fight over again the battles of the war; but, like the flowers that bloom in the spring, they have nothing to do with the case.

That is not the first application of that quotation. I am not presenting it as an original thought. The fact is that a great war was raging in Europe, in which we properly maintained a position of neutrality. Afterwards we were drawn into that war by attacks upon our commerce and upon the lives of our citizens. We fought the war to an end, and no one need claim the whole credit for winning the war. It was a good deal like a stiff contest between men tugging at a rope in a tug-of-war, as we call it. When each side was largely exhausted, new muscle was added, and the side we were on won.

In that war Great Britain undertook to finance herself, France herself, Belgium and Italy each themselves. When Great Britain, having more money than France, loaned France money for French use, she took French securities and obligations, and she had the right to. When she advanced money to Italy, and I believe France also advanced money to Italy, the obligations of Italy were properly taken, and so with Belgium; and at the end each country has the right to ask the other country to pay the money that it promised to pay. The question of sentiment does not enter into that business transaction. If it does, then why not cancel all these debts, and let everybody be happy except the taxpayer at this end of the proposition, who will have to bear the burden of all the cancellation?

During the war Great Britain gave us her solemn obligations, one of which, as a sample, has been read by the Senator from New Mexico. It is as squarely an obligation, a note of hand, and an agreement to issue bonds thereafter, as can be written by the pen of man. It provides for the payment of interest at not less than 4½ per cent in any of these obligations, and from that to 5 per cent; and the question we are discussing is one of reducing the obligation of the British Government.

The real spirit of our agreement with Great Britain was that she should make us whole. I freely concede that if we are to take bonds from Great Britain we would not be justified in demanding, it would scarcely be fair to demand, that she should pay the rate of interest nominated in the original instruments which she signed; but she should, in accordance with the spirit of those instruments, make us whole, so that the money we have borrowed we can repay out of the money we receive from her, and the interest which we pay for the money we loaned her will come back to us from Great Britain. If Great Britain expects any more than that, she expects that which is not fair.

Under the terms of this settlement Great Britain is let off with 3 per cent interest for the next 10 years. We have no assurance on earth that we can refund our indebtedness during the next 10 years so that the average rate we pay for that 10 years will not be in excess of 3 per cent. We know that we can not refund it now, we can not hope to refund it in the immediate future, at 3 per cent. Hence, it follows that for a period of time, at least, we will be paying 4¼ and 4½ per cent, as against Great Britain's 3 per cent. If we fail to refund our obligations at 3 per cent for 5 years, then we will lose for that period the 1¼ or 1½ per cent difference between the rate we pay and the British rate; and we could not recoup unless we should negotiate our bonds for less than 3 per cent, which is a proposition that no sensible man expects we could carry out.

The proposition now made by the Senator from Nebraska, while not in the language I would suggest, covers the idea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will take my 10 minutes now on the bill. It carries with it this idea——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Is not that the rule?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Vice President, so the Chair is informed, has established the rule that the time allowed a Senator to speak upon the bill can not be used while an amendment is pending. The Senator from Missouri has consumed his time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have been listening for a long time to the debate on this bill, and giving it the best thought that I was able to give it in the limited time that I had at my disposal; and I have not been able to reach the conclusion that we are under any obligation of any kind to borrow money at 4¼ per cent and loan it to Great Britain at 3 per cent. I do not believe that is fair. I want to be fair, I want to be generous with our late ally; but, Mr. President, we had to borrow the money that we loaned to Great Britain. We had to pay 4¼ per cent interest, and Great Britain ought to be willing to pay us the same rate of interest, as long as we have to pay that rate. I had an amendment on my desk which provided, as the pending amendment does, in substance, that if we are able at any time later to refund our bonded indebtedness at a lower rate we ought to give to Great Britain the same rate. I do not believe Great Britain or any other nation could ask for better or fairer treatment than that.

To my mind, the question as to who won the war and who made the greatest sacrifice is not involved here. There are two sides to that question, and I do not want to enter into a debate of it. England did everything she could. She did well, and I am not complaining about her. She was a worthy ally in that great contest. We did our duty, too, I think, and if Great Britain had said, "We need more money," if we had had the money in the Treasury, we would have loaned it to her. If we had it there now, belonging to the Government, I would be willing that it should be loaned to her at a lower rate; but we do not have it there. We did not have it there then. She said, "I must have more money." We said, "We will borrow some more money and loan it to you." We agreed then that she should pay us the same rate we had to pay. Was that fair? Was there anything wrong about that agreement? Is there any evidence of greed or the spirit of Shylock in that kind of an agreement? There was no coercion. The agreement was voluntarily entered into that she would pay us the same rate we had to pay to get the money.

The rate is a lower rate of interest than she pays to any other creditor on earth. She does not loan to her debtors at as low a rate as that. Some of the money we loaned to Great Britain she has loaned to Persia at 7 per cent. We heard to-day, or yesterday, on this floor that she had loaned to Australia at 5 per cent. She loaned to France. I am not informed as to what rate she is charging France, but she took security from France—gold, yellow gold—and has it in her vaults now. We did not demand anything of her in the way of security and I do not say that in the way of criticism. I think we did what one brother in a great contest ought to have done for another.

She looked at it that way then. If England is hard up, in financial distress, I would not want to crowd her. I am willing that we should wait; but she has not played the baby act. She is not here now saying, "We can not pay this." She is not a bankrupt nation. It is not a question of charity with her.

Then, Mr. President, I have been thinking what I would ask as an American citizen if things had been reversed. Suppose we had gone to Great Britain at a time of great distress, at a time when our backs were to the wall, and said to Great Britain, "Lend us some money. We must have it," and then England had said, "We haven't any money, but we will borrow it"; and suppose we made the kind of an agreement with her that she has made with us. Suppose it were just reversed and we owed England money, and her people with bended backs were paying taxes in order that she might pay 4½ per cent interest for that money. I want to say to you, Mr. President, that as an American citizen I would not ask her to charge us any less than 4½ per cent. I would insist that our Government pay her 4½ per cent. There is nothing unfair about it.

I resent the idea that we are trying to drive a hard bargain. We are not. I do not suppose there is anyone in this country who wants in any way to create any situation which would be a hardship on England. But we are not called upon to borrow money from our people and to have them labor from early until late to pay taxes in order to pay interest at the rate of 4½ per cent and lend it to anybody at 3 per cent.

This settlement amounts to a forgiving of a part of the debt, and if England were not able to pay, I would not object to forgiving part of it. Senators say we are not giving up any of the principal of this debt, and that is true; but in substance is not the interest just the same as the principal? What is the difference? We have to pay interest. We can not get away from paying our interest. The obligation the United States owes on its bonds is just as honorable, as far as the interest is concerned, as the obligation to pay the principal of the debt. Why is not that true of Great Britain?

It is said that the money that was borrowed was spent in the United States. Where else could it have been spent? We can turn the tables and say that if we had not had the things here for them to buy they would not have carried on the war half as long. I do not make that claim, but it would offset the claim that to a great extent she spent the money here in buying the goods used in carrying on the war. This is practically the only place in the world where she could get those supplies.

She got the supplies here as cheaply as she could have bought them anywhere in the world. She paid more than she should have paid, and so did we. It is no argument to say she paid high prices. We paid high prices. Men profiteered on the Government of the United States, but we do not offer that as a reason why we should not pay our bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if the bonds which the British Government is to give us will be negotiable, because I understand that some Senators believe those bonds will be negotiable, and they object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska because the bonds could not be sold with an average rate of interest but would have to have a specific rate. My understanding is that the bonds are not negotiable. If they are, then the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is impracticable, because the bonds could not be negotiated under such a condition.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is agreed to, nobody would think of buying them, even though they were negotiable under the provisions of the bill. But I want to be frank with the Senator and say that my opinion is that the provision here allowing England to pay in United States bonds issued after April 6, 1917, together with the privilege of paying the interest one-half in bonds and one-half in cash, will make those bonds nonnegotiable. It is only the provisions of the law which would make them nonnegotiable. The bonds will be paid to the United States of America just as would the I O U's held to-day by our Government.

But I hope the Government of the United States will not sell them. I think that if they were sold, perhaps to people in foreign countries, or to our own citizens, and anything should happen in the way of war, there would always be that moral obligation on the part of our Government to take care of those bonds sold to individual citizens of this country. Talk about getting out of entangling alliances; if they were sold, there is no doubt but that that would take us into such entanglements.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator contend that we are obligated to protect the investors in German marks?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. COUZENS. To protect those who speculated in German marks when they were bringing a high price, and have since gone down?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe there is any such obligation on the Government.

Mr. COUZENS. Under the law is it not possible to sell the bonds after the 10 years have passed, and when the uncertainty as to payments and of interest has been settled? In other words, it seemed to me that there was nothing in the bill which would prevent the bonds from being negotiated after the 10-year period was over, in any event.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing to prevent them from being negotiated, but I think it would be very unwise for our Government to sell them.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course, if this amendment is agreed to, it makes it absolutely impossible.

Mr. SMOOT. The Government of the United States has never purchased one German mark.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I suggest, first, in response to the Senator from Michigan, that the bonds which will be taken will be nonnegotiable, in my opinion.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. JOHNSON. Secondly, in my opinion, the Senator from Utah is entirely right in preferring that sort of an obligation as an economic proposition, and I will state the reason. There is a vast difference between bonds that will be received by the United States and locked in her coffers and bonds that would be split into infinitesimal fractions and put in the hands of our people. Once you split ten billion or eleven billion of bonds of Great Britain and put them in the hands of the people of this country, just the situation which has been suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will arise, and we will be inextricably involved in every adventure that Great Britain shall take in the future.

We have to-day an example. Every peasant in France has a Russian bond. Every mad adventure that France has undertaken with Russia has been because her people hold those Russian bonds. I never would vote for any measure which would result in placing $11,000,000,000 of securities of any nation on the face of the earth going into the hands of our people, because we would be involved so that we would never get out. So I hope, as I believe and as I think I may say from a reading of the law, that these bonds will be nonnegotiable, and that they will be held by the United States governmentally, and that the Government will never put $11,000,000,000 of foreign bonds into the hands of our people in small fractions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I fully agree with the opinion expressed by the Senator from California, that these bonds will be nonnegotiable. It is perfectly apparent that they are not negotiable by reason of at least two provisions, namely:

The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the British Government to make these payments in three-year periods.

An instrument is not negotiable with respect to which there is any doubt as to when it becomes due. A further provision makes them nonnegotiable, namely:

For the first five years one-half the interest may be deferred and added to the principal.

That is to say, at the pleasure of Great Britain it may or may not do so. We do not know what the amount of the principal will be; and such knowledge is a very essential provision of any negotiable instrument. So that, although they may be assignable, they are not negotiable in the commercial sense.

Mr. SMOOT. While we are citing provisions, there is another provision, found on page 3, where it is provided:

The British Government shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on any interest date upon 90 days' previous notice.

That, of course, would make them virtually nonnegotiable.

Mr. REED of Missouri. There is another provision—that they can pay in bonds, if they want.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that has been mentioned.

Mr. REED of Missouri. In Liberty bonds?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the language contained in lines 4 to 12, inclusive, on page 3, and insert:

Interest to be payable upon the unpaid balances on December 15 and June 15 of each year at a rate which shall be the average rate of interest paid by the United States for the same year upon bonds issued by the United States since April 15, 1917, and still outstanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the amendment, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] on account of illness. He has a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that my pair, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], would vote as I have voted. I will therefore allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], who is unavoidably detained, has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. If the Senator from New Jersey were present, he would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 61, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	France	La Follette	Trammell
Borah	Gerry	McKellar	Walsh, Mass.
Brookhart	Harrison	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Broussard	Heflin	Reed, Mo.
Couzens	Hitchcock	Smith
Dial	Johnson	Stanley

NAYS—61.

Ball	Gooding	Myers	Smoot
Bayard	Hale	Nelson	Spencer
Bursum	Harreld	New	Stanfield
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Capper	Kellogg	Page	Swanson
Caraway	Keyes	Phipps	Townsend
Colt	King	Pittman	Underwood
Curtis	Lenroot	Poindexter	Warren
Dillingham	Lodge	Pomerene	Watson
Ernst	McCormick	Ransdell	Weller
Fernald	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Williams
Fletcher	McKinley	Robinson	Willis
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Sheppard
George	McNary	Shields
Glass	Moses	Shortridge

NOT VOTING—14.

Brandegee	Elkins	Nicholson	Simmons
Culberson	Harris	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kendrick	Owen
Edge	Ladd	Pepper

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment to strike out the clause which permits Great Britain to pay in the bonds of the United States, another amendment providing that the bonds shall be made payable to bearer and shall be in form fully negotiable, another amendment that the interest shall be not less than 3½ per cent per annum during the first 10 years, and still another amendment which would require the payment of the full amount of the interest from year to year without deferring it and adding it to the principal.

But when the Senate sees fit in its wisdom to vote down a proposition which would require Great Britain merely to return to us dollar for dollar that we have paid out or must hereafter pay out, I regard it as useless to offer the amendments. The last thing I want to do is unnecessarily to take the time of the Senate. I think the vote just taken will be regarded as conclusive of the fact that the Senate has made up its mind to ratify the agreement and to swallow the proposition just as it is. Of course, the Senate has the right to come to that conclusion and I am making the statement which I make now merely in explanation of failure to offer the other amendments. I think it would be useless to do so.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I have no other amendments to offer. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: I move to strike out all after the enacting clause on page 1, and all of lines 1 and 2 on page 2, and in line 3 the words, "Provided, That," so the bill would start with the words, "The settlement of indebtedness," and so forth.

This is simply for the purpose of making the text reasonably sensible. The language which I seek to strike out has absolutely no meaning whatever. The language is not only useless and perhaps harmless but it makes the measure itself the most inartistic one. This is a great historic act of the Congress of the United States and to say that "the first proviso to the act approved February 9, 1922, is amended so as to read as follows," and then make that proviso include the settlement with Great Britain, is an absurd proposition.

I believe that if Senators would give their attention to the matter for a moment they would not offer any opposition at all to this amendment. It does not change the meaning at all, but the language is absurd as it now reads. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is afraid that if we adopt the amendment it might offend the sensibilities of the House, but I can not doubt that if the attention of the authors of the bill were called to the matter they would see the impropriety of introducing the bill in the manner in which they presented it and would be glad to have the language stricken out. I hope there will be no opposition to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment, on page 2, after the word "schedule" in line 11, to strike out the words "subject to the right of the British Government to make these payments in three-year periods," and also to strike out the first three lines on page 3, giving the British Government the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on any interest date upon 90 days' previous notice, and also an amendment fixing the rate of interest at 4¼ per cent. But inasmuch as the Senate has already voted substantially on the proposition and I can see what the result would be, I content myself by asking to have the bill printed in the RECORD at this point as it would read if my amendments were agreed to. I do not ask for a vote on it.

There being no objection, pages 1, 2, and 3 of the bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD showing the amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. McKELLAR, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That the settlement of indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, as follows:

Principal of notes to be refunded	$4,074,818,358.44
Interest accrued and unpaid up to December 15, 1922, at the rate of 4¼ per cent	629,836,106.99
	4,704,654,465.43
Deduct payments made October 16, 1922, and November 15, 1922, with interest at 4¼ per cent thereon to December 15, 1922	100,526,379.69
	4,604,128,085.74
To be paid in cash	4,128,085.74
Total principal of indebtedness as of December 15, 1922, for which British Government bonds are to be issued to the United States Government at par	4,600,000,000.00

"The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on a fixed schedule. The amount of the first year's installment will be $23,000,000, and these annual installments will increase with due regularity during the life of the bonds, until in the sixty-second year the amount of the installment will be $175,000,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

"'Interest is to be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rate, on December 15 and June 15 of each year: At the rate of 4½ per cent per annum payable semiannually until final payment, as shown by the following table of payments:

	Statement of amount of interest payable to the United States on account of the proposed refunding bonds to be issued by Great Britain, money at 4½ per cent per annum.[1]	Schedule of annual principal installments to be paid on account of principal.[2]	Total interest and principal.
1	$195,500,000	$23,000,000	$218,500,000
2	194,522,500	23,000,000	217,522,500
3	193,545,000	24,000,000	217,545,000
4	192,525,000	25,000,000	217,525,000
5	191,462,500	25,000,000	216,462,500
6	190,400,000	27,000,000	217,400,000
7	189,252,500	27,000,000	216,252,500
8	188,105,000	28,000,000	216,105,000
9	186,915,000	28,000,00	214,915,000
10	185,725,000	30,000,000	215,725,000
11	184,450,000	32,000,000	216,450,000
12	183,090,000	32,000,000	215,090,000
13	181,730,000	32,000,000	213,730,000
14	180,370,000	32,000,000	212,370,000
15	179,010,000	37,000,000	216,010,000
16	177,437,500	37,000,000	214,437,500
17	175,865,000	37,000,000	212,865,000
18	174,292,500	42,000,000	216,292,500
19	172,507,500	42,000,000	214,507,500
20	170,722,500	42,000,000	212,722,500
21	168,937,500	42,000,000	210,937,500
22	167,152,500	46,000,000	213,152,500
23	165,197,500	46,000,000	211,197,500
24	163,242,500	46,000,000	209,242,500
25	161,287,500	51,000,000	212,287,500
26	159,120,000	51,000,000	210,120,000
27	156,952,500	51,000,000	207,952,500
28	154,785,000	53,000,000	207,785,000
29	152,532,500	55,000,000	207,532,500
30	150,195,000	57,000,000	207,195,000
31	147,772,500	60,000,000	207,772,500
32	145,222,500	64,000,000	209,222,500
33	142,502,500	64,000,000	206,502,500
34	139,782,500	64,000,000	203,782,500
35	137,062,500	67,000,000	204,062,500
36	134,215,000	70,000,000	204,215,000
37	131,240,000	72,000,000	203,240,000
38	128,180,000	74,000,000	202,180,000
39	125,035,000	78,000,000	203,035,000
40	121,720,000	78,000,000	199,720,000
41	118,405,000	83,000,000	201,405,000
42	114,877,500	85,000,000	199,877,500
43	111,265,000	89,000,000	200,265,000
44	107,482,500	94,000,000	201,482,500
45	103,487,500	96,000,000	199,487,500
46	99,407,500	100,000,000	199,407,500
47	95,157,500	105,000,000	200,157,500
48	90,695,000	110,000,000	200,695,000
49	86,020,000	114,000,000	200,020,000
50	81,175,000	119,000,000	200,175,000
51	76,117,500	123,000,000	199,117,500
52	70,890,000	127,000,000	197,890,000
53	65,492,500	132,000,000	197,492,500
54	59,882,500	136,000,000	195,882,500
55	54,102,500	141,000,000	195,102,500
56	48,110,000	146,000,000	194,110,000
57	41,905,000	151,000,000	192,905,000
58	35,487,500	156,000,000	191,487,500
59	28,857,500	162,000,000	190,857,500
60	21,972,500	167,000,000	188,972,500
61	14,875,000	175,000,000	189,875,000
62	7,437,500	175,000,000	182,437,500
Total	8,172,665,000	4,600,000,000	12,772,665,000

[1] As furnished by Secretary Mellon.
[2] From page 3544, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

"Provided, That should the United States at any time be able to refund any of her World War bonds for less than an average of 4½ per cent, the United States shall make good to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the amount of any such reduction of interest."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 10, and on page 3, lines 1, 4, 10, 13, and 15, strike out the single quotation marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. BRANDEGEE's name was called). I desire to make the announcement at this time that the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], who has asked me to announce that if he were present he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I understand that my pair, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], if present, would vote for the bill. I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when Mr. PEPPER's name was called). I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is unable to be present, being detained by sickness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when the name of Mr. SIMMONS was called). I again announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unable to be present, being at home sick. He is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. My colleague has telegraphed me to say to the Senate that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I inquire whether the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from South Dakota asked me if he were absent from the Chamber at the time the vote was taken on the passage of the bill to announce that if present he would vote for the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], all of whom are necessarily absent, if present, would vote for the bill.

The result was announced—yeas 70, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—70.

Ball	George	McNary	Shortridge
Bayard	Glass	Moses	Smith
Brookhart	Gooding	Myers	Smoot
Broussard	Hale	Nelson	Spencer
Bursum	Harreld	New	Stanfield
Calder	Harrison	Oddie	Stanley
Cameron	Johnson	Overman	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Sutherland
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Page	Swanson
Colt	Kellogg	Phipps	Townsend
Couzens	Keyes	Pittman	Underwood
Curtis	King	Poindexter	Warren
Dial	Lenroot	Pomerene	Watson
Dillingham	Lodge	Ransdell	Weller
Ernst	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Williams
Fernald	McCumber	Robinson	Willis
Fletcher	McKinley	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Shields

NAYS—13.

Ashurst	Heflin	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Borah	Hitchcock	Reed, Mo.
France	La Follette	Trammell
Gerry	McKellar	Walsh, Mass.

NOT VOTING—13.

Brandegee	Elkins	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Culberson	Harris	Norbeck
Cummins	Kendrick	Pepper
Edge	Ladd	Simmons

So the bill was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments paid by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That the settlement of indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, as follows:

Principal of notes to be refunded		$4,074,818,358.44
Interest accrued and unpaid up to Dec. 15, 1922, at the rate of 4½ per cent		629,836,106.99
		4,704,654,465.43
Deduct payments made Oct. 16, 1922, and Nov. 15, 1922, with interest at 4½ per cent thereon to Dec. 15, 1922		100,526,379.69
		4,604,128,085.74
To be paid in cash		4,128,085.74
Total principal of indebtedness as of Dec. 15, 1922, for which British Government bonds are to be issued to the United States Government at par		4,600,000,000.00

"The principal of the bonds shall be paid in anual installments on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the British Government to make these payments in three-year periods. The amount of the first year's installment will be $23,000,000 and these annual installments will increase with due regularity during the life of the bonds until, in the sixty-second year, the amount of the installment will be $175,000,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

"The British Government shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on any interest date upon 90 days' previous notice.

"Interest is to be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rates, on December 15 and June 15 of each year: At the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932, thereafter at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually until final payment.

"For the first five years one-half the interest may be deferred and added to the principal, bonds to be issued therefor similar to those of the original issue.

"Any payment of interest or principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest—is hereby approved and authorized, and settlements with other governments indebted to the United States are hereby authorized to be made upon such terms as the commission, created by the act approved February 9, 1922, may believe to be just, subject to the approval of the Congress by act or joint resolution.

"SEC. 2. That the first section of the act entitled 'An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes,' approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"'That a World War Foreign Debt Commission is hereby created consisting of eight members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall serve as chairman, and seven of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than four members so appointed shall be from the same political party.'

"SEC. 3. That the provisions of section 2 of this act shall not affect the tenure of office of any person who is a member of the World War Foreign Debt Commission at the time this act takes effect."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate agree to any conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the pending bill, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. WILLIAMS conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thought there was an understanding that upon the passage of the debt funding bill the Senate would adjourn until 11 or 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that after the motion I have made shall have been acted upon an adjournment will be taken.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator's motion can not be acted upon this evening.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall insist upon my motion being disposed of to-night. I have moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12817.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who, I observe, has left the Chamber. Therefore I am compelled to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Repeating the previous announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Ashurst	Broussard	Dial	Gerry
Bayard	Capper	Fletcher	Glass
Brookhart	Caraway	George	Harrison
Heflin	McKellar	Robinson	Swanson
Hitchcock	McNary	Sheppard	Trammell
Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Shields	Walsh, Mass.
King	Overman	Smith
La Follette	Pittman	Stanley

NAYS—38.

Ball	Johnson	Moses	Spencer
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Kellogg	New	Sutherland
Cameron	Keyes	Oddie	Townsend
Colt	Lenroot	Page	Warren
Curtis	Lodge	Phipps	Watson
Dillingham	McCormick	Ransdell	Weller
Ernst	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Fernald	McKinley	Shortridge
Hale	McLean	Smoot

NOT VOTING—28.

Borah	France	Myers	Reed, Mo.
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Nicholson	Simmons
Couzens	Gooding	Norbeck	Stanfield
Culberson	Harreld	Owen	Underwood
Cummins	Harris	Pepper	Wadsworth
Edge	Kendrick	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Ladd	Pomerene	Williams

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 12817.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator if it is his purpose to go on with the bill to-night if the motion prevails?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not. I am perfectly willing to have an adjournment taken when the motion is agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. To what hour?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am ready to adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, Mr. President; with that understanding I make no further objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that a reprint of the bill may be made, showing the amendments as reported by the committee and certain amendments which I expect to propose to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 17, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 16, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord reigneth. There is but one God, and in the hollow of His hand all things rest. Come to our waiting hearts and surround us this day with the circle of Thy care. May we so labor that nothing of Thy Providence shall be wasted upon us. Give us a growing insight into all problems which are related to the happiness and prosperity of our country. Establish all our ways in the paths of Thy truth. Comfort the sick and the distressed with Thy grace. Bless and keep those whose dumb entreaties are written on their hearts and whose language can not be told. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SENATE BILL LAID ON THE TABLE.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3790) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., for the disposal of the surplus waters of Milk River, Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, not needed by the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation for domestic or irrigation purposes, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill S. 3790 be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 84.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate No. 124 to the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, be authorized to agree to striking out the following language from said amendment: "at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill of the following title:

H. R. 13351. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his descretion, to deliver to the Daughtess of the American Revolution of the State of South Carolina the silver service which was used upon the battleship South Carolina.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3220) to amend sections 2, 5, 11, 12, 15, 19, 29, and 30 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2023) defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes, be rescinded and that the Secretary be authorized and directed to reenroll the bill with the following amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," insert "in the years 1918 and 1919."

Amend the title so as to read, "An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States in the years 1918 and 1919 for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes."

LIQUOR SHIPMENTS TO DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of House Resolution 503.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of House Resolution 503.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman will have control of the time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not insistent on it, but I thought the House would prefer a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee means after the committee is discharged?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I thought the House would prefer a brief statement at this time.

The SPEAKER. There is no debate on the motion to discharge the committee except by unanimous consent. If the committee is discharged the gentleman will have an hour, and the Chair presumes that the gentleman from Tennessee referred to that time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. At some time before it is finally disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan for three minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss the merits of the resolution further than to say that it is one of two resolutions introduced by me 10 days ago, which went to the Judiciary Committee, and were very promptly handled by that committee and referred to the department for information. That information has come back from both departments—from the State Department quite full and complete and the Treasury Department complying in part. I want to make it clear to the House that my action in asking to have the committee discharged is not to be taken in any way as a reflection on that committee or as indicating any reluctance on their part to have acted upon it. My action is in accord with the consent of the chairman. The committee is busily engaged in important matters, and this is a matter the House can handle whether reported or not. There is no question as to what would have been the action of the committee, but rather than to wait until the next session of the committee on Monday, and rather than to unnecessarily take up their time on what is merely a formal matter, I have taken this course. There is no question but that the committee would have acted favorably if I had asked action by them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 503.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, as follows:

1. What shipments of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes consigned to representatives of foreign governments having a diplomatic status in the United States have been imported into the United States since January 17, 1920, giving in connection with each such shipment the name and office of the consignee, the country to which he was accredited, the kind and quantity of liquor, the place from which shipped to the United States, to whom delivered by the Customs Service, and the date of such delivery to the consignee or his representative.

2. What rules or regulations, if any, have been adopted or put in force by the Treasury Department or any officer thereof since January 17, 1920, with reference to the importation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes for representatives of foreign governments having a diplomatic status in the United States.

3. If any such rules or regulations have been so adopted or put in force, or any such liquors have been so imported since January 17, 1920, under the authority of what law, if any, the Treasury Department acted in adopting or putting in effect such rules or regulations or in permitting such importations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the resolution, if it is not too late. This is the first time it has been reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not too late.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The latter clause calls for an opinion for the reason that it asks the Secretary of the Treasury to state under what law, if any, the Treasury Department acted in adopting or putting in effect rules or regulations permitting importations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that point of order does not lie. It simply asks under what law the Treasury Department acted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It would require a construction of the law, would it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present. This is a very interesting question.

The SPEAKER. There is no debate permitted on the motion. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ansorge	Fairfield	Lee, N. Y.	Schall
Anthony	Fess	Little	Scott, Mich.
Barkley	Fish	McClintic	Scott, Tenn.
Bird	Focht	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sears
Bland, Ind.	Free	McLaughlin, Pa.	Siegel
Bond	Gallivan	Martin	Sinclair
Bowers	Garner	Mead	Slemp
Brand	Glynn	Michaelson	Smith, Mich.
Brennan	Gould	Mills	Smithwick
Brooks, Ill.	Graham, Pa.	Montague	Stiness
Brooks, Pa.	Griffin	Moore, Ill.	Stoll
Burdick	Hawes	Morin	Strong, Pa.
Burke	Himes	Mott	Sullivan
Burtness	Humphreys, Miss.	Mudd	Summers, Wash.
Burton	Hutchinson	Nelson, J. M.	Sweet
Cable	Johnson, Ky.	Newton, Mo.	Tague
Carew	Johnson, Miss.	Nolan	Taylor, Ark.
Chandler, N. Y.	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Brien	Taylor, Colo.
Chandler, Okla.	Kahn	O'Connor	Taylor, N. J.
Classon	Keller	Overstreet	Thomas
Cockran	Kennedy	Park, Ga.	Thorpe
Codd	Kiess	Parks, Ark.	Tinkham
Connolly, Pa.	Kindred	Paul	Vestal
Cullen	King	Perlman	Volk
Curry	Kitchin	Rayburn	Ward, N. Y.
Davis, Minn.	Kleczka	Reber	Wheeler
Dominick	Kline, N. Y.	Riddick	Winslow
Drane	Knight	Rodenberg	Yates
Dupré	Kopp	Rose	Zihlman
Dyer	Kraus	Rossdale
Edmonds	Kreider	Ryan

The SPEAKER. On this roll 307 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of House Resolution 503.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on February 3 I introduced two resolutions of inquiry relating to the importation of liquors for the use of embassies of foreign governments, one resolution calling for information from the State Department and the other from the Treasury Department. At that time I made the following statement with reference to the purpose of the resolutions:

Of late the importation and use of liquors for foreign embassies and legations has been the subject of country-wide discussion. This has been particularly true in Washington, where the problem of enforcement of the eighteenth amendment is said to be acutely affected by the presence of these liquors. To what extent it really is affected is uncertain, so conflicting are the various published reports. The other day the President said the question of the amount of liquor to be received by the diplomatic corps here is a matter for Congress to consider rather than the Executive. It is time Congress and the country knew the facts about this, knew whether that which has been permitted as a courtesy is being used as a cover for abuses seriously contributing to scandalous disregard of the fundamental law of our land. When Congress has from the departments the authentic facts as to the extent of such importations and the law under which it is being done, we can decide better what, if anything, is necessary to safeguard the courtesy or to end the abuses.

My resolution asks of the Treasury Department a statement in detail of all importations of liquors for the diplomatic corps during the last three years under national prohibition, the regulations governing such importations, and under what law the department acts. Of the State Department the resolution asks: What regulations have been adopted, what certificates of identification have been issued, and under what law the department acts?

House Resolution 503 has been read by the Clerk; House Resolution 504 is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, as follows:

1. What rules or regulations, if any, have been adopted or promulgated by the Department of State or any officer thereof with reference to the importation into the United States and transportation therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes for representatives of foreign governments having diplomatic status in the United States since January 17, 1920?

2. To what representatives of foreign governments having a diplomatic status in the United States have certificates of identification been issued by or on behalf of the Department of State since January 17, 1920, for the purpose of enabling such representatives to secure any such importations?

3. If any such rules or regulations have been so adopted or promulgated, or certificates of identification have been issued, under the authority of what law the Department of State acted?

Those resolutions went to the Committee on the Judiciary and, as is customary, the chairman of that committee asked the State and Treasury Departments for information with reference to them. The State Department furnished a response which appealed to me as complying fairly well with the resolutions. From the State Department there came copies of opinions rendered by the Attorney General covering the question of the law governing this matter. I ask unanimous consent at this point to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall insert these papers in full at this point in my remarks. They are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 10, 1923.

Hon. ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 6, 1923, inclosing a copy of House Resolution 504, which was introduced by Representative CRAMTON on February 3, 1923, and referred to your committee. You state that the committee will be glad to have any information or suggestions that this department would care to submit to it before acting upon this resolution.

I have the honor to state that I am entirely willing to furnish the committee all the information which I can properly transmit, and for this purpose the adoption of the resolution is unnecessary.

1. Regarding the inquiry concerning the rules and regulations, if any, adopted by the department or any officer thereof with reference to the importation into the United States and transportation therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes for representatives of foreign governments having a diplomatic status, I may observe that the administration of the law regarding this subject is, as you know, not vested in this department, and neither the Department of State nor any officer thereof has adopted or promulgated any rules or regulations with reference to the importation or transportation of intoxicating liquors belonging to diplomatic representatives of foreign governments.

2. As to the inquiry, "To what representatives of foreign governments having a diplomatic status in the United States have certificates of identification been issued by or on behalf of the Department of State since January 17, 1920, for the purpose of enabling such representatives to secure any such importations," I beg to say:

As you are doubtless aware, diplomatic officers accredited by foreign governments to the United States and received as such, together with the members of their missions, including their families and servants, are immune from arrest, and their baggage and property can not be distrained, seized, or attached. In this connection I may call your attention to the provisions of sections 4062 to 4065 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the inviolability of the person and property of diplomatic officers and their domestics and domestic servants. Section 4065 of the Revised Statutes provides that the immunities granted by the preceding section are not to "apply to any case where the person against whom the process is issued is a domestic servant of a public minister unless the name of the servant has, before the issuing thereof, been registered in the Department of State and transmitted by the Secretary of State to the marshal of the District of Columbia, who shall upon receipt thereof post the same in some public place in his office." It has been customary for many years for this department to issue, at the request of foreign diplomatic officers, certificates of identification for themselves or for their domestic servants duly registered in order that such persons might not experience difficulties in obtaining the immunities to which they are entitled.

Copies of the form of certificates of identification issued are inclosed. The department does not require a statement of the purposes for which these certificates are to be used, nor do the certificates that are issued indicate that they are to be used for any specific purpose.

Copies of requests for certificates showing that they are desired in order to secure diplomatic privileges and immunities and the purposes of the requests are transmitted to the Treasury Department for its information.

3. Concerning the inquiry as to the authority of law under which the department acts in such matters, I may state that it acts under the recognized principles of international law, the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to above, and the pertinent court decisions.

As of possible interest to you, I inclose copies of opinions of Attorney General Palmer dated May 8 and December 5, 1919, and of Acting Attorney General King dated January 12, 1920, concerning the immunity of diplomatic officers.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

(Inclosures: Form of certificate of identification for diplomatic officer. Same for employee of embassy or legation. Opinions of Attorney General Palmer of May 8 and December 5, 1919. Opinion of Acting Attorney General King of January 12, 1920.)

—

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that ——— ——— is the minister of ———, and that he is, therefore, entitled by the laws of the United States to the diplomatic privileges and immunities corresponding to his office.

———, ———.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington.

—

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that ——— ——— is an employee of the ——— Embassy; that he is duly registered in the Department of State in accordance with the provisions of article 4065 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and that he is therefore entitled to the diplomatic privileges and immunities corresponding to his functions.

———, ———.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington.

—

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, May 8, 1919.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 9, referring to the act of March 3, 1917, which was later made applicable to the District of Columbia, known as the Reed amendment, and to the provision of the act of November 21, 1918, to the effect that "no distilled, malt, vinous, or other intoxicating liquors shall be imported into the United States during the continuance of the present war and period of demobilization," and requesting an opinion on the following questions:

"1. Will a railroad or express company or other carrier be exempt from the penalty of the Reed amendment if it transports in interstate commerce a shipment of intoxicating liquors consigned to a diplomatic representative of a foreign country residing in the District of Columbia?

"2. Will a vendor or manufacturer of intoxicating liquors who accepts an order for intoxicating liquors from a diplomatic representative of a foreign country residing in the District of Columbia, and ships the same in interstate commerce into the District of Columbia, addressed to such diplomatic representative, be subject to penalty under the Reed amendment?

"3. Will a shipment of intoxicating liquors from abroad, addressed to a diplomatic representative in the District of Columbia, be permitted to come into this country and be transported to the District of Columbia, in spite of the provisions of the act of November 21, 1918?"

To answer the questions thus submitted, it is necessary to consider the so-called Reed amendment of March 3, 1917, afterwards made applicable to the District of Columbia, and the act of November 21, 1918, which prohibits the importation of intoxicating liquors of any kind during the period of war and demobilization.

The Reed amendment is directed only against the transportation of liquor in interstate commerce. It subjects to its penalties all persons, including carriers, who cause intoxicating liquors to be transported from any point in the United States into the District of Columbia for beverage purposes. It does not, however, apply to foreign commerce, and hence does not prohibit the transportation of such liquors from a foreign country to any point within the United States.

The act of November 21, 1918, on the other hand, does not relate to interstate commerce or transportation, but, in the broadest terms, prohibits the importation into this country of intoxicating liquors. The two acts together make it unlawful to cause liquor to be transported into the District of Columbia from any point within the United States or to import it from a foreign country. Carriers who knowingly transport such liquors from within the United States into the District of Columbia are subject to the penalties of the Reed amendment. In the case of the importation of liquor from foreign countries, however, the offense consists of bringing it into this country, and a carrier who, as a part of the transportation from a foreign country to a point within the United States, transports it from the port of entry to its destination, transports it not in interstate commerce but in foreign commerce, and hence is not guilty of a violation of either the Reed amendment or the act of November 21, 1918. In such case, the latter act is violated by the importer when the liquor is brought into the United States.

While the law is as stated above, it is also true that diplomatic representatives of foreign countries, residing in the District of Columbia, are entitled to certain well-established immunities. Section 4063 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

"Whenever any writ or process is sued out or prosecuted by any person in any court of the United States, or of a State, or by any judge or justice, whereby the person of any public minister of any foreign prince or State, authorized and received as such by the President, or any domestic or domestic servant of any such minister, is arrested or imprisoned, or his goods or chattels are distrained, seized, or attached, such writ or process shall be deemed void."

By section 4065, however, it is provided that the section just quoted shall apply only to those domestic servants whose names shall have been registered in the Department of State and transmitted by the Secretary of State to the marshal of the District of Columbia. This statute is declaratory of recognized rules of international law.

It follows that while the importing into this country or the bringing into the District of Columbia in interstate commerce of intoxicating liquors is an offense against the laws referred to, no diplomatic representative of any foreign country received by the President and residing in the District of Columbia, nor any domestic servant of such representative whose name has been duly registered, is subject to arrest for such an offense. Intoxicating liquors belonging to such a diplomatic representative are a part of his goods and chattels, and as such are not subject to seizure or detention. This immunity does not extend, however, to persons other than the representative himself and his registered domestic servant who may be found transporting liquors from any point within the United States into the District of Columbia, although such liquors may be the property of a foreign diplomatic representative and are being transported for delivery to him.

It is unlawful to sell intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia. It would be scarcely claimed that an indictment under this law could be defeated by showing that the sale was made to a diplomatic representative of a foreign country. Likewise, it is unlawful to cause intoxicating liquors to be transported from Baltimore, for instance, to Washington. And I apprehend that one could not successfully defend against an indictment for such transportation by showing that the liquors transported were the goods and chattels of a foreign diplomatic representative.

To illustrate the principle, a foreign ambassador could not be indicted for a violation of the game laws of any of the States. But this would not give immunity to any American citizen who should invite him to a hunting party conducted in disregard of the game laws.

In accordance with the law as above stated, I answer your questions as follows:

1. A railroad or express company or other carrier is not exempt from the penalty of the Reed amendment if it transports in interstate commerce a shipment of intoxicating liquors consigned to a diplomatic representative residing in the Distrct of Columba.

2. A vendor or manufacturer of intoxicating liquors who accepts an order for intoxicating liquors from a diplomatic representative of a foreign country residing in the District of Columbia and ships the same in interstate commerce into the District of Columbia addressed to such diplomatic representative is subject to the penalty of the Reed amendment.

3. Laws prohibiting importation are enforced by criminal prosecutions and by seizure and forfeiture of goods. They can not be enforced against a diplomatic representative, who is immune from arrest and whose goods and chattels are not subject to seizure. It follows that a shipment of liquors from abroad, addressed to a diplomatic representative in the District of Columbia, can not be seized and molested, and hence its entry must be permitted. Having thus entered the country, its transportation from the seaport to its destination is an incident of foreign and not interstate commerce, and hence not prohibited.

Respectfully,

A. MITCHELL PALMER, Attorney General.

—

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, December 5, 1919.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 2 calling my attention to recent prohibition legislation in connection with the opinion given you on May 8, 1919.

At the time the opinion referred to was given the statutes involved were the so-called Reed amendment, which prohibited the shipment of intoxicating liquors into States whose laws prohibited the sale and manufacture of such liquors, the later act which made the provisions of that act applicable to the District of Columbia, and the act of November 21, 1918, which prohibited the importation of intoxicating liquors into the United States. I held at that time that while the importation of intoxicating liquors was prohibited the method of enforcing the prohibition was a seizure of the liquors; and since the goods and chattels of diplomatic representatives of foreign countries were immune from seizure, the importation of liquors by such diplomatic representatives could not be prevented. I further held that the only Federal law affecting the right to transport liquors was the Reed amendment, which was limited in its operations to the shipments in interstate commerce. And since goods consigned in a foreign country to a diplomatic representative in Washington were in foreign and not interstate commerce, the Reed amendment had no application; and that the railroad company which transported the liquors from the seaport to Washington being engaged in foreign commerce was not guilty of a violation of the Reed amendment.

Title I of the recent prohibition enforcement act relates alone to the enforcement of the act of November 21, 1918, and does not in any way affect the questions involved. Title II of the prohibition enforcement act, however, which goes into effect contemporaneously with the prohibition amendment, makes it unlawful to transport liquor within the United States without regard to whether the transportation be intrastate, interstate, or foreign commerce. I am, therefore, constrained to the view that when that act becomes effective it will be unlawful for any common carrier to transport from the seaport to Washington any intoxicating liquors intended for beverage purposes, although they be consigned to a diplomatic representative of a foreign country.

Of course, as you suggest, on account of the immunity of diplomatic representatives from arrest and the immunity of their goods and chattels from seizure such representatives can not be prevented from transporting to Washington personally and through their registered servants such intoxicating liquors as they may bring into the country.

Respectfully,

A. MITCHELL PALMER, Attorney General.

—

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1920.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 29, referring to yours of November 2, 1919, and inclosing copy of a note, dated December 13, 1919, from the Norwegian Minister asking to be informed of the status of consular and diplomatic representatives in this country with respect to the prohibition laws of the United States. I presume the reference is to such status when Title II of the recent national prohibition act and the eighteenth amendment go into effect. If you will refer to my letter of December 5, in answer to yours of December 2, you will see that I then expressed my views on this question. The importation of intoxicating liquors will be unlawful, but since foreign ministers are immune from arrest and their goods and chattels immune from seizure or detention they can not be prevented from bringing liquors into any port of the United States, nor can they be prevented from personally, or through their registered servants, transporting such liquors from the seaport to Washington. This immunity, however, can not be extended to a common carrier who is subject to the laws of the United States. In other words, it can not be said that because a foreign minister may without interference from this Government transport liquors that this licenses a common carrier to transport them for him when such transportation is forbidden by the law. The act of Congress is as broad as it can be made, and there is no authority in the executive department of the Government to make an exception to the prohibition against transportation which Congress has not seen fit to make. This, in connection with my letter of December 5, I think fully answers your question.

Respectfully,

ALEX. C. KING, Acting Attorney General.

I wish to call attention particularly at this time to their purport and to their essential points. The Attorney General's opinion, as will be seen, points out that under section 4063 of the Revised Statutes the persons and property of ministers from foreign countries, and of any domestic or domestic servant of such ministers, are immune from arrest or seizure. Any foreign minister duly accredited, his domestic or domestic servants, can not be arrested for any offense against our laws and his property can not be seized. Further, the Attorney General holds that under the prohibition amendment and Title II of the Volstead Act the importation of liquor and the transportation of liquor for a foreign minister or his domestics or domestic servants is unlawful and in violation of the law, but that because of the statute of immunity such person can not be arrested and liquor in his possession can not be seized; but the opinion makes it clear, states directly, that the importation even by one enjoying such immunity is unlawful under the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment. Further, that a common carrier who transports such liquors would be subject to the penalties of the law, because the immunity would not be extended to the common carrier. He does not say—it was not in issue—but I assume that what he says of a common carrier would be true as well of a private carrier hired for a particular trip.

The Secretary of the Treasury has furnished much of the information requested, has pointed out their procedure, and submitted a circular which I shall insert in the RECORD, under which it appears that as soon as the Attorney General's opinion was available the Treasury Department changed their regulations as to handling shipments coming in for the diplomatic corps to the extent that such shipments should not be received through the customs without examination, but that it should be sufficient, so far as examination was concerned, to accept a statement of the diplomatic representative as to whether or not the shipment contained intoxicating liquors. So that the customs officials have information when the shipments are received as to whether or not they contain intoxicating liquors. That information is sent to the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department stated that they felt they ought not to give out that information. I have discussed the matter since with officials of the Treasury Department, and they say that what action they would take in response to their resolution if passed by the House is not definite. That is, the fact that they have heretofore in their letter to the Judiciary Committee declined to give the information does not necessarily settle the question of what they will do in response to a request coming direct from the House. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and accompanying papers are as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, February 13, 1923.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I received your letter of February 6, 1923, transmitting a copy of House Resolution 503, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish information as to the importation and transportation of intoxicating liquors by diplomatic representatives of foreign governments in the United States. I see no occasion for the passage of this resolution, for the Treasury is quite prepared to furnish to the committee, without a formal resolution, any information that it can properly give as to the shipments or the rules and regulations which govern them.

I am inclosing for the use of the committee copies of the several Treasury decisions and letters of instruction issued since January 17, 1920, governing importations by diplomatic representatives of foreign governments in the United States, from which it appears that the same rules apply to intoxicating liquors as to other articles imported by foreign diplomats, with the exception that intoxicating liquors will be delivered only to persons holding credentials issued by the Department of State as foreign diplomatic officers. It is well established that diplomatic representatives of foreign governments are entitled to the free entry of goods as a matter of international comity and usage, and in order to provide all necessary safeguards against unauthorized importations by persons not enjoying the diplomatic status the Treasury requires that diplomatic credentials be presented and receives reports of all importations of intoxicating liquors by diplomatic representatives of foreign governments. The Treasury does not, of course, endeavor to exercise control over the disposition of intoxicating liquors delivered to diplomatic representatives of foreign governments, and it is manifest that it could not do so without infringing their diplomatic privileges and immunities. Nor could it properly give out any reports or other information as to importations of intoxicating liquors by foreign diplomatic representatives, in view of their diplomatic status and the protection of person and property to which that entitles them.

I trust that this furnishes the information which the committee desires.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

—

ART. 376. Baggage: The privilege of free entry (and exemption from examination) is extended to the baggage and other effects of the following officials, their families, suites, and servants:

Foreign ambassadors, ministers, chargés d'affaires.

Secretaries and naval, military, and other attachés at embassies and legations, high commissioners and consular officers accredited to this Government or en route to and from other countries to which accredited and whose governments grant reciprocal privileges to American officials of like grade accredited thereto.

Similar representatives of this Government abroad, including consular officers returning from their missions.

Other high officials of this and foreign governments.

Applications should be made to the Department of State for the free entry of the baggage of and extension of courtesy to all foreign ambassadors and other foreign officers. Application should also be made through the Department of State in the case of diplomatic and consular officers of the United States returning from their missions. Other high officials of this Government may, however, make application direct to the Treasury Department for the extension of courtesies.

In the absence of special authorization from the department prior to the arrival of any of the persons above referred to, collectors of customs may accord the privileges of this article to them upon presentation of their credentials or by otherwise establishing their identity.

Collectors will keep a record of the privileges granted, whether the subject of instructions from the department or not, containing the name of the person to whom granted, his rank or designation, the name of the vessel and date of arrival.

If by accident or unavoidable delay in shipment, the baggage or other effects of a person of any of the classes mentioned in this article shall arrive after him, the same may be passed free of duty upon his declaration (without examination).

The above article was amended by T. D. 38510, October 4, 1920, by the omission of the clauses in parentheses providing for the exemption from examination.

ART. 377. Imported articles: Members and attachés of foreign embassies and legations may receive articles imported for their personal or family use free of duty without examination, upon the department's instructions in each instance, which will be issued only upon the request of the Department of State.

Packages bearing the official seal of a foreign government will be admitted to free entry without examination. Costumes, regalia, and other articles for the official use of diplomatic or consular officers of a foreign government will be admitted free of duty.

Collectors will take charge of all packages addressed to diplomatic officers of foreign nations which arrive in advance of the receipt of instructions for free entry. Notification of such arrivals should be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury.

CUSTOMS.

(T. D. 38510.)

Baggage and effects—Customs regulations amended.

ARTICLE 376, CUSTOMS REGULATIONS OF 1915, AMENDED TO REQUIRE EXAMINATION OF BAGGAGE AND EFFECTS PERMITTED FREE ENTRY THEREUNDER.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 4, 1920.

To collectors of customs and others concerned:

In order to prevent the importation of intoxicating beverages in violation of the national prohibition act, as construed by the Attorney General, it has become necessary to require the examination of all baggage and effects for which free entry is granted pursuant to the provisions of article 376 of the Customs Regulations of 1915.

* * * * * * *

You will hereafter make an immediate report to the Secretary of the Treasury (Division of Customs) of all violations of the prohibition law which come to your attention as the result of such examinations.

As this practice will be a distinct departure from the custom that has prevailed of waiving examination when admitting effects to free entry, you should take immediate steps to impress upon your force the necessity for careful compliance with the amended regulations.

JOUETT SHOUSE, Assistant Secretary.

—

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, October 23, 1920.

(Secret and confidential. Division of Customs, Circular Letter No. —.)

Collectors of customs:

Please refer to Division of Customs Circular Letter No. 547, dated September 15, 1920, and to T. D. 38510, dated October 4, 1920, with regard to the examination of baggage and effects of foreign diplomatic officers in the United States, both accompanying them at the time of arrival in the United States and consigned to them for transportation in bond from the port of first arrival to Washington.

You are hereby advised and instructed that the language contained in the circular letter above referred to and in T. D. 38510, providing for the inspection of the effects of such persons enjoying diplomatic privileges and immunities, shall not be construed or interpreted to extend to the opening of the baggage or effects of such diplomatic officials for purposes of inspection, but shall consist only in their scrutiny and the statement of the diplomatic officer as to whether such baggage or effects contains intoxicating liquors, so that the reports required by T. D. 38510 may be furnished to the department. Members of the diplomatic corps shall not be detained or inconvenienced for the purpose of such inspection. On the contrary, their effects shall remain, as heretofore, inviolate, and every proper means shall be afforded them to facilitate their passage through ports of the United States.

With respect to property and effects of diplomatic officers consigned to them at their embassies or legations at Washington for transportation in bond from port of first arrival, instructions shall be sought in each instance from the department at Washington. No shipments of this character shall, in any instance, be permitted transportation in bond without specific direction from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. In each case where prior instructions have not been received from the department, collectors shall withhold approval of the release of such effects for transportation in bond until they shall have applied for and received the instructions of the department.

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

—

(Confidential. Division of Customs. Circular letter No. —.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 28, 1921.

Collectors of customs:

Please refer to T. D. 38510, dated October 4, 1920, amending article 376 of the Customs Regulations of 1915, to provide for examination of the baggage or effects of persons entitled to free entry thereunder.

You are hereby advised and instructed, with respect to persons other than those entitled to diplomatic privileges and immunities under section 4065 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, who receive free entry privileges under articles 376 and 377 of the Customs Regulations of 1915, to accept in lieu of examination, in the absence of circumstances which give reason to suspect a violation of the prohibition laws, the assurances of such persons that their baggage or effects do not contain liquor in violation of those laws. If, however, on any ground in an individual case you have reason to suspect that liquors are being imported by persons not entitled to diplomatic privileges and immunities under section 4065 of the Revised Statutes aforesaid, in violation of the law, the baggage or effects of such persons could be opened by you and examined, to establish definitely their contents. A detailed report of every such infraction of the law shall be promptly reported to the Secretary of the Treasury (Division of Customs) for instructions. No further action in any case shall be taken except upon receipt of and pursuant to specific orders from the department.

This instruction relates only to persons receiving free entry under articles 376 and 377 of the Customs Regulations who are subject to the laws of the United States. The procedure with regard to persons who are entitled to diplomatic privileges and immunities under section 4065 of the Revised Statutes aforesaid, which was outlined to you in secret and confidential instruction of October 23, 1920, will continue undisturbed.

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, from this information that the Treasury Department has the information and I urge that it ought to be furnished to the Congress. As I say, it ought to be furnished to the Congress, the body which has the responsibility of dealing with the question, as has been stated by the President. The Congress is entitled to have the authentic facts with respect to such importations. There is no desire on the part of anyone to begin an offensive campaign of overhauling the personal effects of diplomats, but truck-load shipments of liquor coming into Washington from Baltimore and coming in daylight through the streets of this city can only lead to confusion in the enforcement of the laws. Since I introduced the resolution I have had information, coming to me from official sources, of such incidents, and the statement that they caused great embarrassment to the police authorities of Washington in their endeavor to enforce this law. If one sees a truck load of liquor going through the streets of Washington with cases marked "whisky"—14 cases in one instance that I know of—one does not know whether it belongs to an embassy or not, and one may easily think that the laws are being put aside by everyone. The information ought to come to us as to the extent to which this is being carried on. The furnishing of the information called for by my resolution might cause some embarrassment to those legations which have shown most disregard of the law, but there must have been some embarrassment to those legations because of the publication, widespread, of such articles as the one I have in my hand taken from the New York Times, which article makes charges, mentions the embassies, and gives specific information. The whole question seems to me to be one which ought to be settled and cleaned up by a definite understanding of the situation.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it not an embarrassment to those representatives of countries who do observe the law to have a general understanding that all of the embassies in Washington are receiving large quantities? Is it not possible that full publicity would relieve of embarrassment those who have not abused the courtesies extended them by pinning the abuse on the real offenders?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from North Dakota states the situation very clearly. In the present situation, while we have the feeling that some of the embassies and legations have abused the courtesy, I think no one wants to be overcritical of any of the legations as to what they shall do at their own tables, but we do feel they ought not to make barrooms of their receptions. [Applause.] They ought not to go about among their friends—and I know of one authentic case given to me by a Member of this House—saying, "I will give you a quart of liquor." That is abuse of the courtesy that we want to end.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he meant no discourtesy toward the Committee on the Judiciary by moving to discharge the committee from further consideration of this resolution?

Mr. CRAMTON. Absolutely no discourtesy is intended.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is a somewhat summary method of getting the resolution before the House. As a matter of fact, I see from the resolution itself that it bears the date of February 3—introduced only 13 days ago. I happen to know the views of Members of the Committee on the Judiciary on this subject. A majority is in sympathy with the resolution. Did the gentleman, may I ask, make any effort to get a hearing before that committee on this resolution?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am glad the gentleman asked that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the country to know all the facts in connection with this matter and to keep the record straight.

Mr. CRAMTON. I had already spoken of this, but many have come in since, and I am glad the gentleman asked the question, because I want it absolutely understood that there is nothing in this question in any way of criticism of that committee. In fact, I might say this: It was because I knew very well what the Judiciary Committee would do if it were brought to their attention, and it seemed it was only a formality, inasmuch as the rules gave the right to call the matter up, and it seemed unnecessary to trouble them, especially as they have a number of very important matters up now.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the gentleman will yield further, the committee has been in session almost continuously since the introduction of the resolution, and has been engaged in discussing bills and measures that antedate the occasion when this measure was introduced, and so far as I know no special effort has been made to press the committee for a report, and certainly the committee has not been guilty of laches in not reporting this resolution.

Mr. CRAMTON. And very important measures are pending.

Mr. TILLMAN. I feel quite sure that the Judiciary Committee would have considered the resolution if the gentleman from Michigan had asked a hearing and requested us to report the same favorably from the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is not the slightest question in my mind as to that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely wanted to place that fact before the country in a clear and proper way. I am for the resolution, shall vote for its adoption, and I do not see why foreign embassies not guilty of permitting violations of our laws can object to the course we are about to take in this regard.

Mr. CRAMTON. And had I realized that any member of the committee would think that there was any reflection upon the committee, I would have proceeded in another way.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is not the real situation not what went to a legation, but whether anything went out, and is it not a very great insult to those legations to ask what went into their cellars?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, no more can go out than goes in, and a legation that had only a few cases in three years apparently has not abused the courtesy, but if a legation has had 500 or 1,000 cases coming into their cellars, we must assume that some went out somewhere.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does the gentleman think it is a fair assumption that it did not go into stock? It is not a fair thing to make an assumption against the legation and against foreign powers. It is a question of politeness to assume that everything in a legation they have the right to keep, and a resolution charging them with a crime is going into their private affairs in an outrageous way.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] suggested it clearly, the legations that have not abused the courtesy can be protected from the very general publicity that has resulted by giving this information definitely which will show to the Congress and the country who, if any, have abused the liberty.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Has there been any proof that anything has been taken from the legations?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I have proof—I do not want to take too much time—which I have here, and I have the police report of some shipments that have come in——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But it is a question of what goes from the legation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know but what the gentleman might consider that this was going from a legation. The New York Times——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not consider the New York Times——

Mr. CRAMTON. Probably the House may. In an article in the New York Times of February 4, 1923, and I will not read the name of any legation or embassy, but there it is stated that a certain embassy was the first to grasp the full strategic importance connected with prohibition as a social element in their influence, and during the arms conference it is said that this certain embassy laid in a whole cellar full of choicest liquors, and that the cellar gave out and had to be restocked, and that at one of the social functions given in honor of the Army and Navy a barroom was established in the embassy, with three bartenders in attendance serving Johnny Walkers and other drinks.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to cut this short as much as I can.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. For just a brief question.

Mr. BLANTON. The police records of this District show, as I understand it, that there are leakages of liquor from one of these embassies, in violation of the laws of the country. Does not the gentleman believe that, if that is the case, if some embassy is forgetting its duty, the duty that it owes to this Government to obey the law, does not the gentleman think that the name of the embassy may be shown here, so that the people here may know who is doing it?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not want to go into details too much to-day.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that Great Britain keeps tab on intoxicating liquors coming in from foreign countries and fixes an amount that may be received without the payment of duty?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I so understand. It is simply a matter of giving free entry to a certain amount, and they are charged duty on any further amount. I understand that Great Britain exercises control of such importations, and I am sure there is no impropriety in our doing so.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. It appears that the newspaper article that the gentleman referred to was the funny sheet of the New York Times. [Laughter.] Is not this whole thing a thoroughly ridiculous proposition? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the article in question is from the magazine section of the paper——

Mr. BRITTEN. Accompanied by a lot of funny pictures.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman thinks it is funny, but many of us think that to flaunt before a whole nation an excessive disregard of the Constitution of the United States under the guise of courtesy goes beyond the limits of courtesy. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, even where the word "liquor" is used it seems to me there is no necessity of losing our intelligence. [Applause.] The way in which this resolution has been handled is another evidence of the blundering incapacity of the majority side, which has been displayed ever since this Congress was assembled. The question of wet or dry is not involved in this resolution. That which is involved in it is the possibility of an insult to foreign countries. If the information asked for by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] in his resolution is given, what will we do with it?

Now, here is all there is to it: Under the comity existing between nations importations consigned to embassies are admitted without inquiry. It depends upon their good faith and honor whether they will violate the courtesies and comities.

I do not see what possible good the passage of this resolution can do in behalf of the dry cause. I do think I can see possibilities of friction and trouble and irritation on the part of foreign countries. We can not distinguish between foreign embassies. This resolution, in my opinion, ought to go to the table, but I am on the minority side. The majority party is responsible for the disposition that may be made of it. It seems to me that some responsible authority on the Republican side ought now to rise to the occasion and try to cure the blunder that they have already made. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I have only to say that the reading of the statement from the Treasury Department, which I put in the RECORD, will show that since the adoption of prohibition the Treasury Department has insisted upon examination to determine whether or not the goods coming in for these embassies contain intoxicating liquors.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. POU. If this resolution is adopted and the Secretary of the Treasury complies with the request, what is it proposed to do with the information?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Congress will have it for its consideration, and upon the nature of the information will depend the action that Congress will conclude ought to be taken. There are certain remedies to correct the situation. The Attorney General says we can not arrest and can not seize, but there is one remedy that I am now seeking to apply, and that is the remedy of publicity. [Applause.] And following that there are other remedies. I know that this situation can be cured if we get the facts before the country.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the resolution will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 113, not voting 125, as follows:

Abernethy	Dowell	Lankford	Shelton
Almon	Driver	Larsen, Ga.	Shreve
Anderson	Elliott	Lawrence	Sinclair
Andrews, Nebr.	Ellis	Layton	Sinnott
Anthony	Evans	Lazaro	Smith, Idaho
Appleby	Fairchild	Leatherwood	Smithwick
Arentz	Fields	Lineberger	Speaks
Aswell	Fish	Little	Sproul
Atkeson	Fisher	Logan	Stedman
Bankhead	Fitzgerald	Lowrey	Steenerson
Barbour	Foster	Luce	Stevenson
Beedy	Frear	Lyon	Strong, Kans.
Begg	Fuller	McCormick	Sumners, Tex.
Bell	Fulmer	McKenzie	Swank
Benham	Funk	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sweet
Bixler	Gahn	MacLafferty	Swing
Black	Garrett, Tex.	Mapes	Taylor, Tenn.
Blakeney	Gensman	Michener	Temple
Bland, Va.	Gilbert	Miller	Thompson
Blanton	Goldsborough	Moore, Ohio	Tillman
Bowling	Graham, Ill.	Morgan	Timberlake
Box	Griest	Mott	Tincher
Briggs	Hammer	Murphy	Towner
Brown, Tenn.	Hardy, Colo.	Nelson, Me.	Turner
Browne, Wis.	Haugen	Nelson, J. M.	Tyson
Bulwinkle	Hawley	Newton, Minn.	Underhill
Byrns, Tenn.	Hayden	Norton	Upshaw
Cantrill	Henry	Oldfield	Vaile
Carter	Hersey	Oliver	Walters
Chalmers	Hoch	Perkins	Wason
Clague	Hooker	Purnell	Weaver
Clouse	Huck	Quin	White, Kans.
Cole, Ohio	Huddleston	Rainey, Ala.	White, Me.
Collier	James	Raker	Williams, Tex.
Collins	Jeffers, Ala.	Rankin	Williamson
Colton	Jones, Tex.	Reece	Wilson
Connally, Tex.	Kearns	Reed, N. Y.	Wingo
Cooper, Ohio	Kelley, Mich.	Reed, W. Va.	Wise
Cooper, Wis.	Kelly, Pa.	Rhodes	Wood, Ind.
Coughlin	Kendall	Ricketts	Woodruff
Cramton	Ketcham	Roach	Woods, Va.
Crisp	Kincheloe	Robsion	Wright
Crowther	Kissel	Sanders, Ind.	Wyant
Dallinger	Kline, Pa.	Sanders, Tex.	Yates
Davis, Tenn.	Knutson	Sandlin	Young
Denison	Kopp	Scott, Tenn.
Dickinson	Kraus	Sears
Doughton	Lanham	Shaw

NAYS—113.

Ackerman	Frothingham	Lee, Ga.	Rainey, Ill.
Andrew, Mass.	Garrett, Tenn.	Lehlbach	Ramseyer
Bacharach	Gernerd	Linthicum	Ransley
Beck	Gifford	London	Riordan
Britten	Goodykoontz	McArthur	Robertson
Buchanan	Gorman	McDuffie	Rogers
Burke	Green, Iowa	McFadden	Rosenbloom
Butler	Greene, Mass.	McPherson	Rouse
Byrnes, S. C.	Hadley	MacGregor	Rucker
Campbell, Kans.	Hardy, Tex.	Magee	Sabath
Campbell, Pa.	Hickey	Maloney	Snell
Cannon	Hicks	Martin	Snyder
Chindblom	Hill	Merritt	Stafford
Clark, Fla.	Hogan	Mondell	Stephens
Clarke, N. Y.	Hull	Montague	Ten Eyck
Cole, Iowa	Humphrey, Nebr.	Moore, Va.	Tilson
Copley	Humphreys, Miss.	Moores, Ind.	Tinkham
Crago	Husted	Newton, Mo.	Treadway
Dale	Jefferis, Nebr.	O'Connor	Tucker
Darrow	Johnson, Wash.	Ogden	Vinson
Deal	Jones, Pa.	Olpp	Voigt
Dominick	Kirkpatrick	Paige	Ward, N. C.
Drewry	Kleczka	Parker, N. J.	Watson
Dunbar	Kline, N. Y.	Parker, N. Y.	Webster
Dunn	Kunz	Patterson, Mo.	Winslow
Faust	Lampert	Patterson, N. J.	Wurzbach
Favrot	Langley	Porter
Fenn	Larson, Minn.	Pou
Freeman	Lea, Calif.	Radcliffe

NOT VOTING—125.

Ansorge	Fairfield	Knight	Rossdale
Barkley	Fess	Kreider	Ryan
Bird	Focht	Lee, N. Y.	Sanders, N. Y.
Bland, Ind.	Fordney	Longworth	Schall
Boies	Free	Luhring	Scott, Mich.
Bond	French	McClintic	Siegel
Bowers	Gallivan	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sisson
Brand	Garner	McLaughlin, Pa.	Slemp
Brennan	Glynn	McSwain	Smith, Mich.
Brooks, Ill.	Gould	Madden	Steagall
Brooks, Pa.	Graham, Pa.	Mansfield	Stiness
Burdick	Greene, Vt.	Mead	Stoll
Burtness	Griffin	Michaelson	Strong, Pa.
Burton	Hawes	Mills	Sullivan
Cable	Hays	Moore, Ill.	Summers, Wash.
Carew	Herrick	Morin	Tague
Chandler, N. Y.	Himes	Mudd	Taylor, Ark.
Chandler, Okla.	Hudspeth	Nelson, A. P.	Taylor, Colo.
Christopherson	Hukriede	Nolan	Taylor, N. J.
Classon	Hutchinson	O'Brien	Thomas
Cockran	Ireland	Overstreet	Thorpe
Codd	Jacoway	Park, Ga.	Vestal
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, Ky.	Parks, Ark.	Volk
Cullen	Johnson, Miss.	Paul	Volstead
Curry	Johnson, S. Dak.	Perlman	Ward, N. Y.
Davis, Minn.	Kahn	Petersen	Wheeler
Dempsey	Keller	Pringey	Williams, Ill.
Drane	Kennedy	Rayburn	Woodyard
Dupré	Kiess	Reber	Zihlman
Dyer	Kindred	Riddick
Echols	King	Rodenberg
Edmonds	Kitchin	Rose

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Bird (for) with Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. Johnson of Mississippi (for) with Mr. Cullen (against).

Mr. Hutchinson (for) with Mr. O'Brien (against).

Mr. Fess (for) with Mr. Connally of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. McClintic (for) with Mr. Gallivan (against).

Mr. Parks of Arkansas (for) with Mr. Taylor of New Jersey (against).

Mr. Burtness (for) with Mr. Kindred (against).

Mr. Summers of Washington (for) with Mr. Carew (against).

Mr. Brand of Georgia (for) with Mr. Tague (against).

Mr. Park of Georgia (for) with Mr. Sullivan (against).

Mr. Pringey (for) with Mr. Hawes (against).

Mr. Himes (for) with Mr. Griffin (against).

Mr. Taylor of Colorado (for) with Mr. Mead (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Davis of Minnesota with Mr. Barkley.

Mr. Morin with Mr. Sisson.

Mr. Williams of Illinois with Mr. Cockran.

Mr. Free with Mr. Steagall.

Mr. Burton with Mr. Dupré.

Mr. Edmonds with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. Brennan with Mr. Overstreet.

Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. Rayburn.

Mr. Burdick with Mr. Drane.

Mr. Keller with Mr. Stoll.

Mr. Kahn with Mr. Kitchin.

Mr. Perlman with Mr. Mansfield.

Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Thomas.

Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Mudd with Mr. Hudspeth.

Mr. Kiess with Mr. McSwain.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CRAMTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

WAR RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 10003) to further amend and modify the war risk insurance act, with Senate amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and request a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 10003, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SWEET, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, and Mr. RAYBURN.

COAL.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the fuel situation in western Massachusetts has reached a very acute stage. I have stated previously on the floor of the House that 60 per cent of anthracite production will not make our section of the country comfortable at this period of the year.

I have asked the fuel authorities for an increase of that quantity, but in fairness to all sections I think very likely such a request as that can not be granted.

A new development seems to have arisen within the last few days that I think is worthy of the attention of Congress. I am informed that the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co., with headquarters in Lansford, Pa., has practically ceased operations owing to a local condition that has brought about a strike. I know nothing as to the merits of that strike, but when production ceases of 300 or 400 cars per day—13,000 or 14,000 tons—and the country is deprived of that much coal, particularly as a good deal of that product goes into New England, we ought to know what has brought about that strike condition and it ought not to be permitted. We ought not to allow either the employer or employee to prevent production of coal at this very critical period.

It seems to me that we must take up another factor—that is, we must urge the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish a priority order for fuel for the present emergency. A priority fuel order ought at once, in my opinion, to be advocated and issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission. They act slowly. All Government departments function slowly, but I think this is a time when red tape should be cut right clean in two and that they ought to tear open the bundle and give us fuel in New England. If there is no authority in the Interstate Commerce Commission and if they will so inform us, I myself think that authority will be obtained here so quickly that it will take their breath away. I strongly urge the issuance of an order giving coal the right of way over all freight except perishable foodstuffs. If coal reaches terminals it should be immediately distributed to our communities in preference to all other classes of freight, and if necessary precede passenger service.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield for a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will if I have the time.

Mr. WINSLOW. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has consulted the Interstate Commerce Commission as to what they are doing?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have not.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then on what does the gentleman base his judgment and argument?

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to ask the gentleman if New England has any patent on the difficulties he talked about?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I think the same difficulty applies to other sections, including northern New York.

Mr. SNYDER. All those difficulties apply just as much to northern New York as to New England.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SEARS. I ask that the gentleman from Massachusetts be allowed two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has yielded the floor.

Mr. SEARS. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply interested in what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] stated just a few minutes ago. I endeavored to get the gentleman's time extended in order that I might ask him one or two questions. Fortunately my State is not interested in coal, but that does not prevent me from being interested in the good people of Massachusetts and those States that do need coal. Some days ago I noticed, I think in a Boston paper, a statement that something like 1,900 carloads of coal were in the yards just outside of Boston, but that the railroads would not move those cars of coal, and therefore an apparent shortage of coal existed, when there was in fact no shortage of coal. This article also stated that they were shipping coal over these same railroads into Canada and selling that coal at $11 a ton, whereas in Boston they were charging $16, $17, and $18 a ton.

I desire to congratulate my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] for calling the attention of the House to this question. I would like to know of the gentleman from Massachusetts if he has investigated those conditions, and if the photographs that I saw were correct?

Mr. TREADWAY. I can only say to the gentleman from Florida that I saw a statement issued by the fuel distributor of Massachusetts absolutely contradicting the accuracy of the sensational stories to which the gentleman refers. I saw those pictures. The account given by the fuel administrator of Massachusetts was that there were as many cars going out of the terminals daily as into them. So far as the shipments going into Canada are concerned, I understand that there was very marked exaggeration also as to that. I am stating only what information has come to me indirectly. I have no positive answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. I have only three minutes, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINSLOW. The trouble in New England is this—we may as well be frank about it. There is coal enough within reach of New England, if there was the motive power on the New England roads to draw it; and there is also the difficulty of overcoming the ice and snow which the Almighty has piled up there and laid an embargo against New England thereby.

Mr. SEARS. That is one blessing I have by living in Florida. I notice in traveling from here to Florida that all along the line, looking out of the window, you will see car after car of coal not being unloaded, not being moved. I believe that the coal should be moved and the people given relief. There can be no excuse for coal selling at $18 a ton, and somebody is to blame for these conditions. I want to say I do not think it just to place the blame on God. Somebody is to blame, as I have just stated, and I think it is time we should find out who it is.

Much talk has been engaged in, but this does not give relief to the thousands and thousands who are cold and, perhaps, in many cases freezing, and who are not able to pay these exorbitant prices, and I think the time has come when you should take such action as will afford them some relief.

CONSIDERATION OF THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday and Tuesday next it may be in order at any time after 5 o'clock in the afternoon to move that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, the session to last not later than 10.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that on Monday and Tuesday next, at any time after 5 o'clock p. m., it may be in order to move that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock for the consideration of bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar, the session to last not later than 10.30. Is there objection?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Reserving the right to object, may I make an inquiry of the gentleman. Is it the gentleman's purpose to begin on the Private Calendar where we left off? If not, if you begin at the beginning, it would give some bills a double opportunity.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad the gentleman from Virginia mentioned it. I think we should begin on the Private Calendar at the point where we suspended business the last time.

Mr. SNELL. Has any arrangement been made, or has the gentleman any plan about taking up bills on the Private Calendar that are objected to?

Mr. MONDELL. I am very much in hopes that after we have gone through the calendar we may have an opportunity to do that, but I think first we should go through the calendar and take up the bills unobjected to.

Mr. SNELL. But it is the intention of the gentleman to give the other bills a chance?

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

NAVAL OMNIBUS BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 4137.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

TO INCREASE THE AUTHORIZED COST OF CERTAIN VESSELS NOW BUILDING FOR THE NAVY.

SEC. 7. That the limits of cost of the vessels heretofore authorized and herein below enumerated are increased as follows: Battleship Colorado, from $17,000,000 to $17,600,000; scout cruisers Nos. 9 and 10, from $8,250,000 to $8,400,000 each; and destroyer tender No. 3, from $3,400,000 to $4,500,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee where these ships are being constructed. Are they under contract?

Mr. BUTLER. I will give the gentleman a history of it. The battleship Colorado is being built by the New York Shipbuilding Co. on a cost-plus contract. The scout cruisers 9 and 10 are being built at the Cramp shipyards in Philadelphia under contract. The destroyer tender, which is a large boat, is being built at the Government navy yard at Philadelphia.

Mr. HULL. If you are building the ships under contract, then you increase the cost; do not you raise the contract price?

Mr. BUTLER. That is the reason we are here.

Mr. HULL. You do increase the contract price?

Mr. BUTLER. During the war period they were changed because it was found impossible to finish the boats on the price made in the original act or in subsequent acts. I know nothing more of it than the facts given to us by the Secretary of the Navy and those who attended him at the hearings—that it was impossible to finish the ships—and they gave to us the reasons why it was necessary to ask for an increase of cost.

Mr. HULL. Is it usual to raise the contract price when the contractors find that they can not finish a boat under the original contract—do you raise the contract price so that they can?

Mr. VINSON. If the gentleman will permit me I will state that when the contracts were originally awarded, in 1917, it cost to construct the Colorado $13,800,000. In July, 1917, Secretary Daniels changed the form of the original contract to cost plus 10 per cent. If the ship had been finished under that contract it would have cost $1,700,000 to finish it. But the Navy Department in 1920 changed the form of the contract from cost plus 10 per cent to cost plus fixed fee, and the fixed fee was $1,350,000, being a saving of $410,000 on the construction of the Colorado by the change of the contract.

Mr. HULL. The ships I was referring to were the two ships which the chairman said were under contract.

Mr. VINSON. They are all under the same kind of a contract—all are being built under the cost plus.

Mr. BUTLER. We recognize that as a contract and I answered the gentleman correctly, there are different terms in different contracts. These contracts were changed in character. It was found impossible to complete them during the war period for the prices we had been putting upon them. Therefore they were changed by Secretary Daniels as to the cost-plus, and we find ourselves with the limitation on them and they can not complete them without additional money.

Mr. VINSON. By changing the contract from a cost-plus 10 per cent to a cost-plus fixed fee there has been a saving of $416,000 on the Colorado and the same percentage of saving in the scout cruisers and the destroyer tender.

Mr. BUTLER. This was made necessary by the abandonment of the 1916 program.

It was contemplated that these appropriations would be made, but the Appropriations Committee has no authority to make them, to complete these vessels, until Congress legislates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. This provision is not an unusual provision. We have been doing this very thing for many years, particularly in connection with cost-plus and fixed-fee contracts.

The fixed-fee contract provides an outside marginal profit which can be made by the contractor irrespective of the actual construction cost of the ship. This does not give him any additional profits. It merely provides for the increased cost of the vessel, which increased cost has been brought about by conditions coming out of the war. Materials are higher, labor is higher, and while they enter into the cost of the construction of the ship, the contractor himself does not benefit thereby because his margin of profit is fixed by contract. He has a fixed-fee contract.

Mr. HICKS. And this increased cost exceeds the authorization of the Congress?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Therefore we have to have the increased authorization to cover it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me until I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am glad to know, if the gentleman will permit the statement, that even in the Navy Department they are awakening to the fact that the cost-plus system which resulted in the robbery of the people of this country of hundreds of millions of dollars is an abomination, and that the Navy Department is trying in some way to curtail that by having a fixed fee for the construction. The gentleman is on the Committee on Naval Affairs. Is there any provision in the present contract for a bonus or saving, or is the old system of wide-open doors still maintained, and that regardless of how much it may cost the Government, the contractor gets his fee nevertheless?

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is entirely correct about the damage and waste caused by the cost-plus contracts.

The Navy Department has no cost-plus contracts on its books to-day, if I am correctly informed. These fixed-fee contracts provide specifically for the fee, for the margin of profit that can be made by the contractor, and no more, so that this increased cost appropriation goes into the construction of the ships and does not go to the contractor.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman permit me to answer a part of the question of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BRITTEN. The Navy Department, as usual, takes the lead in constructive economical matters of this kind.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am glad to hear the statement, but the question I am asking my colleague is whether or not, regardless of the fixed fee which the contractor is to receive, there are any safeguards in the contract to protect the Government against extravagance on the part of the contractor, or will we be asked every time Congress convenes to make an additional appropriation to complete certain work.

Mr. BRITTEN. The contracts are an accumulation of safeguards, such as the Navy Department always has.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I want to answer my friend from Illinois, who is usually up to date, but being on the Military Affairs Committee a little bit behind the Naval Committee. In the original contract for these ships there was a provision that if the contractors came below a certain price there would be a bonus to the Government.

Mr. McKENZIE. Can the gentleman tell us whether they did come below that?

Mr. HICKS. No; the war came on, and everything went up. The gentleman is aware of the fact that we had a war?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; I heard about it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The explanation for the additional cost is given here in the report, and so that we may know just exactly what it is I read from the report:

During the last year progress of construction on vessels building for the Navy has been much reduced by reason of small appropriations available for work; and while the direct labor charges have been reduced, the indirect expenses have not gone down in the same ratio. Consequently the total costs of the work will be materially increased over what they would have been had larger appropriations been made, thereby permitting more rapid progress possible.

That is the explanation that was made. These ships will be completed for the figure named; and we ask the committee to authorize it to be done, for that is the last of the 1916 program.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to know that the Navy has made cost-plus contracts on the basis of 10 per cent profits; and I am glad to find that they have reduced it to 6 per cent, and that they hope in the future not to make any more cost-plus contracts. I will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] that the Military Committee may be a little slow, but they took this matter up with the War Department immediately after the war, and so far as I know the War Department has not made any cost-plus contracts since that time, and we hope they never will.

Mr. HICKS. Neither has the Navy.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; you are operating to-day on a cost-plus contract.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, no; this is a fixed-fee contract.

Mr. HULL. One of these contracts, it was said, is on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, no. Cost plus, but with a fixed fee.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman is in error. All of these contracts are cost-plus, fixed-fee contracts. The fee on the construction of the Colorado was fixed at $1,350,000, and the fee on the other ships is fixed at a certain sum.

Mr. HULL. I am glad to know that. I misunderstood the chairman. I thought he stated there was one of these contracts still remaining on the cost-plus basis. I hope we never have another contract of that kind in either the War Department or the Navy Department.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. It should never have happened.

Mr. HICKS. I may say to my friend from Iowa that the only reason it did happen was because that was the only way that we could get these ships built.

Mr. HULL. I know it was the only way, but it was due to the fact that the Navy had made no plans, and the Army was just as guilty.

Mr. HICKS. The Navy had made plans, but you could not get the labor or material. We had to pay these big prices in order to get these ships built.

Mr. HULL. I hope it will never occur again.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that we could have obtained labor and material and could have done this work without cost-plus contracts if we had had a little backbone. If we can take men out of their homes, take them out of their banks, out of their offices, out of their places of business, and send them to France to fight, why can not we take their brothers during war and put them in the shipyards and tell them to build ships? Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman's party was in power at the time, and they did not bring forth a resolution to conscript labor.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been making a one-man fight here for six years on that proposition.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman permit just further?

Mr. BLANTON. I have had the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and his collaborators against me.

Mr. HICKS. I want to say to the gentleman that while I know that labor was patriotic, yet I feel that when we called one man for the battle front we should have called his brother for the factory making the munitions to win the war. When conflict comes we stand on the same plane, and all should bear the burdens equally, and so I say that I feel we made a mistake in the war not to have called labor for service in the same way we called soldiers for service.

Mr. BLANTON. And the wisest thing that the gentleman's President has said since he has been in the White House was along that very line. If we have the right to take men and make them fight, we have the right to take them during war to build battleships.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Notwithstanding the very high authority of the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. BLANTON. My authority is the President of the United States. Maybe the gentleman helped to put him in the White House.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I would help to put him in again.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would have a hard time doing it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No matter what the authority is on this proposition the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from New York or anybody else might just as well know that when they talk about conscripting labor and wealth in time of war you do not consider the economic phase of it. If you undertake it, it will be a failure——

Mr. BLANTON. We should have been thinking only about winning the war and forgetting about these ridiculous union contentions that crept into the door of this Chamber. All the time we can not do what we want to do. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Does the gentleman differ with the Executive of his party?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. On this proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. On such propositions?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, I am talking about this proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry he is not in accord with the President of the United States on one of the biggest questions that now confronts the Nation.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I can say to the distinguished gentleman from Texas——

Mr. BLANTON. I am in accord with the President.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The proposition of socialism will not work in war time any more than at any other time, and these economical matters have to take their economic course in war time and in peace time.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman, then, what is the difference during war of taking a young man from Indiana and sending him to France and having him build roads over there for $33 a month and putting him in a shipyard and telling him to build ships in war time?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There is not a particle of difference, so far as the abstract justice is concerned, but, as a matter of fact, the proposition will not work; that is the reason.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would rather give contracts at 10 per cent plus than to do what we should do in time of war?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; the gentleman's party did that; not my party. I do not believe in contracts plus.

Mr. BLANTON. Unfortunately for the country, my party was then out of line on that question, just like the gentleman is now out of line with his party and the Chief Executive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPAIRS AND CHANGES TO CAPITAL SHIPS.

SEC. 8. That the restrictions contained in the acts of March 2, 1907, and August 29, 1916, as to the amount that may be expended for repairs and changes to capital ships shall not apply to such sums as the Congress may from time to time appropriate for modernization, by increasing the elevation and range of turret guns, of the following-named battleships: Florida, Utah, Arkansas, Wyoming, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Oklahoma, Nevada, New York, Texas, Mississippi, Idaho, and New Mexico: Provided, That the cost of such increase in the elevation and range of such turret guns shall not exceed the sum of $6,500,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER from the committee: Page 7, lines 12 to 23, inclusive, strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 8. Subject to the terms of the treaty providing for the limitation of naval armament concluded on February 6, 1922, and published in Senate Document No. 126, of the Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to incur obligations to the extent of $6,500,000, to be paid as appropriations may from time to time be made for such materials and work as may be necessary for increasing the elevation and range for the turret guns of the following-named battleships: Florida, Utah, Arkansas, Wyoming, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Oklahoma, Nevada, New York, Texas, Mississippi, Idaho, and New Mexico."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, after consultation with my colleagues and Members of the House I have offered this amendment, and I hope that the House will be willing to accept it. It seems there is some doubt in the minds of some Members whether or not we were in any way violating the terms of the treaty that we made authorizing the Navy Department to improve the ships which we are now allowed to maintain.

Therefore the amendment, as is indicated in the very first line, becomes subject to the terms of this treaty, and if this work would be in violation of the treaty then the money can not be used. We were assured by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy that this work that was to be put upon these ships would not be in violation of the terms of the treaty and not even in violation of its spirit. Permit me to say for the information of my colleagues—and I myself am included with them, of course—that we are all extremely anxious that this treaty shall be kept, not only in letter but also in spirit. Further, we inquired particularly and with as much diligence as we could whether or not this would in any way violate the terms of the treaty. Being assured that it would not and wanting to make it doubly sure, for that reason I offer this amendment which I ask the House to adopt.

By the terms of the treaty we are authorized to keep 18 large ships in commission. Five of the ships are not yet completed and three are completed, and those will not need remodeling. Thirteen will need to be remodeled. It is to cover the work on these 13 that this legislation is proposed. The 13 ships are all named in the amendment, and the amount to be used on each ship is $500,000. This money can not be used unless authorized in this way, because of the statute which provides that not more than $300,000 shall be used in repairing a ship of war without express authority from Congress. Heretofore the department used large sums of money in the repair of ships, which Congress justly made complaint about, and that complaint was met by the enactment of the act of 1907 and another act in 1916, raising the limit to $300,000. Each of these ships will perhaps cost to repair the sum of $500,000.

You naturally ask, What are they going to do? They are going to change and elevate the guns, so that they may have the same distance and the same range for the projectile on these ships that our neighbors have on their ships. With the present elevation on these older boats we have a range of only 22,000 yards. Is not that right?

Mr. HICKS. That is right.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, they are to raise them 30 degrees. We will then have a range of 32,000 yards, and that is the range that our neighbors have upon their guns. We ask only, not being permitted to buy new machines, authority from this Congress to keep the ones we have fully and completely up to date. This will do it.

Now, perhaps some time later we may be called upon to give consideration to further requests that the department may have for the further modernization of these ships. We declined to go into further matters at this particular time, because the time was pressing. But as to these ships that we are seeking to remodel, you will find nothing in the hearings as to the method and manner by which they propose to do the work.

The gentleman will understand that in this kind of business there is more or less secrecy, and necessarily so; and while as to the elevation of these guns much was disclosed to us, yet much of it was not taken down, because Americans were talking to Americans. But they gave us the plans by which it was proposed that this work should be done, and we unanimously thought it the best thing to do. We could not stand for anything else. If any occasion might arise hereafter when these ships were to be used, we could not take the responsibility of placing in the hands of Americans ships having a range of only 22,000 yards when the other fleets would have a range of 32,000 yards.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will our distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, who is in a better position to tell us than anybody else, explain what has become of this so-called four-power pact?

Mr. BRITTEN. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BLANTON. It involves these ships. Why does it not have anything to do with the question?

Mr. BUTLER. My friend from Texas and myself do not always agree, but we at least arrive at a proper and safe place to stand; and I will say to him that I am unable to give the information. It was the opinion of the officials of the Navy Department, who spoke candidly with us, that there was something before us other than death and bloodshed. By reason of their candor alone a most excellent and friendly relationship was, they told us, growing up between Japan and America, and we were assured of that, and it gave us hope; it gave us hope that there was something before us beyond death and bloodshed.

Mr. BLANTON. A lot of things were going on that led up to that compact, and a lot of splendid arches were erected here, with electric lights and other attractive features, and we were hopeful that something would come of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield in a minute.

We were assured by these men, who ought to know, that perhaps one of the features of this whole treaty that was agreed to by the three powers, one of the encouraging features of it, is what I have already given to you, namely, the confidence that has grown up between America and Japan, and we asked them whether or not Japan and England were keeping that treaty. My recollection is that they said they were.

Mr. BLANTON. The confidence that makes Japan build more battleships and elevate their turrets, and that which makes us elevate ours, so that we can extend the range of our guns by 10,000 yards——

Mr. BUTLER. Wait a minute; they had newer ships, my friend, and they had elevated their guns before we made this treaty. We are entitled to put up our guns on the ships we keep to the same elevation, and we hope that will not be a violation of our treaty. We threw away 12 ships, and if we had those ships, we would not ask that these guns be elevated. These are the oldest ships we have, and we want to try to modernize them in order that they may be put on an equality with the vessels of other nations that participated in the Washington conference.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman stated that if we had had those 12 ships we would not have asked for the improvement of these. The gentleman and I are in agreement. We did not make this treaty. But if I had had my way about it, I would have kept the new ships and thrown away the old ones. But then we would not have accomplished the same purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with my friend as to that.

And the administration was wise, and these men who went into this treaty making were wise when they asked us to continue this program until they might meet with their neighbors to see what could be done. When they presented their proposition we were building 16 ships. We threw away all those fine ships we were building. It was an expensive proposition, but we know that there is good coming out of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent for one minute in order that I may answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. VINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I merely wish to supplement what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said as to the effect of the four-power pact, so far as its applicability to Japan and this country is concerned. Our Government is observing religiously the spirit of that pact, and I believe the Empire of Japan is doing the same thing. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman and of the House to the fact that by virtue of that pact our Government has withdrawn more than one-half of the army of occupation in the Philippines. Where before, prior to that pact, we had more than 7,000 men now we have only the small number of 3,000. The policy of both Governments is acceptable to both as the pact is being carried out.

Mr. BUTLER. That is true; and I will say to my friend that his view of it is in entire accord with those who are in higher authority than either of us.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I agree in toto with what has been said by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs with reference to this section. We find ourselves in a position where it is absolutely imperative that we modernize our ships in the manner that the Navy Department desires. It is essential that the elevation of the turrets of the 13 ships be raised from 15 degrees to 30 degrees. It is essential that we keep at all times the ships of the American Navy on an equal parity with the ships of Great Britain, Japan, or any other nation. But at the same time, Mr. Chairman, that does not prohibit me from making some observations as to how we got into the position which causes us now to make this appropriation. This appropriation is of importance, and I trust that no Member of this House will find occasion to vote against it, because by all means these ships should be put at once upon an equality with those of Japan or Great Britain. Ordinarily it has been my policy whenever I made a bad trade not to have anything to say about it, and I would still adhere to that view had not my distinguished and lovable friend from New York [Mr. HICKS] put in the RECORD yesterday evening his views of what was accomplished by the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] stated that one of the great things that was accomplished by that conference was that competitive building between nations was eliminated, that in the future there would be no more competitive building of navies between Japan and the United States and Great Britain. That statement is true only to a partial degree. The only thing that the conference accomplished with reference to competitive building related exclusively to capital ships and not to other phases of the Navy. Right to-day we are building 10 cruisers lighter than battle cruisers, Japan is building 25, and England is building 48. To-day we are building submarines and the other nations are building submarines, and I do not want the idea to prevail in the House and in the country that the conference about which we have heard so much has prohibited competition throughout the navies of the world. Only to a certain extent has competition been prohibited, and that is in reference to capital ships.

At the opening of the war in 1914 there were in European waters practically only two first-class navies—those of Great Britain and Germany. Shortly thereafter, in 1916, under an act of Congress, the American fleet was accumulating many ships of all classes. The promise was that in 1925 the United States would possess about twice as large an effective tonnage as that of Great Britain.

With the elimination of the German fleet as a sea power the British fleet was left supreme, but the shadow of the rising Navy of the United States was already robbing it of something of the tinsel of former centuries. There were two alternatives before the British Government—either the British taxpayer would have to spend millions of dollars to keep pace with the shipbuilding programs of the United States and Japan in active competition, or else Great Britain would have to be contented with the status of the second sea power of the world.

In these circumstances the Washington conference assembled. When the conference was convened, there remained uncompleted of our 1916 building program seven battleships and six battle cruisers. In determining the size of the various navies the question of tonnage was the only factor taken into consideration. The range of guns nor the speed of the ships played any part in determining how many capital ships the nations attending the conference were permitted to retain. Let us therefore see what this Government consented and by its treaty has agreed to do with reference to bringing about the ratio of 5-5-3.

As already stated, we had on the way seven battleships and six battle cruisers, upon which there had already been expended approximately $350,000,000, and which ships were anywhere from 30 to 45 per cent completed. The tonnage of the 11 ships under construction was 520,000 tons. In addition to scrapping these 11 ships in process of being built, we agreed to scrap 17 other battleships, every one of which was in active commission except the Maine and the Missouri, of a tonnage of 267,740 tons.

The total tonnage agreed to be scrapped by this Government was 787,940 tons.

Now, it is interesting to see what Great Britain, who prior to the conference saw the dipping of its ensign to the American flag on account of our building program of 1916, agreed to do.

They agreed to scrap two paper ships—battle cruisers—the keel of neither of which had been laid when the conference assembled. In addition to that, what did they scrap? The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] said they scrapped 500,000 tons of ships. Now, let us see what character of ships the British scrapped.

Great Britain agreed to scrap two paper ships which she contemplated building, but which, as a matter of fact, were not in process of construction. In addition to this, she consented to the scrapping of 24 old ships. All but 4 of these British ships had already, prior to the conference, been discarded by the British Admiralty as ineffective. Of the 24 ships that Great Britain agreed to scrap, only 4 were in active commission—King George V, the Ajas, the Thunderer, and the Centurion. The 20 other ships that were agreed to be scrapped had been out of commission for some time and had been placed upon the market for sale were obsolete and were not carried by the British Admiralty as effective ships.

While we agreed to scrap 15 ships that were in actual commission, able to fight, of a total tonnage of 267,740 tons, England agreed to scrap only 4 ships that were in actual commission, able to fight, with a total tonnage of 92,000 tons.

Mr. Chairman, it is necessary to keep the record straight, and that is the reason I desire to make observations about what actually was scrapped by England and what we scrapped.

Now, let us see what Japan agreed to do and what kind of ships she scrapped. Japan agreed not to construct 4 battleships and 4 battle cruisers, the keel of which had not been laid down by November 11, 1921. She agreed to scrap 2 of the new battleships and 2 of the new battle cruisers; to scrap 11 of her old battleships, making in all the scrapping of 17 capital ships with a total tonnage of 419,132 tons.

Based on the tonnage, which was the standard used by the conference in reaching the ratio of 5-5-3, the United States actually scrapped 762,940 tons in actual commission and in process of construction, while Japan scrapped in actual commission and in the process of construction 286,182 tons, and Great Britain had no ships in process of construction and only 92,000 tons in actual commission.

Of ships on the way, the United States agreed to scrap seven battleships and six battle cruisers, against two battleships and two battle cruisers for Japan. The keel of the two battleships agreed to be scrapped by Japan were actually laid after the conference had assembled.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said by no less a person than Archibald Hurd, an eminent British naval authority, that—> the Washington conference will take its place in history as an assembly of unique performers.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt about it being unique. Unique in that this Government consented to the scrapping of 11 ships costing the taxpayers over $350,000,000, which were from 30 to 45 per cent completed, against 2 battleships and 2 battle cruisers of Japan and against 2 paper battleships of Great Britain. Unique in that Japan is credited with scrapping 11 battleships in actual use, whereas as a matter of fact 3 of them, the Kurama, the Ibuki, and the Ikoma, until the conference have always been classed merely as first-class cruisers. Unique in that we scrapped 267,740 tons in actual commission against 92,000 tons in actual commission for Great Britain and 163,932 in actual commission for Japan.

Unique in that we retained four old battleships with 12-inch guns, against no ships of Japan or Great Britain being so equipped. Unique in that the agreement was based exclusively on tonnage alone, the range of guns and speed of ships being clearly forgotten.

Four of our capital ships, the Florida, Utah, Wyoming, and Arizona, have 12-inch guns, 11 of our capital ships have 14-inch guns, and three of our capital ships have 16-inch guns.

Five of the British ships have 13½-inch guns; 13 of the British ships have 15-inch guns. Four of the battle cruisers of Japan have 14-inch guns, 2 battleships have 16-inch guns, and 5 battleships have 14-inch guns.

Mr. Chairman, vessels with 12-inch guns may be eliminated from consideration, for guns of that caliber are no longer considered equal to the requirements of the near future. Bywater, a British naval engineer, in his book, The Sea Power of the Pacific, said:

> Capital ships armed with these guns have ceased to be reckoned as first-class fighting units.

According to the same author, capital ships are now rated according to the following basis:

> First-class ships, equal guns of 15 inches or more; second-class ships, equal guns of 13½ to 14 inches; third-class ships, equal guns of 12 inches or less.

According to this we have 3 capital ships of the first line, 11 of the second, and 4 of the third. Great Britain has 15 of the first line, 5 of the second, and none of the third. Japan has 2 of the first line, 8 of the second, and none of the third.

The distinguished Secretary of the Navy said:

> Had we carried out the 1916 building program as laid down, we would have had 15 of the finest ships that ever sailed the sea. They would have been absolutely perfect in every detail; they would have been ships of the latest design and the latest improved methods and equaled by no ships in the world.

In 1922 the program was to scrap "the finest ships that ever sailed the sea." In 1923 the program is to patch up the old ships that we retained. One year we destroy "ships perfect in every detail." The next year we are called upon to endeavor to modernize the ships that we retained. Having abandoned the policy of completing ships "of the latest design and latest improved methods and equaled by no ships in the world" to take the place of old ones that have been in commission a great many years, we are now starting on this new policy to endeavor to improve the old ones and try to make them equal the ships that were destroyed.

We destroyed ships which a prudent nation would have retained; we kept some ships that should have been eliminated. Particularly is that true with reference to the four capital ships—the Wyoming, Utah, Florida, and Arizona, with 12-inch guns. The tonnage of these four ships was 95,650 tons, while the tonnage of the Massachusetts and North Carolina, two battleships in process of construction that were ordered scrapped, was 86,400. These two ships would have been modern in every detail. Mr. Chairman, the question of tonnage was the prime factor. We should have scrapped the four old ships above referred to, completed the Massachusetts and North Carolina or any two other of the battleships, and by doing so we would not now be called upon to modernize these old ships, endeavoring to change the elevation of 12-inch guns to give them a range as far as the 13½-inch or 14-inch guns.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is making a very interesting speech. I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. VINSON. I will finish in one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not object, but it ought to be for a definite time. I suggest 10 minutes.

Mr. VINSON. I do not want 10 minutes. One minute will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON. It would have been far better to have completed the seven battleships, with a total tonnage of 258,200 tons, and to have scrapped that amount of tonnage of capital ships that we retained. If this had been done, we would not now be called upon to enter on a program which ultimately means the expenditure of many millions of dollars, and after doing this fail to obtain ships equal to the seven battleships ordered scrapped.

But, Mr. Chairman, we are confronted with conditions as they stand to-day. Therefore it is incumbent on us now to modernize these 13 ships and endeavor to give a ship with a 12-inch gun an equal range to those ships of Japan and Great Britain that have 13½-inch guns. [Applause.]

[Mr. VINSON had leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of making a statement. We have all been impressed by the able remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]. As far as I am personally concerned, I am not so much interested in what we scrap as in what we retain. It is the living ship, not the dead one, that concerns me. It seems to me we should look to this conference for the guidance it gives the nations of the world. When our battleships of the future will equal in strength the battleships of Great Britain and exceed those of Japan, I say the Washington conference has been a success. When we eliminate capital-ship competitive construction and fix a specific ratio for naval strength, I say the conference has been a success. But we can not measure the worth of that conference by dollars and cents; we can not measure it by standards of Budget economy. That conference was a success because of the good will it established between the nations of the world; because it discussed in candor and frankness, without hate and jealousy, vital international problems; because it demonstrated to ourselves and to others that misunderstandings may be settled by a peaceful coming together of the nations around a council table rather than in the trenches of an armed conflict. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the reason that this amendment should be adopted is because of the change of policy that has come about because of the Washington conference. The policy of Great Britain with her supremacy in ships has always been to modernize her ships instead of laying down new ones. That policy is effective when you have a superiority of numbers, but with the American Navy, where the number of ships has been inferior, instead of taking the money and putting it into modernizing old ships we have devoted it to new construction, spending our money for new ships. When we scrapped the building program of 1916 we scrapped that policy, and as it is impossible to lay down new ships we should modernize the old ones and keep them up to date.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Was there any suggestion in the peace conference with our Government that our Government should spend millions of dollars arranging the guns on boats in order to have a 5-5-3 policy?

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will read the naval treaty he will see that it is provided in the treaty that the powers can change their present ships by strengthening the decks and make other changes for defense against aircraft and the attack of submarines provided the total tonnage will not be increased more than 3,000 a ship.

Mr. DICKINSON. Was anything said that you could increase the guns or the length of the guns?

Mr. HICKS. We are not increasing the number or the length of the guns.

Mr. DICKINSON. It seems to me that the situation is this: That we went in there and accepted these ships as our pro rata share of the Navy allotment. Now you get outside the conference and you find that they have a bigger range than we have, and we are asked to back up and fill because we happened to make a bad bargain.

Mr. HICKS. Let me answer my friend from Iowa, because I know he is sincere. Before the conference was held Great Britain was modernizing her ships, based on lessons learned at Jutland, and so was Japan, and, therefore, it was inserted in the treaty that all parties should have the right to modernize ships for protection against attack from the air and submarines, and to do this, as other nations are doing, this amendment is passed.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. Was not it put in the treaty because Japan and Great Britain were doing the very thing that you are proposing to do here?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; I have already so stated. That was the reason why it was put in the treaty. As I have mentioned, we had to abandon the policy of using money for new ships because of the terms of the treaty.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the gentleman from New York challenge the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], does he contradict the figures given by him with reference to the conference?

Mr. HICKS. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman was here and heard the speech of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HICKS. I am sorry to say that I was out of the Chamber a part of the time.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman from Georgia stated in substance that Japan and England drove a very hard bargain with the United States as to ships and that the United States got the worst of it.

Mr. HICKS. I do not agree with the gentleman at all. I think it was a great success for the United States and for all the world.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman from Georgia does not think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. It seems to me that whatever ships we have, be they many or few, ship for ship they should be equal to any Navy on the sea. [Applause.] We have a ratio agreement in this treaty of 5-5-3. If that ratio is to be maintained it seems to me that we must make changes in our ships to match the changes made by the other powers who are parties to that ratio agreement. Otherwise it is not the real ratio.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. How does the gentleman reconcile that contention with the theory that competition has been forever ended?

Mr. HICKS. Competition is not ended in the auxiliary fleets at the present time, although I hope the day will come when we will have some agreement regarding these smaller vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. It is only on the big ships.

Mr. VINSON. Competition has been eliminated so far as capital ships are concerned, and this deals only with capital ships.

Mr. STEAGALL. I can not subscribe to the views that competition is ended when we have committed ourselves forever to the policy of keeping pace with the other nations with whom we have entered into a contract instead of adhering to the traditional policy of this Government of pursuing our own course as a leader among the nations of the world rather than having to stop and consult others about what our policy shall be on a matter so vital as this.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to conclude my remarks with reference to this paragraph——

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman understands this thing, and we want to hear from him. Under this provision you are undertaking to make our Navy equal to that of Japan and England?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; as provided for in the treaty.

Mr. McKENZIE. And we are not undertaking to give our guns a greater range than the guns of England and Japan? In other words, if there were to be a duel, and a certain kind of arm was chosen, each one of the duelers would have the same arm; and that is all there is to this proposition?

Mr. HICKS. This provides that our guns shall have the same shooting qualities as the guns carried by the British and Japanese Navies. They have now a battle range of 32,000 yards. They have elevated their guns on most of their ships, and they are doing work on some of the other ships. We propose to elevate the range of our guns in order to be equal to theirs, so that our battle range will be the same as theirs, and it seems to me that the American Congress can do nothing less for the American Navy than to give it the same efficiency and strength as that possessed by any navy in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HUSTED. In other words, we are simply trying to maintain our place in the 5-5-3 ratio?

Mr. HICKS. That is all.

Mr. BUTLER. And, furthermore, we put it in the amendment; that was done in pursuance of the treaty.

Mr. McKENZIE. I agree with the gentleman from New York; but, as a matter of fact, I think it is idle, because they will never get within range.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Realizing that the gentleman from New York has a fund of information upon this particular subject, I want to ask him a question. Under the 5-5-3 ratio how many battleships does this country maintain at the present time?

Mr. HICKS. Eighteen.

Mr. FISH. And that is the same number that England has?

Mr. HICKS. No; England has 22 at the present time, under the treaty, and when she builds the two new Hoods——

Mr. FISH. Then she will have the same?

Mr. HICKS. No. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. HICKS. I would like to explain these things and I would like to have the time to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am now going to perform a very disagreeable duty and attempt to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that without the permission of the gentleman from New York, who has the floor.

Mr. HICKS. I want to talk for a few minutes to answer my friend from New York [Mr. FISH]. Under the treaty the American Navy is allowed 18 battleships. That is the number also we will have when certain changes are made. The reason it will remain the same is because we destroy two—the North Dakota and the Delaware—and we add two—the Colorado and the West Virginia—making 18 now and 18 in the future under the provisions of the treaty. Great Britain at the present time, under the treaty, has 22 battleships of capital size, and under the treaty, when substitutions are made, she will scrap four and add the two new Hoods. Therefore, under the new arrangements she will have 20 instead of 22.

Mr. FISH. I am afraid the gentleman and I will not agree upon the answer to the question that I want to ask now, but inasmuch as we are limited now to 18 battleships what harm would it do if we should reduce that ratio of battleships by one-half; reduce our Navy down to 9 battleships and have the other countries maintain the same ratio? Would not that provide for safety on the seas against pirates and for free intercourse on the ocean?

Mr. HICKS. I imagine so. Mr. Chairman, I am going to finish my very much broken into discourse. I ask not to be interrupted, because I am going to read now from the words of a great statesman, Mr. Charles E. Hughes, to whose brilliant statesmanship, able leadership, and sincerity in presenting the aims and hopes of humanity, the success of the conference was largely due. This is what he recently said in regard to maintaining our Navy:

> Personally, I am strongly in favor of maintaining an efficient Navy up to the treaty standard. This does not involve any injurious competition in battleships but simply makes possible the work and equipment which maintain the security and relative position contemplated by the treaty.

That is what the Secretary of State says about maintaining the present treaty Navy, and that is all this amendment is proposing to do. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the debate must be upon the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman from Massachusetts has an amendment on which he desires some time on this section. Under the 20-minute unanimous-consent arrangement is he precluded from speaking?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] who was to have the five minutes on the Republican side?

Mr. BUTLER. I think that we will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DALLINGER. Very well, that is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. A parliamentary inquiry. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that has already been agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I intended to offer an amendment to this section. The amendment now presented by the chairman of the committee covers the objection I had to the section and therefore I am in favor of the amendment of the chairman, but I want it distinctly understood that I am in favor of it solely because I know that the statement of the gentleman from Georgia is true, and that under the terms of the treaty we have not eliminated competition but have merely changed the form of competition, and I want this Government to have a navy which in fighting strength is equal to the fighting strength of the navy of Great Britain and as five to three to the navy of Japan. When the naval bill was pending I presented to the committee information which caused me to reach the conclusion that it was absolutely necessary, if we were to preserve this ratio, that we modernize existing ships and increase the number of our cruisers and develop other fighting units not covered by the treaty.

I am for the amendment, but I do not want the people of this country or of any other country to believe that by the terms of the treaty of February 6, 1922, we have eliminated competition. Why, the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself proves that we have not. When our representatives in the armament conference agreed to the 5-5-3 it was only as to tonnage, but the average American believed, and believes to-day, that it meant 5-5-3 in fighting strength. And we want this ratio in fighting strength maintained by making such improvements as are permitted by the treaty. My only desire is that we should be scrupulously careful not to go outside the terms of the treaty, and therefore I approve of the amendment now pending while I disapproved of the language of the bill. I want the people of other countries to know that the intent of the Congress is that we very scrupulously abide by the provisions of this agreement solemnly entered into as to armament. The treaty provides:

> No alteration in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of the mounting of main armament shall be permitted.

If we are going to raise the elevation so that a 12-inch gun will have the same range as a 14-inch gun, and can do it without altering the general type of the mounting of main armament, well and good. That can be determined only by the experts of the Navy Department. If in order to increase this range we have to violate any of the provisions of the treaty, then I would oppose it; but I am placing confidence in the Navy Department and in the executive officials of this Government to see to it that we do not violate it; and I want this amendment to specifically limit improvements to those permitted by the treaty, so that we will keep faith and so that the members of the House of Commons and members of the legislative body in Japan can not take this bill and use it as an argument before those legislative bodies to justify or excuse violations of the spirit of this treaty by those governments. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that it is the duty of this Congress to construe this treaty of February 6, 1921, when we pass laws that may be in conflict with it. I maintain that the only replacement we are permitted to make under the terms of that treaty is when a vessel is 20 years old—20 years from the time of its completion—we can replace that vessel, and under the terms of this treaty you can not change the mounting of our guns such as is contemplated here in this bill. I am in favor of keeping the obligation in spirit as well as in the letter. Let us see what our obligation is. Let me read you some excerpts from this treaty.

> The contracting powers shall abandon their respective capital shipbuilding program and no new capital ships shall be constructed or acquired by any of the contracting powers except as so provided.

Now, notice that clause again that my distinguished colleague from South Carolina read. That clause of itself puts us in bad faith if we attempt upon these capital ships, 13 of them, to change the mounting of our guns. They say that such change will give us a range of 31,000 yards and will cost $6,500,000. I know that you deem it of vast importance. We have here the shipbuilding corporations on one side of the gallery, and up in the other end of the gallery we have 20 representative walking delegates of the American Federation of Labor watching us, who are looking after the men who are building the ships. They are all hovering here like vultures, forcing this bill down the mouth of Congress, because they want this $6,500,000 spent. But I am going to keep the agreement that this country made with these foreign countries in spirit and in letter. Let me read you again what it says:

No alteration in side armor, in caliber, number of general type, or mounting shall be permitted.

Is not this an alteration in mounting? Are we not to raise these turrets from 15 to 30 degrees, and is not that a violation of our treaty? I am for keeping our bond. I am in favor, when we authorize our representatives to enter into a solemn agreement with the countries of the world, of keeping it, and I am not in favor of coming in here now, under whip and spur, and made to violate the very essence of the treaty. It would be bad faith, I submit to my colleagues. It would be doing these people wrong.

Like gentlemen who have preceded me, when we entered into a solemn obligation with various countries after the kind of conference that was held here, in these days of great discontent, in these days that are trying men's souls, I want the whole world to know that this Government is going to stand to the contract, to the letter and to the spirit of it. We should not violate it; we should set an example for the world upon this subject, and I hope that somebody will rise up here and take such steps as will stop the adoption of this amendment, that will strike out of this bill section 8. It has no business in this bill. We ought not to adopt it. We ought to defeat it and let these people who are pushing it down our throats go back home and follow some other occupation which has peace for its aim, peace for its glory, and not war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if the Washington conference were, as some of the speakers have indicated, mainly an instrumentality that made a noble gesture, I believe that in itself would have justified the existence of that conference. If concord and understanding have resulted from that gesture and have taken the place of discord and antagonism, we may well say to those gentlemen in that conference, "Well done, thou good and faithful servants." I am for any conference or gathering that will make for an era of good feeling instead of the animosity that might prevail. Anything that will minimize the chances of war is desirable. A conference that will delay war is desirable. Notwithstanding my hopeful disposition, however, I was never convinced that the world would be brought to a position during our lifetime or probably during the next three or four hundred years, if ever, where war will be looked upon as a thing of the past. I never could escape the conviction that as long as human nature remains what it is, afflicted, cursed by rapacity, greed, cupidity, ambition, and the hatreds that are engendered as a result of national and industrial and commercial rivalries, war will remain with men in every generation as the final arbitrament, when nothing but blood and iron can settle the issue. That is why I want a first-class Navy for this country. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] some time since urged with considerable force and with his accustomed eloquence on the floor of this House that a second-class navy was like a second-best poker hand; that just as a second-best hand invited loss and disaster to the person possessing that hand in a poker game so a second-class or second-best navy is a liability instead of an asset and leaves a country in an immeasurably worse position than a nation possessing no navy at all, because the nation possessing no navy at all would run no risk even to the unthinkable of paying for protection, while the nation possessing a second-class navy, believing itself equal to its adversary, might boldly invite the conflict which would end in its fleet going to the bottom of the sea.

I believe in a large navy and a powerful navy. Why? Because I can not blind my eyes to the facts of history. Much as I hope and pray for the millennium, I can not believe that we are near the day when we can hope that nations will cease to attack each other; when the blood lust is aroused by racial or national antagonisms, for then the polished veneer of civilization disappears and primordial passions govern and control. I believe we should never give up the means of defending the civilization that we have suffered so much to achieve. I do not believe we will ever be so short visioned as to forget the means by which we grew rich and great and powerful and strong, and that it is force under the control of the "lesser breeds without the law" that has buried old civilization and given birth to new empires. I do not think we were forgetful at the Washington conference, at any rate I hope our commissioners were not unmindful of history's pages and that terrible force which has been the cradle and the grave. Without wishing to be considered overcritical, it looked to me as if the conference treaties meant nothing else than an agreement not to fight with brass knuckles, slings, bows and arrows, brickbats, catapults, and other obsolete methods of warfare.

It is true we agreed to junk to a certain extent our battleships, our capital ships, but we did not abandon our cruisers and our submarines and our auxiliaries and our aircraft, and I am glad we did not do so. Kingdoms gained by blood must be by blood maintained, and our people and our Nation would be a Nation of fools to put themselves at the mercy of another nation that might desire to secure an uncontestable position as the leader of the vanguard of civilization and relegate us to "the rear and the slaves." We must never forget the constantly changing attitudes, alliances, and rivalries of the peoples of the world. Our enemy of to-day may be our friend of to-morrow, and our friend of to-day may be our enemy of to-morrow. One of the monitions of fraternity itself is, "Beware of the seeming friend of to-day, for he may be the enemy of to-morrow." We have built up a glorious civilization by force and by the mailed fist. We have acquired a glory that was of Greece, a grandeur that was of Rome, and we ought not at this time platitudinously, for the purpose of indulging in high-sounding sentences about peace and her multitudinous blessings, abandon a policy that will keep us and maintain us as a great, splendid leader, the vanguard of the mightiest civilization this world has ever known. "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute" and the "Army and Navy forever" should be as good to-day as when first uttered.

Of course, if we were outwitted at the conference table we ought by congressional action to rectify any mistake that was therein made and any stake we lost, and we ought to modernize our vessels and put ourselves upon an equality with the strongest nation or empire across the seas. I am not a croaker, I am not antianything. I am an American, concerned with my country's welfare, and without wrapping myself in the flag and parading across the stage like a chorus girl. I desire to consult and advise with my countrymen on the best means to secure and maintain our welfare. It is but right that as the guardians and trustees of the national honor and integrity and glory and opulence, and all that makes for those things that are valuable to human existence, we should not only modernize our warcraft upon the water, but look to our submarines and aircraft, for the dangers of the next war will be from the clouds and from under the seas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not now.

Mr. Chairman, the thought that occurs to me at the moment is this: Were our commissioners outwitted at the table of diplomacy? Or is it possible that our commissioners went to that conference without the necessary information? I can not believe they were guilty of such an unthinkable, such an unspeakable blunder. They could have secured reliable information from the Naval Establishment. If they secured that information and acted upon it honestly and sincerely, and believed they were establishing a ratio of 5-5-3 in fact as well as in theory, then you have got to hold them blameless and come to the conclusion that the information tendered by our Naval Establishment was not what the situation demanded and was misleading. There is no other conclusion, no alternative, except to believe that the Navy Department knew we were being outwitted and outclassed, but were prevented from giving utterance to the admonition and declaration and warning to their countrymen. This bill to modernize the Navy should create a demand for more light than has recently been vouchsafed the people of our country. The addresses that have been made here to-day show that we were outwitted and that we have to rectify whatever mistakes were made at that conference. Cry for light— you are entitled to it—but pass the bill which will cure the error, blunder, or what you will of the conference. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, it was my expectation to move to strike out section 8, but in view of the fact that a substitute has been offered I shall support the substitute. [Applause.]

In my judgment, however, in order to carry out the provisions of the substitute the Navy Department must give careful study to the provisions of this peace treaty; and, regardless of the fine eloquence displayed here by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR] and others, it is my judgment that this Government of ours can not afford to take any risk in doing that which will violate the terms of the four-power pact. Why? Because we invited the nations of the world here as our guests; we told them to come here, and we told them that we were acting in good faith; and I believe we should carry out this treaty in good faith.

Let me tell you what we said to them when they came here. The President in his message to them said:

Gentlemen of the conference, the United States welcomes you with unselfish hands. We harbor no fears; we have no sordid ends to serve; we suspect no enemies; we contemplate or apprehend no conquests. Content with what we have, we seek nothing which is another's. We only wish to do with you that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone.

I wonder if we are going to forget those sentiments now? Secretary Hughes said in his address:

Preparations for offensive naval war will stop now.

Now the question comes as to whether we can turn over here to this provision that has been referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and quote it and say to ourselves that we have the same exemption under that provision that we gave to Italy, France, and also gave England. If they were then building naval vessels and equipping them with longer-range guns, that was the time when this country ought to have seen that our interests were protected and not to ask Congress for modification of the peace policy, and that we ought not to do a thing that is in violation of either the spirit or the terms of this peace treaty. What does it say? It says:

No alterations in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of mounting of main armament shall be permitted except:

1. In the case of France and Italy, which countries within the limits allowed for bulge may increase their armor protection and caliber of the guns now carried on their existing capital ships so as not to exceed 16 inches (406 millimeters).

Second. That the British Empire shall be permitted to complete, in the case of the Renown, the alterations to armor that have already been commenced but temporarily suspended.

I want to say to this House now that there is not a word in the hearings that shows that either England, Japan, France, or anyone else has done a single, solitary act in violation of the terms of that treaty; yet we come in here now and say that we are going to prepare to increase the range of our guns, not by changing their caliber but by seeing if we can find some method whereby we can make those guns shoot a little farther than they have shot heretofore. I contend, gentlemen, that it is absolutely contrary to the spirit of the pact, and I do not believe that the Navy Department ought to authorize one single, solitary dollar of expenditure in that direction. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDSPETH. My friend states that there is nothing to show that England, France, or Japan has violated that treaty. Then these newspaper reports that we see, which state that France has increased its navy beyond what was agreed to in the disarmament conference, are not true, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. DICKINSON. Not unless they have gone beyond the exception made in the treaty. In other words, an exception was made, as I have read.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman has seen those statements in the newspapers, though?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; but I do not believe they are true.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think that expediency ever justifies the violation of a solemn agreement?

Mr. DICKINSON. No.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. If the range of our guns is 22,000 yards and the range of their guns is 32,000 yards, then there will be a range of 10,000 yards through which our boys from Texas and California and New York will be defenseless, and we can not run through 11,000 yards of gunfire and live.

Mr. DICKINSON. If we made a bad bargain, let us stand by it. If our Government experts did not know that fact when the disarmament conference was in session, they never ought to have permitted this treaty to be signed.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. That is true.

Mr. DICKINSON. If they made a mistake, I say it is our business to stand by it, when we invited the other nations of the world here to make an agreement with us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 48, noes 3.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DALLINGER: At the end of section 8 add the following words: "Provided, however, That no part of the moneys authorized to be appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for repairs or changes by private parties or for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed repairs, changes, or acquirement can be made, manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards of the United States, when time and facilities permit, for a sum less than they can be made, produced, or acquired otherwise."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. That it is not germane to this section 8 and that it is not germane to the bill; that it is an unrelated subject. There is no question of economy here involved. It seeks to control the discretion of our Executive, which is in violation of the rule.

Mr. BRITTEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it possible under the rules of the House to add an amendment to an amendment under the circumstances?

Mr. BLANTON. Not while there is a point of order pending.

Mr. BRITTEN. I was referring to the amendment before the House. I was not intending to take the gentleman off his feet.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the point of order made is good. This is a limitation. It has been passed on, I think, a good many times by chairmen of committees in the past, and I am rather inclined to think it has been passed on by the Speaker on one or two occasions. It is a limitation, and has been carried on other bills from time immemorial.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been held in order on other bills.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is germane to this section and to the matters mentioned in this section.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, the limitation has been placed heretofore on appropriation bills, not on a legislative bill. It would be in order on an appropriation bill, but is not in order on a legislative bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Illinois anything to say to the fact that it refers not only to this section but to all other sections of the bill?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think it is a proper limitation on the other section of the bill so far as they call for expenditures. A proper limitation on expenditures is a limitation that they shall not be used except in a certain way, and therefore is applicable only to the expenditures authorized by the bill. This limitation comes within those requirements. For that reason I think it is pertinent and germane. I well remember, for instance, the argument made here by our late colleague, Mr. Mann, when he contended on the floor of the House, and I think properly, that if the House should provide a limitation that the expenditure should be made by a red-headed man it would be a good limitation. That was a favorite expression of his. I think this is germane.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. Not on the point of order, but on the merits. The reason I think it is not a proper limitation is that it can not be ascertained at the time that the purchase is made or the articles manufactured that it can be done cheaper elsewhere.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is a matter of some doubt always and of some difficulty in this amendment, but nevertheless that is an executive matter or an administrative matter that will have to be worked out by administrative officers. If it is impossible to do it, that is another matter.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to apply this test to this as a limitation. It seems to me the real test here as to whether it is a limitation would be this: It certainly is a limitation as to where the Navy Department can get its supplies. As to whether it is a limitation in cost can not be determined until the actual supplies are furnished, and if it should be found that the supplies cost more by being produced by the Government than they would if purchased of a private industry, according to this amendment it would be a violation of the law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is not claimed that this is a retrenchment.

Mr. BEGG. The limitation, to make it in order, means the limitation in expenditure.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; it does not. The limitation does not mean necessarily retrenchment or a lessening of expenditure; it means a limitation of use, it restricts the way in which it can be used.

Mr. BRITTEN. The amendment, boiled down, is: If the Navy Department can do the work cheaper than it can be done outside the Navy Department, the Navy Department shall do it. That is all there is to the amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add that you would not know whether it was cheaper until you advertised for bids. That is the law now, and, as I stated on the floor a few weeks ago, when the gentleman from Massachusetts offered the same amendment to the Army bill, that they advertised in the Army for bids and they received 13 bids. The lowest was 10½ and the highest was 17¼, and all the other bids were under 17¼, and that was from the Army arsenal, and they awarded the contract to the Army arsenal simply because they had a large force of men and had to give them something to do. I maintain that it is poor business to confine it in such a way.

Mr. DALLINGER. They could not do it under this amendment.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if any part of the funds to be expended under this bill other than for ship construction is affected by the proposed amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. It affects all the others.

Mr. HUSTED. Does it apply to any fund except for ship construction? If it does, it is not a proper limitation, because a limitation applies only to the fund to which it is related.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out that part of my amendment that refers to other sections of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, and I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will read section 8 he will see that it is only proposed to modernize the elevation and range of the turret guns. Any amendment offered to section 8 must be germane to that proposition. What is this amendment? This is not an appropriation. The amendment is:

Provided, however, That no part of the moneys authorized to be appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for repairs or changes by private parties or for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles.

It does not limit it to modernizing the turrets, it does not limit it to changes in the elevation or range of the guns on these 13 battleships; it applies to everything, it takes in the whole world. The amendment continues:

that at the time of the proposed repairs, changes, or acquirement can be made, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards of the United States, when time and facilities permit, for a sum less than they can be made, purchased, or acquired otherwise.

For that reason it is not germane. For another reason it is out of order because of the fact that it destroys the discretion of the executive who has this matter in charge. When are we going to stop seeking to do that to the detriment and interest of the people of the United States? It is for the interest of the people that there shall be a proper discretion placed in our executive offices. Whenever Congress seeks by limitation to gag and hogtie the executive offices the people of the United States suffer. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that under the rulings of distinguished Chairmen and this distinguished Chairman, one of the most distinguished parliamentarians in this House, this amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. After the encomiums of the distinguished gentleman from Texas as to the parliamentary ability of the Chair it would be difficult to rule against him. [Laughter.] This is not a question of limitation on an appropriation bill. It is a legislative bill, and the only question here is the question of germaneness. As the amendment is drawn, referring to a number of sections in the bill, it seems to the Chair that under the rules of the House it is not germane to this particular section. The amendment affects all the sections and all the expenditures authorized in the bill. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 7, after section 8, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the moneys authorized to be appropriated in this section shall be used or expended for repairs or changes by private parties or for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed repairs, changes, or acquirement can be made, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards of the United States for a sum less than they can be made, purchased, or acquired otherwise."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order in that it is not germane to section 8, which it follows, and to which it must be applicable and held accountable. In addition to that, it is an improper restriction upon the discretion of the Executive.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is even broader than the other. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 7, at the end of section 8, add the following: "Provided, That no part of the moneys authorized to be appropriated in this section shall be used or expended for repairs or changes by private parties or for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed repairs, changes, or acquirement can be made, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards of the United States, if time and facilities permit, for a sum less than they can be made, purchased, or acquired otherwise."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order in that it is not germane to section 8, that it is an improper limitation upon the discretion of executive officers. This is not to authorize an appropriation, but it provides for the expenditure of money which has already been appropriated and is now in the Treasury. The amendment is not in accord with section 8 in that respect, because it treats section 8 as authority for an appropriation, when there has already been an appropriation.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this paragraph deals only with the changing of the elevation and range of the turret guns. The first part of it provides as to the amount that may be expended for repairs and changes to capital ships, that it shall not apply to such sums as the Congress may from time to time appropriate for modernization by increasing the elevation of turret guns. This amendment undertakes to curtail all of the money.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, in carrying out the provisions of this section, articles have to be purchased.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is sure that this amendment is limited to moneys authorized under this section?

Mr. DALLINGER. It says so. In doing this work they will have to buy certain articles. If they already have them in the navy yards and they can be purchased more cheaply there than they can get them outside, why should they not be used?

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman know that they are going to buy anything? They may not buy anything.

Mr. DALLINGER. Then it does not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. Congress has the right to determine in what way any moneys authorized shall be expended, and if the proposition is germane to the matter under consideration this is all the requirement that is necessary in a legislative bill. It would seem that as the amendment is now drawn it limits the moneys authorized to be appropriated under this section only, and therefore it appears to the Chair to be germane. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DALLINGER) there were—ayes 32, noes 20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN SITES FOR AVIATION.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend from the appropriation "Aviation" contained in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, approved January 22, 1923, a sum not in excess of $13,000 for acquiring the site of the naval air station, Galveston, Tex.; a sum not in excess of $18,000 for acquiring the site of the naval air station, Lakehurst, N. J., and right of way for railroad spur track appurtenant thereto; a sum not in excess of $20,000 for acquiring the site of the Marine Corps flying field at Reid, Quantico, Va.; and a sum not in excess of $58,335 for acquiring the site of the naval air station at Chatham, Mass.: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell the site of the naval air station, Galveston, Tex., with the improvements thereon, upon such terms as he may deem proper: Provided further, That $13,000 of the proceeds of such sale shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation from which the purchase price of the land is defrayed.

That the sums herein authorized shall remain available until expended.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not know that it will do any good to talk about it and I do not want to set my judgment up against the judgment of the committee on this proposition, but I call attention to the fact that here we are authorizing considerable sums of money to be used for the acquisition of three flying fields.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement. There is but one field for the Marine Corps, and that is the one at Quantico.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The others are for the Navy?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Each of these parcels of property is now or has been in the possession of the United States since the war, and we are merely completing an old moral obligation to pay for what we have been holding.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let me say what I want to say, and that is this: I have always thought that it is utter folly for us to maintain flying fields for the three branches of our military service. We have flying fields for the Marine Corps, flying fields for the Navy, flying fields for the Army, and now we have flying fields, I believe, for the Post Office Department. There is no reason on earth why we can not cut down considerable expense by combining some of these flying fields into large aviation centers, where the aviators of the country generally can be trained without maintaining these expensive establishments for three or four different branches of the Government. It is being argued that we started these during the war. Can not some constructive plan be worked out by this Congress or the next Congress so that we can consolidate these activities and cut down the overhead expense and make great aviation centers instead of these many little fields around the country, each of which costs almost as much as a big one?

Mr. BUTLER. We do not know what to do with them.

Mr. HICKS. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. SWING. If we are going to have aviation, we have to have them along the coast. At strategic points we have to have aviation fields for flying from and flying back.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. All right; along the coast. I do not want them in Illinois in our cornfields. It is not our fault particularly, but we are following up a practice that was established during the war, and we have got military reservations all over the length and breadth of the land. We have naval reservations, marine reservations, and post-office reservations until we are burdened and borne down by the grievous rate of taxation that is imposed on us because we did not tackle the proposition in the proper way. Nobody is due for any particular criticism, but why not adopt some comprehensive general plan?

Mr. BUTLER. This is to relieve it from taxation, to save money.

Mr. HICKS. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There are a few things I want to get out of my system about this proposition, and I believe I am right about it.

Mr. HICKS. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will just curb his anxiety, I shall have finished in a moment, but I believe I am right about this thing. I think somebody ought to tackle it. I have been waiting for years and we seem to have made no progress under that line; we have not got anything tentative even in the construction of a plan.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this the gentleman's opening speech?

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I hope the gentleman has been following the activities of the Committee on Military Affairs and knows that we have on the calendar a bill providing for the sale of some 50 or 60 tracts and authorization for the sale of many more; and so far as the Military Establishment is concerned, we are doing our best to unload. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. So far as Congress is concerned, it is standing still.

Mr. McKENZIE. We expect to move next week.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Gentlemen, I am glad to explain this item, because it is a matter I think really entitled to have cleared up. The position of my friend appears to be well founded, but he is ignorant of some of the facts upon which he is talking. Now, I agree that we ought to cut down a lot of the aviation stations, but here is the case where we have expended vast sums of money and where we need stations and where we use them. Now, let me take them one at a time. This provides for the purchase of a field at Quantico, Va., the headquarters of the Marine Corps. We have there an expenditure of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, and we are using that field now to train the marines. We have built these hangars on land we did not own, and we are paying rent for that land at $1,500 a year. For $20,000 we can buy the land upon which we have these hangars. Why, it is Government efficiency and business economy to buy this land and stop paying rent, because we have to have that land upon which to train the Marine Corps. There is no question but what the Marine Corps should have aviation as a part of it. This provides for the training field at Quantico, where the marines are trained. I think that will cover the Quantico station.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I agree with the gentleman from New York as to the business proposition involved here.

Mr. HICKS. I will give another one.

Mr. McKENZIE. But I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, however, what action the Committee on Naval Affairs has taken to unload some useless and unnecessary pieces of real estate; that is the point.

Mr. HICKS. We have started. We have cut out many stations, and some action ought to be taken by which we can sell them. We have in Cape May, Chatham, five or six, at least, where there is only one man to protect the Government property and see that there is no damage. Now, these stations mentioned in this amendment are stations which the Government has obligated itself to buy. This Congress authorized the buying, and the only reason they did not do it was because the authorization while continuous the appropriation ran out before the authorizations could be made good and because of defect in title.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not think the gentleman from New York and myself differ much on this proposition. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether or not the Navy Department has made any recommendations to the Committee on Naval Affairs asking that a bill be passed authorizing and directing them to sell?

Mr. HICKS. I will say to my friend from Illinois that within the last few months the Rodman board, composed of Admiral Rodman and other officers, have gone over the property owned by the American Navy to see where property could be eliminated, and that report is expected to be acted upon at some near future date. Now, here is the station at Lakehurst. We spent nearly $7,000,000 upon that property, and we do not own the property. Now, it seems to me it is only business judgment to go ahead and buy that land because we have got these enormous expenditures. These stations, Mr. Chairman, are stations which are used now with one exception, and that is the station at Galveston, Tex.

During the war we selected a site on the Gulf of Mexico. We made arrangement to buy the property, but before title could be passed, because of a defect in title, the money lapsed; but we went ahead and in the meantime have spent $248,000 in filling the lot. We do not want the land, and that is one of the cases where we are eliminating the site; and as soon as we get title we propose to sell it at the best price we can get, and it is provided in this bill that after getting the property then the Navy Department is authorized to dispose of it at the best price possible. Now, that same thing happens in a number of cases, but I think with that explanation, Mr. Speaker, the committee ought to be satisfied and accept this amendment.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. In view of what the gentleman from California said, I remember General Patrick appeared before our committee the other day and said the airplanes went so fast that they did not need the stations on the coast. They could put them where they would be safe.

Mr. HICKS. It is pretty difficult to put in with a seaplane on the land when a seaplane operates on the water.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HICKS: Page 8, line 2, before the word "naval" insert "Navy Department and the."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, that is merely to clarify the language and have the same wording and title that the appropriation bill carries.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE CORPS PERSONNEL.

SEC. 10. That no officer of the Marine Corps below the grade or rank of colonel shall be promoted or advanced in grade or rank on the active list unless the examining board provided for in the act approved July 28, 1892, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Marine Corps, and to regulate promotions therein" (27 Stat., p. 321), shall, in addition to making such certificate of qualification for promotion or advancement as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, certify that there is sufficient evidence before the board to satisfy the board that the officer is fully qualified professionally for the higher grade or rank.

That when the said examining board shall consist of seven or more officers of the Marine Corps, any officer whose case is before it may be found not professionally qualified without the right to be present or to challenge members of said board.

That any officer of the Marine Corps who fails to qualify professionally upon examination for promotion or advancement shall be reexamined as soon as may be expedient after the expiration of one year if he in the meantime again becomes due for promotion, and if he does not in the meantime again become due for promotion he shall be reexamined at such time anterior to again becoming due for promotion as may be for the best interests of the service: Provided, That if any such officer of less than 10 years' total active service, exclusive of service as midshipman or cadet at the United States Naval Academy or the United States Military Academy, fails to qualify professionally upon reexamination he shall be honorably discharged from the Marine Corps with one year's pay: Provided further, That if any such officer of more than 10 years' total active service, exclusive of service as midshipman or cadet at the United States Naval Academy or the United States Military Academy, fails to qualify professionally upon reexamination, he shall not be discharged from the Marine Corps on account of such failure, but shall thereafter be ineligible for promotion or advancement; and any such officer shall be retired with a percentage of the pay received by him at the date of retirement equal to 2½ per cent for each year of total active service, not to exceed 75 per cent, upon attaining, or if they have previously attained, the ages in the various grades and ranks, as follows: Lieutenant colonel, 50 years; major and company officers, 45 years.

That brigadier generals of the line shall, subject to physical examination, be appointed from colonels of the line whose names are borne on the eligible list prepared annually by a board of not less than five general officers of the Marine Corps, and approved by the President.

That hereafter, as vacancies occur, the heads of staff departments shall be appointed for terms of four years from officers holding permanent appointments in the departments in which the vacancies occur, whose names appear on eligible lists prepared annually by a board of not less than five officers of the Marine Corps above the grade or rank of colonel, including the major general commandant and the heads of the staff departments, and approved by the President, but no head of a staff department appointed for a term of four years shall sit as a member of the board during consideration of names for the eligible list for his department: Provided, That in case there be no officer holding a permanent appointment in a staff department whose name is borne on the eligible list for appointment as head of that department, the appointment shall be made from officers of field rank of the Marine Corps whose names are borne on the aforesaid eligible list for that department.

That any officer of the grade or rank of colonel whose name is not borne on one of the current eligible lists for appointment as brigadier general or head of a staff department shall, if more than 56 years of age, be retired with a percentage of the pay received by him at the date of retirement equal to 2½ per cent for each year of total active service not to exceed 75 per cent.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: On page 10, line 13, strike out the words "total active," and, after the word "service," insert the following: "to be computed in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast Survey, and Public Health Service,' approved June 10, 1922"; and, on page 11, line 21, after the word "service," insert "to be considered in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Marine Corps, Coast, Coast Survey, and Public Health Service,' approved June 10, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has omitted to insert the word "Guard" in his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the word be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, these amendments are offered after consultation with my friend from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], who, along with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], and along with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. KRAUS], a member of the committee that equalized and adjusted the pay of the men in these different services. These two amendments are proposed in order to prevent bringing any provision of this proposed law into conflict with that law. I will ask my friend from Alabama, with whom I have talked, whether in his judgment it does not remove the touching point?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; with this amendment added, "That nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing other than commissioned service to be considered in determining the retirement pay of any officer commissioned after July 1, 1922." I understand it was the purpose of the gentleman to amend it so as to avoid violating that section of the pay bill that prevented commissioned and enlisted service being considered after July 1, 1922. This will make it absolutely clear. That is to go in at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER: Page 11, line 21, after the word "centum," strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing other than commissioned service to be considered in determining the retirement pay of any officer commissioned after July 1, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment. No; I will withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] is not an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. No. It is simply to clarify the section. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania should be passed first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. I offer my amendment at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER: Page 11, at the end of the section, strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing other than commissioned service to be considered in determining the retirement pay of any officer commissioned after July 1, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Page 11, line 21, amend by adding at the end of section 10 a new section to be No. 10½, as follows:

"That a special committee, to be composed of five Members of the Senate to be appointed by the Vice President, and five Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall make an investigation and report recommendations by bill or otherwise to their respective Houses not later than April 1, 1924, relative to the revision and the readjustment of the laws providing for the retirement of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service, including the matter of retainer pay."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming reserves a point of order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I want the point of order made if it is to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming make his point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. I am reserving the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is recognized.

Mr. BEGG. I insist on the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Does the gentleman from Wyoming make his point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not make the point of order. I simply reserved it. I do not know that I shall want to press it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio demanded the regular order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: On page 10, line 10, after the word "advancement," strike out the semicolon and insert a period and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not at all insistent on my amendment being carried, but I offer it for the purpose of making a few observations on retirement pay. I am sorry the gentleman from Wyoming insisted on the point of order, for the simple reason that the same kind of a committee was appointed with reference to active pay and made a report, which was enacted into law, that did justice both to the men and to the Government. There are gross injustices now in retired pay, unjust both to the men and to the Government. It would seem to me that the leader of the House ought to be willing to have a proposition considered before this House that has the sole motive of being for the best interests of the men in the service and at the same time to protect the Government from being mulcted out of a certain amount of money unnecessarily.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not insist on my point of order. I simply reserved the point of order, and I should not have insisted on it. But let me suggest to my friend that it is only two months since we adjusted this pay. How frequently must we readjust it?

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman certainly does not intend to make any such statement as that on the floor of the House.

Mr. McKENZIE. That had nothing to do with pay.

Mr. BEGG. There has not been anything like this considered in the House, and the gentleman has been here long enough so that he ought to know that.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that under the retirement law, after a man has given the best years of his life to his Government, under this provision on page 10 that I have moved to strike out, a man may serve his Government until he is 45, if he is below the grade of lieutenant commander, or until he is 50 if he has attained the title of lieutenant commander, and then it says he shall be retired; and there are many of these men who are perfectly capable of serving longer. On the other hand, if they are physically and mentally perfectly capable of serving longer, the Government of the United States is entitled to their services, and it is nothing but poor business and carelessness that such a hodgepodge of laws has been allowed to accumulate on the statute books with reference to retirement. If my amendment had been allowed to become a law, there would have been an investigation of all the laws of all the five services governing retirement, and the inequalities and injustices would have been eliminated and the men would have been protected, and as I said at the beginning, the Government would not lose the services of men physically and mentally able to continue in the service.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman said a while ago that he was not particularly interested in his amendment. Does he not think it ought to be adopted, in view of what the gentleman has stated?

Mr. BEGG. My reply to the gentleman is that if this last amendment, which I have offered to strike out, would eliminate all the injustices, I would say, "Yes; by all means," but this is just one little step, and I am not in favor of picking out one man or one small group of men in one service and allowing similar injustices to continue as to other men in other services. I want to say that I personally know a retired officer in the Navy who is taking the place of a civilian in an institution with which I am connected, and he is drawing a man's pay; he gets a man's pay from the Government, and he is not as old as I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. I ask that my time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman seems to be in earnest.

Mr. BEGG. I am in earnest.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman believes his amendment is a good one Why are we not allowed to vote on it?

Mr. BEGG. Just simply because it picks out one or two men, and there is no use of picking out one or two and letting the rest go. My original amendment would have studied the whole question.

Mr. DENISON. What does the gentleman think about retiring General Crowder and then appointing him to a civilian position?

Mr. BEGG. That is none of my business. I would not do it if I had my way about it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. BEGG. I did not hear the Chairman say that my time had expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had started to take his seat.

Mr. BEGG. I had started to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. HILL. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not understand that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] stated that he would make the point of order.

Mr. BEGG. But he made it.

Mr. OLIVER. Members of the House who are familiar with the situation feel that there is large merit in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BEGG. I intend to try it again in another paragraph.

Mr. OLIVER. I understood the gentleman from Wyoming to say that he would not make the point of order. There are some inequalities that should be corrected and the gentleman is correct in stating that the committee on adjusting the pay did not go into that.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am against this amendment because, if the amendment is proper, the whole paragraph should go out.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman from Ohio has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask not to be interrupted.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman must proceed in order, and he is not in order in speaking of an amendment that has been withdrawn.

Mr. HILL. I said I was against the amendment, and if it was a proper one the whole paragraph should go out. This paragraph provides—and I ask the chairman of the committee, if I do not understand it correctly—the bill provides that if any officer fails to qualify professionally on reexamination—that means if he can not pass the routine examination for promotion—that if he happens to be 45 years of age, has served 10 years, and is a company officer he can be retired from the service. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if that does not make a totally different system of retirement for the Marine Corps from that in the Army at the present time?

Mr. BUTLER. We asked and were told that it did not.

Mr. HILL. I think it is an entirely different system from that in the Army, and for that reason I question the wisdom of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I am mistaken; it is the Navy retirement. The Navy and the Marine Corps are closely associated and therefore in the retirement provision they have put in the naval provision.

Mr. HILL. It should be on the same basis as the Army, and I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What paragraph?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, does this close the whole section?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, in this matter of soldiers' retirement and soldiers' pay I am going to ask that for just a few minutes we look at another set of soldiers. I want to read into the RECORD the greatest tribute that any President of the United States has ever paid to a set of soldiers who are fast passing away. I will say that I think it will have the unanimous indorsement of all the people here and that probably we will not feel as belligerent when we get through as we are just now.

The President of the United States, Mr. Harding, was invited to attend the Confederate reunion at New Orleans, and this is his answer, and I invite the attention of everybody to it. He says:

> The President wrote Captain Dinkins expressing regret because of his inability to accept an invitation from the committee to attend the reunion.
>
> "You say, in part," Mr. Harding said, "'the call of the time is equally to emphasize and impress the courage, loyalty, and constructive citizenship of American manhood in the peace that follows war. The Confederate veterans began anew with resources exhausted and opportunity reduced and by matchless energy, devotion, and cooperation rebuilt and rehabilitated their land into immense production and broad prosperity.'
>
> EXAMPLE FOR WORLD.
>
> "I am quoting these sentences because they have moved me to say that in my judgment the reconstruction of the South, by the people of the South, in the face of tremendous discouragements following the war, set the finest example that could be urged upon a war-wasted world to-day," the President continued. "The men of Lee's and Johnston's armies went home to their tasks of reconstruction with hearts of courage and purpose of determination to overcome all obstacles; to deserve the good will and the help of others by proving their own good will and by helping themselves to the utmost of their capacity. They had earned the respect and regard of their opponents on the battle field; they earned it yet more completely and emphatically by their conduct afterwards, and in earning it they insured not only the Union's restoration but its advance to that splendid place which it holds in the family of nations.

FOUND WASTE AT HOME.

"In this connection, because this theme has long made a peculiar appeal to me, I should like to add another thought. The men of the Confederate armies went home after the war to a land that not only was devastated but had suffered literally a revolution of its economic system. However desirable were the ultimate results of that revolution, it imposed upon the people of the South a complication of difficulties which vastly aggravated their task of reframing an empire's social and industrial plan of life. Their achievement, in all the circumstances, constitutes one of the greatest accomplishments of any people in all history.

"Feeling thus, I hardly need tell you of the regret with which I have to say that it is impossible for me to accept an invitation which so greatly appeals to me.

"I will be glad to have you convey to the assembled veterans my most ardent wishes for their happiness, health, and prosperity, and my hope that they may gather for many more equally agreeable occasions of the sort."

That generous and just and splendid encomium made by the President of the United States should be embalmed in our record and go down in history as the utterances of that great man, in which he showed his greatness more than in any other act since he became a public servant. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when we had the service pay bill under consideration we investigated many things. The purpose of the pay bill was to equalize the pay of the men in the service. When we had that bill up for consideration in the House I made the statement that I was, and am now, opposed to the retirement of any officer from the Army or the Navy or Marine Corps on any other ground than that of physical disability. [Applause.] In the Army—and I speak advisedly because I know—we have numerous ways of getting officers retired. We understand how that great man, General Harbord, a man for whom I have the highest admiration, was retired. We understand how General Cronkhite was put out under another provision, and properly so under the law—we understand that after 40 years of service a man can be retired regardless of age—and furthermore I am one of those who believe that the American boys of the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps are all our boys and ought all to be treated alike, but there is a difference in the retirement law affecting the Navy and the Marine Corps and the Army.

I for one would like to see a joint committee of the House and Senate take this matter up and give to it the consideration that the joint committee gave to the service pay bill and come back here in 1924 with a recommendation for a law that will equalize these things, and do justice to all and protect this Government against these many ways of retiring men for other than physical disabilities. [Applause.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman says that he is for equality and justice. He does not follow that to the emergency officers of the Army?

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely. The emergency men who went in to fight our battles in the World War were of two classes—one was officers and the other privates—and I stand here today maintaining, and shall continue to maintain, that those boys who went in to fight our battles shall be treated with equality and that no preference shall be shown to the officers.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman does not apply that to the Regular Army, however?

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely to the Regular Army; that is my position, and the gentleman from California well knows it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Was it not the conclusion of every Member who served on the special committee on pay that the retirement provision should be investigated and made uniform?

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely. We saw the inequalities and the evils of the present existing law, and this resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] does no more than provide for a study of this question and a recommendation to the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman seems to be very earnest about this matter. He has been an able member of the Committee on Military Affairs for years. Why has he not had that committee attend to this matter? Why bring it in here on a naval bill, which contains important matters that the committee has considered carefully, and, without any further consideration than you can give it at this time, add it to this particular bill? There will be other opportunities. Let us get this legislation through; let us do this.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit an answer, a resolution has been introduced by the gentleman from Ohio providing for this, and it is before the Committee on Rules. From my experience in trying since last June to get a resolution through that committee to provide for the consideration of the Muscle Shoals proposition, I have but little hope that this resolution will ever come out of that committee; and when we get a chance at this time to do something by amendment that is why I am in favor of doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 8, beginning with line 22, strike out all of section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to make thorough investigation and determination of the merits of all claims which may be submitted to him in writing, and verified under oath, within six months from the date of approval of this act, for any loss alleged to have been caused to any contractor, subcontractor, or material man in the performance of any fixed price (including fixed unit price) contract entered into by any person, firm, corporation, or association within the United States, through the Secretary of the Navy or the Navy Department from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, inclusive, or entered into prior to April 6, 1917, to be completed after that date, which loss or delay was caused to such contractor, subcontractor, or material man by the action of any Government agency by reason of priority orders for material or transportation, commandeering of property or material, or other order of Government authority not authorized by the contract, on or between the dates above mentioned: Provided, That in determining the loss on any contract entered into prior to April 6, 1917, only such part of the uncompleted contract as was affected by the interference of the Government or some Government agency shall be subject to adjudication: Provided further, That no claim for alleged losses on account of increases in wages shall be made under the provisions of this section by any contractor, subcontractor, or material man until he has established proof to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that he has complied with the order issued by the Macy Board or other Government boards and has actually paid his employees the award ordered by said board.

No claimant shall obtain such relief whose entire volume of business with the Government or as a subcontractor or material man upon contracts with the Government during the period aforesaid shall have yielded a net profit of not less than 6 per cent or more: Provided, That no claim shall be examined or reported which rests upon a contract under which the prime contractor shall have given a full, final, qualified, or unqualified release to the United States.

In the performance of the duties of this section the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent therewith, as may be proper and necessary for the orderly conduct of his duties thereunder, and is hereby authorized to summon witnesses and examine them under oath, acting either in person or through such agencies as he may establish, and to require claimants to exhibit their books and papers, and to obtain from the Secretary of the Treasury income tax and other financial reports, and submit them to him, where the same may be pertinent to the questions under inquiry.

That the Secretary of the Navy shall decide each claim presented under this section in accordance with the principles of justice and equity; and if it shall be found that on account of such action of the Government hereinbefore stated a loss was caused to any such claimant, the Secretary of the Navy shall fix and determine the amount thereof and shall recommend for allowance to claimant such part, and only such part, of said loss as, taken together with the claimant's net profits on the entire volume of business claimant may have had on account of contracts with the Government during the periods mentioned in paragraph 1 of this section, shall not exceed 6 per cent of such volume of business; and if it shall be found that by reason of any act of the Government, as above stated, the Government shall have a claim for liquidated damages against any claimant or petitioner on account of any such contract mentioned in the first paragraph of this section for delay in its performance, the Secretary of the Navy may so find, and such Government claim for damages on account of such delay may be waived and become of no effect: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall make a report, through the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, of his proceedings and findings under this section to Congress for appropriation on or before January 2, 1924.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk. It is a typographical error.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRITTEN: Page 13, line 6, strike out the words "not less than."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. This section is practically the same thing that was up here about a year ago when this House was on the eve of killing it, when, I think, the chairman of the committee [Mr. BUTLER] withdrew it.

Mr. BLANTON. It has been killed twice.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is a proposition that has met with condemnation in this House every time it has been here. It comes now dressed in a little different clothes, but it is the same old proposition. It is the Dent Act over again, nothing more, nothing less. It is an act that authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to allow all kinds of claims which are illegal and which can not be maintained under any law that exists, and of the extent and the amount of which nobody has any comprehension. It is a proposition that ought to be stopped, and immediately.

Mr. BLANTON. How is the gentleman going to stop it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There is but one way to stop it, and that is to strike it out of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will do that, we will make him leader.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Naval Affairs, if they desire and think there is any merit in the proposition, can prepare and introduce a bill which will permit these people who have just claims to go to the Court of Claims for adjudication of their matters, but time and time again they have returned with this proposition to the House which simply does away with any legal adjudication and leaves to one man, who happens to be the Secretary of the Navy, the right to adjudicate these claims.

What kind of claims are they? They are claims, as I have said, that are absolutely illegal. They are any claims that arise from alleged damages that occurred on contracts that were made and executed between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, during the period of the war, on account of any delay that was caused by any order of the Government of any kind which was not expressed in the contract under which these gentlemen were operating. That means anything; that means everything. Can you conceive of any possible delay or any possible loss that might have accrued to any contractor under any contract during this time, outside of his own ill-advised bidding on a proposition, that would not have occurred on account of the war that was in existence, when thousands of executive orders were being issued every day by every department? Every one of these and every cent of loss that is occasioned by any of these things can be charged up now and within six months after the passage of this act brought in before the Secretary of the Navy for adjudication. Gentlemen say to me that it is safe to trust him to settle these things, and that I ought to be willing to take the word of the Secretary of the Navy, one of the executive officers of my own Government for these things. I do not believe from my experience, based on experience that extended over two years of investigations of this kind, that any executive bureau of the Government ought to ever again be trusted with this sort of power. [Applause.]

And I will never, so far as I am concerned, vote for such a proposition. Let these claims be produced in a legal way. If there is somebody who suffered loss on account of contracts that ought to be repaid, let the loss be so fixed that they can go into a court of justice and have them adjudicated. You will observe from this amendment that there is no record kept. The Secretary of the Navy is not required to have witnesses summoned, he is not required to keep a record, and when allowances are made there is no appeal to any court or the Congress or anybody else. And here a lot of claims amounting to possibly millions or hundreds of millions are brought in here upon which there is not a scrap of paper afterwards available as to what has been done.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask for information. I have read this rather hurriedly, but is the Secretary of the Navy given any more power than to report to the Budget?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wanted that very clear.

Mr. HUSTED. He is given authority to fix the amount of the claim and then makes a report to the Budget Bureau——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VINSON. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I ask that I may have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does it not provide, page 14, lines 16 to 19, that he is required annually to report to the Bureau of the Budget and the Bureau of the Budget reports to Congress, and upon that the Congress takes such action as it sees fit?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No. Here is what happens. He goes to work and passes on these claims, makes a finding and makes such an allowance as he sees fit. What does he do? On page 14 you will find—

That if it shall be found that by reason of any act of the Government, as above stated, the Government shall have a claim for liquidated damages—

As on account of a claim against the contractor—against any claimant or petitioner on account of any such contracts mentioned in the first paragraph of this section for delay in its performance, the Secretary of the Navy may so find, and such Government claims for damages on account of such delay—

Observe how carefully the contractor is looked after—may be waived and become of no effect.

Then what?

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall make a report, through the Director of the Bureau of the Budget—

Of what?—

of his proceedings and findings under this section to Congress for appropriation on or before January 2, 1924.

Mr. HUSTED. The language of the bill on top of page 14 provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall fix and determine the amount thereof, so that the determination of the Secretary of the Navy is in effect a judgment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely.

Mr. HUSTED. And he reports to the Budget Bureau, which passes it on to the Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. It is in effect a determination of a court against the Government. Now, if the gentleman will yield, if it was confined to the war period it would be bad enough, but it permits the Secretary to go behind April 6, 1917, and find on contracts that existed before that date, before the war started.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It extends to contracts made before the war.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In our appropriation bills here we are asked to appropriate to pay judgments morally, and under this provision the recommendation by the Budget would be morally effective upon us to pay——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely, that is what I wanted to get straight. The determination of any of these claims would be a determination made and submitted to Congress through the Budget and Congress would be morally bound.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. Now, just a moment. The gentleman will observe it is the same thing as occurs when cases have been to the Court of Claims and that court has rendered judgment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. After the Secretary has determined the amount of the claim and that determination formed the basis of an action by the Court of Claims?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; that ends it.

Mr. OLIVER. If the gentleman will permit, I have prepared an amendment which I intend to offer, in keeping with the idea the committee had, and it was in this language, that at the end of the section, "provided that any action taken by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of this section shall be effective only as a recommendation, to be submitted to Congress through the Director of the Bureau of the Budget." And I understand that is all the committee intends.

Mr. VINSON. That is the way it is now.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. When this matter was up before the gentleman from the Naval Affairs Committee asked how they could do this thing if they did not do it in this way, and it was pointed out in this House that they could bring those claims in here and have them passed upon by Congress if they were found to be of sufficient importance.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice on lines 16 to 19, inclusive, on page 14 this language:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall make a report through the Director of the Bureau of the Budget of his proceedings and findings under this section to Congress for appropriation on or before January 2, 1924.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; that is all there is to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I most earnestly trust this amendment will prevail. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request? There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. WINGO. Is the pending motion to strike out section 11, or to strike out the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. It is to strike out section 11.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. His presentation of his motion clearly shows that he knows absolutely nothing about the intention of this section. Nowhere in this section has the Secretary of the Navy any authority, or anyone acting for him, to bind Congress, to determine how Congress will ultimately adjudicate these claims. This section is entirely different from the Dent Act.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question on that?

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If the Secretary of the Navy can not bind us at all, what good is all this work?

Mr. VINSON. The idea is to permit the Secretary, during the nine months that Congress is in vacation, to examine witnesses and examine contracts, and see if any of the contractors have a bona fide claim. If they have, then the Secretary is required to report to Congress, when each and every Member will be free to exercise for himself the right to determine whether the judgment of the Secretary in his opinion justifies an appropriation.

Now, the difference between this section and the Dent Act is that the Dent Act conferred power upon the department to settle claims. Nowhere does this section authorize the Secretary to settle the claims. Congress exercises its own right to settle these claims when the time comes to make an appropriation.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again for a question?

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. What does the language mean on page 14, at the top, where it says that "The Secretary of the Navy shall fix and determine the amount thereof"?

Mr. VINSON. The Secretary makes his report to the effect that John Jones is entitled to $3,000. But that is no authorization for Congress to appropriate the money, nor a moral obligation requiring that the gentleman from Ohio shall follow the Secretary's views and appropriate $3,000. It is left for Congress to appropriate the $3,000.

Mr. BEGG. Then if it is not binding on the Congress, Congress must go ahead and hold duplicate hearings and obtain new evidence.

Mr. VINSON. When the Secretary makes his report to the Budget Bureau it is the duty of the Congress to inquire into it. It is the duty of Congress to settle these claims, instead of permitting the department to settle them.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the fact that appropriations are necessary to pay the judgments of the Court of Claims. Congress can refuse, and sometimes does refuse, to appropriate for those claims, but this adjudication by the Secretary of the Navy will be just as binding on the Congress as would be a judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. VINSON. No. This would go before the Appropriations Committee to determine whether or not the claimant is entitled to relief. There is no requirement on the part of the gentleman from Tennessee that he must agree with the view of the Appropriations Committee or with the views of the Secretary of the Navy. We determine that question when he makes his report.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Of course there is no positive obligation on Congress to appropriate, and a man can repudiate his debts if he wishes.

Mr. VINSON. It is no moral obligation.

Mr. CARTER. What is the purpose of this bill if it is not supposed that Congress shall make an appropriation? That is expressed in lines 16 to 19:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall make a report, through the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, of his proceedings and findings under this section to Congress for appropriation on or before January 2, 1924.

Mr. VINSON. That is to permit Congress to continue to retain jurisdiction of the claims. That is to permit the gentleman from Oklahoma to have his say as to whether or not he will vote to appropriate one dollar to these claimants. Instead of letting the Secretary determine it, we place the responsibility where it belongs, on the Congress, where the gentleman from Oklahoma can have a voice.

Mr. CARTER. Language similar to that is placed in bills that are sent to the Court of Claims—sent there for adjudication.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON. This section is so drafted that there are but six claims that can be considered from the Bureau of Yards and Docks. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] will carefully read it, he will see that no claimant can file a claim after he has given the Government a qualified receipt. What has happened? In a great many instances there have been disputes between the Navy Department and contractors in reference, we will say, to some governmental order. They were not able to settle the claims standing on the company's books, and therefore they said, "We request you to pay us 75 per cent of the claim, and later we will file a claim for the balance, for the remaining 25 per cent." Under this section no claimant who has a claim of that character is permitted to go to the Secretary of the Navy and file his claim. In other words, when we put in there the words "if a contractor gave a qualified receipt" it made this section as harmless as a dog with his teeth pulled out. There is nothing to the bill but to permit the Secretary to gather the evidence and report on a handful of little claims; and it is nothing but proper that he should have the right to gather this evidence like a master in chancery.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am under the impression, from reading the provision hurriedly, that the terms of it are somewhat larger and more liberal than those of the Dent Act.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman is clearly mistaken.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this language here. It applies to these losses:

which loss or delay was caused to such contractor, subcontractor, or material man by the action of any Government agency by reason of priority orders for material or transportation, commandeering of property or material, or other order of Government authority not authorized by the contract.

That is larger than the terms of the Dent Act, as I understand the provisions of the Dent Act.

Mr. VINSON. Suppose a contractor was to file a claim for loss by reason of increased wages. It is incumbent upon the contractor to prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary that he has complied with the orders of the Macey Board, that he has complied with every order of every governmental department with reference to wages, and that he has paid the actual wages that these boards have authorized.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But I understand that this goes even further than that.

Mr. VINSON. This bill should be used as a model for future bills of this character, because it is so restricted that every protection is accorded to the Government. A contractor must come in with clean hands before he can get any relief.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. What I am afraid of is that it will be used as a precedent and a model and that it will trouble us in the future.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why should a man who was compelled to take 75 per cent of the amount of his claim be penalized?

Mr. VINSON. I will state to the gentleman that there is some merit in his suggestion, because this probably does injustice to some contractor; but knowing the temper of the House, knowing that the House was prejudiced on account of our having previously surrendered our power to some department, we put that in there to restrict the character of claims that can be filed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then the man who had capital enough so that he was able to wait for his money will get 100 cents on the dollar and the other man will get only 75 per cent.

Mr. VINSON. I will say to the gentleman that there are only six claimants before the Bureau of Yards and Docks who can file their claims who can qualify if this is retained in the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is on account of the principle involved that I am objecting to it.

Mr. VINSON. Morally the man who gave a qualified receipt should have just as much right to file a claim as if he had given no receipt at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman make any distinction between "receipt" and "release"? The wording of the bill is "qualified release." Under the act authorizing a claimant to receive 75 per cent of the amount in dispute if he gave only a receipt for that amount we enabled him to go to the Court of Claims for the balance of 25 per cent. Here you are using language different from a receipt, for you say "qualified or unqualified release."

Mr. VINSON. In the Navy Department "release" means identically the same that "receipt" does.

Mr. STAFFORD. "Release" is not the same as "receipt."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. CHINDBLOM, and Mr. HUSTED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if what my colleague from Illinois has said here was correct I would be in favor of striking out the entire section, but he is entirely ignorant of the facts, and I am surprised at the position he has taken. He has not the slightest idea of what this bill contemplates doing. Yet he comes to his colleagues from Illinois and wants to be the next leader of the House. I am astonished at the gentleman's position. This is no more like the Dent bill than the gentleman now looks like a house and lot. It is entirely different. It is no more like the kind of bill that the House had before it two years ago than the sun is like the moon. There is no comparison whatever, none.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Tell us what the difference is.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will tell you what the difference is. The bill that was then before the House carried an appropriation, allowed claimants to file even though their contracts had been closed; established losses on an entirely different basis; covered hundreds of claims or prospective claims while this bill covers but a few. Senate bill 32, which this bill displaces, carried an appropriation, but in this bill which we have reported no appropriation is suggested. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], that the Secretary's finding shall be purely a recommendation and nothing else, is what the committee desires. It has been frequently said on the floor of the House that a moral obligation of the Government is stronger than a contractual one. Here we have both.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me complete my statement and then I will yield. Here we have a situation covering only six claimants in the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, and the total amount involved is $37,000, and of those six the bureau chief says that two may not be affected.

So there is probably only four. All the other contracts before that bureau have been settled. There is nothing here that would justify opening contracts already closed. This bill does not allow the opening of claims that have been settled. Nothing can be reopened. There are five or ten claims pending there now which Congress has practically acted upon which the Secretary desires to settle. The claimants can not go into the Court of Claims, the court has no jurisdiction; they have got to come here and we, in our best judgment, must determine their claims. We do not suggest that the Secretary settle with them; we wanted Congress to do that at a later date. That we will have to examine books and keep accounts and all that sort of stuff is entirely without foundation.

The claims here are based upon this telegram of the Secretary of the Navy, and I leave it to you gentlemen of the House whether you want to live up to an agreement like this by the Secretary of the Navy. You have already appropriated the money which now is lying in the Treasury for a specific piece of work—the building of the battleship Idaho—a million dollars. The Secretary wants to pay it. Congress appropriated the money, but the comptroller says that under the law it can not be paid, and that special legislation must be enacted authorizing the payment of that money. A paragraph in the bill is for that purpose. The Secretary has got to recommend through the Bureau of the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations and have reappropriated any amounts of money. Let me read the telegram sent in the time of war to the contractor who was building the Idaho. He was directed to expedite its construction. Mind you, his contract was entered into before we got into the war. That was when labor was not what it was when we got into the war and when the prices of materials was not what they were after we got into the war. The chairman of the Naval Committee, Mr. BUTLER, went to the Secretary of the Navy and pleaded with him to do this very thing. Does anybody doubt the honest purpose and intent of the chairman of the Naval Committee? The contractor replied: "If I go ahead on the Idaho and probably work three shifts under the disadvantages of the war and the war is on now, will you pay me the excess cost?" The Secretary telegraphed: "Yes; I will pay you the excess cost; submit your bill." He submitted his bill and Congress appropriated, but now these gentlemen say we ought not to pay it. Is it not absurd, and my distinguished ambitious leader is trying to make people believe that it is like the Dent bill which covered informal contracts, direct and indirect, where a corporal in the field ordered something that was called an indirect contract, and we had to pay under the Dent bill. There is nothing like that in our bill.

There is no way under heaven, gentlemen, that contractors can get money due them unless we authorize it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have his time extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. We are authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate for these claims, and there is nothing doubtful in the claims, gentlemen. There are only half a dozen. Now, let me read you the telegram. Understand once more you all know our old Roman, Mr. BUTLER, would not go to the front for anything that was not absolutely right. He pleaded with the shipbuilders. They are in his district or just across the river. He went to them and pleaded with them to complete the ships so that we could get into the war. It would have been the biggest fighting machine in existence. They went ahead under the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy.

These men submitted their increased costs to the department for the department's approval, and the department after careful investigation approved it. Congress appropriated, and for all this time there has been a million dollars which should have been in public use lying in the vaults of the Treasury. I have a letter from the Chief of Bureau of Supplies and Accounts verifying that fact. There is a million dollars lying in the vaults of the Treasury for this particular thing, and it seems absurd to say that it should not be paid out to its rightful owner.

Now, my good friend over here is complaining about the proviso in the bill that permits the Secretary to waive liquidated damages. My Lord, that is awful; that is a terrible thing—waive damages for delays caused by the Government itself. Let me state a few cases to you. A man was building a tug over in New York—I think it was the Herreshoffs—but that case has been settled.

He then went into the mine-sweeper game for us, the building of small craft. When his tug was about ready for completion along came the War Department with a priority order and took his mechanical equipment away from him, stating that they needed the stuff in France and that it was more important that they have it over there than here. He complained and said, "But you are going to delay the completion of this ship." They replied they knew that, but that an extension would be granted. The Government did grant an extension of time for 30 or 40 or 60 days, whatever it was. There is nothing wrong about that; but the comptroller has held that the Secretary of the Navy could not waive liquidated damages in a case of that kind, and he had to assess $50 a day or $100 a day, as the case might be. This provision allows him to waive those liquidated damages. These are unimportant compared with the claim about the Idaho. They amount to only about $37,000. My friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is a very good friend of mine, and I regard him very highly, and I am for him; he is a capable man——

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether he is capable or not, and we must vote for a House leader, and I want to know whether he is capable or not. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman states that there are only six claims which will be affected by this provision.

Mr. BRITTEN. Six in the Bureau of Yards and Docks and two in the Bureau of Construction and Repair; none in Ordnance; none in Engineering and none in Supplies and Accounts.

Mr. HUSTED. If that is the case, why was the provision so drawn as to give the Secretary of the Navy authority to decide any and all claims which may be filed within six months after the passage of this act.

Mr. BRITTEN. They apply to these particular claims.

Mr. HUSTED. It certainly would apply to any claims that may hereafter come in.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no. The language specifically says that when a contractor has signed a release, qualified or unqualified, with the Navy Department he has no further claim, and his claim, if he filed one, would not be adjudicated under that.

Mr. HUSTED. Then what does the following language mean?

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to make thorough investigation and determination of the merits of all claims which may be submitted to him in writing, and verified under oath, within six months of the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think I have answered the question, but I shall answer it again. As near as we can tell from the various chiefs of the bureaus, there are no claims that will come under the provisions of this bill from the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy Department and none from the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

Mr. DOWELL. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. BRITTEN. Because we have inserted in the hearings the letters or statements from the chiefs of the bureaus affected by the legislation.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, why direct the Secretary of the Navy to investigate every claim filed within six months after the passage of the act?

Mr. BRITTEN. He only investigates those claims that come under the provisions of the act.

Mr. DOWELL. Oh, no. He is directed to investigate every claim filed within six months of the passage of the act.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is not in violation of the act, and the act specifies the kind of claim that can be considered.

Mr. DOWELL. But you provide for any loss. It is for any loss under any contract within certain dates.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no.

Mr. DOWELL. Let me read this paragraph.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is for certain losses under contracts in the Navy Department where a settlement has not already been made.

Mr. DOWELL. Listen to this language for a moment. This provides that he shall investigate the claim if filed within six months of the passage of the act "for any loss alleged to have been caused to any contractor, subcontractor, or material man, in the performance of any fixed-price contract entered into by any person, firm, corporation, or association with the United States through the Secretary of the Navy or the Navy Department from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, inclusive." That is so clear that it can not be misunderstood. He must investigate every claim of loss that occurred to any contractor who made a contract with the department within those dates.

Mr. CARTER. And it even goes back before the beginning of the war.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. The bill is very clear in that it states the kind of contractor who has right to file a claim. He must be one who has not already given his receipt to the department.

Mr. DOWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The language says, "any contractor who has sustained a loss" under a contract within those dates.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will answer the gentleman in three words—provided that no claim shall be examined or reported which rests upon a contract under which the prime contractor shall have given a full, final, qualified, or unqualified release to the United States.

What does the gentleman say to that?

Mr. DOWELL. That is where a claim has been completely settled.

Mr. BRITTEN. Certainly; and there are no others, except those whose names have been given us by the chiefs of the bureaus.

Mr. DOWELL. But they have six months' time within which to file claims from the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, on another point.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is the gentleman satisfied with the language there?

Mr. DOWELL. I am not. My claim, and I believe I am justified in it, is that the Secretary of the Navy must investigate every claim that is submitted by any contractor who has sustained a loss under a contract with the department between certain dates.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me read it again, please.

A MEMBER. What page?

Mr. BRITTEN. Page 13, line 7, the proviso.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to interrogate the gentleman upon the other question where he says the Secretary of the Navy has no authority to settle claims. At the bottom of page 13 I read the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall decide each claim presented under this section in accordance with the principles of justice and equity, etc., and shall fix and determine the amount thereof and shall recommend, etc.

Mr. BRITTEN. Recommend.

Mr. DOWELL. No; it says fix and recommend; I will read it.

Mr. BRITTEN. He must fix the amount when he investigates it.

Mr. DOWELL (reading):

And if it shall be found that on account of such action of the Government hereinbefore stated a loss was caused to any such claimant, the Secretary of the Navy shall fix and determine the amount thereof.

What does that mean? It means that it is final.

Mr. BRITTEN. What does he do when he fixes the amount? He must report to the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. DOWELL. I will tell you what he does. He then recommends to the Budget the amount of the findings so that the Budget under the law may submit to Congress an amount necessary and proper to pay the claim that has been allowed.

Mr. CARTER. Is not that just the same language used in reference to bills referring claims to the Court of Claims for judgment?

Mr. DOWELL. Absolutely, and there can be no question of the interpretation of the language.

Mr. BRITTEN. The intention and desire of the committee is not to have the Secretary settle, and it is not the desire to have Congress part with the control of the settlement of the findings, but the desire of the committee was that the final settlement and appropriation should be left to Congress.

Mr. HULL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for my own information. This permits the contractors not only to figure the actual loss but permits them to figure the prospective profits up to 6 per cent?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

Mr. HULL. That is what it does.

Mr. BRITTEN. Not at all.

Mr. HULL. What does this language mean where it says——

Mr. BRITTEN. It provides that where the contractor has been damaged by action of the Government, as indicated in my remarks a while ago, if the same contractor through all of his work for the Government has not made 6 per cent he may then file in just the amount of 6 per cent on all the work. It has no reference——

Mr. HULL. If he has not he can claim prospective profits?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

Mr. HULL. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this. The Dent Act eliminated all prospective profits or otherwise. This appears worse than the original Dent Act.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman intends to limit the provisions to these six claims, why does he not name them by saying the following claims, and possibly all objection will be obviated.

Mr. BRITTEN. There are eight. I have no objection——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman will do that I think he might eliminate the objection; otherwise the section will probably be killed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Besides, you have to grant the Secretary the right to waive liquidated damages.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion. It is now about time for the committee to rise and let me make this suggestion to the gentleman based upon the obvious temper of the committee. Had not you better rise and then by to-morrow morning, or whenever you take up the bill, have a provision that will amend this so as to restrict it to the six or eight claims with proper limitations that will authorize the Secretary of the Navy to ascertain what amount, if any, is due, and report his findings to the House? I think that may be better rather than——

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman suggest that it be made to the House or to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WINGO. Made to the Congress and not the Bureau of the Budget, because the framing of the language you have got would raise the contention that it was in the customary language in which these claims come to us for an appropriation. Let him report to the Congress the findings of fact, specifying the six or eight claims, and I think the House would be inclined to give it to you.

Mr. DOWELL. Congress will determine whether it should be paid.

Mr. WINGO. Report it to the Congress for consideration, not an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. We want to do the right thing. We are all manly men, and we need not be frightened because some man comes along and says the Government owes him money. All we desire to know is whether or not the Government does owe him money. Nobody is questioning anyone. They simply want to protect the Government from any claim that ought not to be made against the Government.

My two colleagues have worked out the best bill they could, so as to include all the claims that might be presented. In the case of the Idaho, I want to say to the Members who are here that you may believe me as a living witness, a man speaking the truth, when I say that never was such an injustice done before. I was one of the men who asked the Secretary to put this vessel to sea so that we might be successful in the war. The Idaho was under contract with the New York Shipbuilding Co. She lay there. It was not in my district. She lay over in New Jersey. I was one of those who persuaded the Secretary of the Navy to finish her, let the cost be what it would. I can not pay the bill, but I feel myself somewhat responsible to those shipbuilding people, because I urged that the vessel be finished. I perhaps overstepped the mark in my zeal and desire to see this ship prepared for service at sea. I had something to do with this 1916 building program to go to the war and fight the Hun. They covered the ship day and night with all hands possible and finished her, and she was sent to sea.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What year was that?

Mr. BUTLER. That was in the spring of 1918.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They have had that claim ever since?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. That claim has never been paid.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It has not been paid, but it has not been presented to the Court of Claims?

Mr. BUTLER. No. The Court of Claims has no jurisdiction. Now, I want to say to my friend from Wisconsin that the Secretary approved of this claim. He had all the claims before him.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Did the Court of Claims have jurisdiction over that?

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman tell us why?

Mr. BUTLER. It is not based on a contract for damage.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not based on any contract that is valid or recognized by the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. The money was set aside and the claim was intended to be paid with promptness. But the authorized cost of the ship had been exceeded. We were limited to so much money, and it cost $800,000 or $900,000 more to complete her in advance of the time and make her ready for battle.

I am going to suggest this, if it is agreeable to my two young friends, who worked very hard on this matter. Their services should not be overlooked. They are as careful as the rest of us. I suggest that we pass over this section unacted upon and think it over until the morning, when you will probably have presented to you a measure upon which you can all agree, where the claim will be fully set out, with authority given to the Secretary of the Navy to report the facts to Congress. I am told by the leader of the House that this is the last day for us. We have some provisions here in which I am interested, but I am not going to press them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope we can put our heads together, and I want the view of the gentleman from Alabama to be considered along with those of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY], and I hope to-morrow we shall be able to bring here some suggestion by which justice can be done these claimants.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to state to the House, with the permission of the gentleman, that I was on the Committee on Naval Affairs when many of these claims were considered, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] was largely in accord with me and held that we should be very careful in preparing the bill whereby these claims should be considered by the Secretary for investigation and report. He felt that from his personal knowledge of at least one claim it was a foundation for a meritorious measure and had been overlooked. I went to him this morning and, recognizing, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] has pointed out, that, standing alone, some of these words might be misconstrued and might perhaps do what this Congress and this committee did not desire to be done, I drew this amendment and asked him if it would meet his approval at the end of the section, and he said it did, showing that nothing would be done by the Secretary that would in any way place an obligation on the Government or release any rights the Government had. And here is the way it reads:

That any action taken by the Secretary of the Navy under the authority of this section shall be taken only as a direction to the Congress through the Bureau of the Budget, and shall not be considered as imposing any obligation against the Government or releasing any claim or rights of the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I know that was the attitude of the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. I am in entire accord with my friend. This subject is a very old one between him and me. We have been endeavoring to hold off any claim that we thought perhaps might not have a real, substantial foundation to it, and our purpose has been to bring the House into a frame of mind where it would permit the Government to ascertain the facts and to make a report somewhere, to get the official judgment and recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman to suggest that these claims be specified by name?

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest that by to-morrow we will have perhaps a substitute for this section that I think the House will accept.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not think there is any man in this House in whose honesty the Members have more confidence than in the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause.] This will satisfy me. What I have insisted all the time is that you name these claims and let the Secretary examine them and let us ultimately pass on them.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I have been endeavoring to do, not to bind the Secretary, but to have him say somewhere that the Idaho was under the direction of the Navy Department, that all this work was done under the direction of the department, that the department can not pay the money because they increased the cost of the ship, that they acted under great pressure; and then there will be something to act upon.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Why not pass this over by unanimous consent until to-morrow?

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that this section be passed over until this bill is again under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this section be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are several of us who would like to be heard on this section.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Are we going to be cut off to-morrow?

Mr. BUTLER. No; when we meet again for the purpose of considering this bill, we will have something to offer.

Mr. BLANTON. And we will be given an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How much longer are we going to run this afternoon?

Mr. BUTLER. I have not much to do with that.

Mr. BLANTON. There are some other matters here that will be controverted.

Mr. BUTLER. I renew my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this section be passed over, to be called up at a later session of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPEAL OF SO MUCH OF SECTION 3 OF THE ACT OF JUNE 4, 1920, AS AUTHORIZES TRANSFERS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR NAVY.

SEC. 12. That hereafter no officer of the United States Naval Reserve Force shall be transferred to or appointed in the regular Navy under the provisions of section 3 of the act of June 4, 1920, and so much of said section 3 of the act of June 4, 1920, as authorizes such transfers and appointments is hereby repealed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to speak on the section which has just been passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition to turn over claims against the United States Government for consideration by the Secretary of the Navy either in person or (see line 16, on page 13) "through such agencies as he may establish." These agencies may conduct hearings and examine witnesses in private. The hearings may be held in any office where the agency established by the Secretary may decide to hold them. There will be no publicity. The procedure will not be like that in the Court of Claims, where the Government and the claimant are represented by counsel and there is examination and cross-examination of witnesses in public. But these claims against the Government are to be heard in private anywhere that the agents may choose to consider them.

And now I direct especial attention to the mandatory language in line 22, page 13. It is there provided that "the Secretary of the Navy shall decide each claim," and so forth. Now, to "decide" a claim means to render a final decision upon it. That is exactly what it means and nothing else. So that the Secretary of the Navy, after this possibly secret hearing by some agent that he has appointed, is to "decide" the claim, and then, in accordance with the proviso on page 14, lines 16 to 19, inclusive, he is to report it to Congress "for appropriation." Mark those words—"for appropriation." He "decides" the claim and reports it to Congress "for appropriation."

I repeat that the only possible reasonable construction to put upon that language is that the Secretary of the Navy having "decided"—that is, rendered final decisions—as to the amounts due, these claims are to be reported to Congress not for examination and decision but "for appropriation."

As for myself, Mr. Chairman, if the question comes upon the motion to strike out the section in its present form, I shall support the motion. This making the Treasury of the United States subject to the payment of claims adjudicated in secret is all wrong.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does my friend feel that a contract is adjudicated in secret when it is investigated by the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy Department, and then the Secretary makes his report to the Bureau of the Budget, and the Bureau of the Budget makes its report to an appropriating committee in Congress, and they all determine on its propriety? Does the gentleman call that a settlement in secret?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois has supposed a lot of things that are not germane to the question now before the House, because they are not to be found in the pending bill. I have directed attention to the language of the bill and to its plain intent. I have seen this sort of thing done before, and this is one of the most indefensible propositions that in many years has been presented to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SWING. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Wisconsin moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. SWING. This section of the bill was passed over by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California claim the floor?

Mr. SWING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, if the proper thing is not for the Clerk to read the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. The next section has been read and has been debated by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANTON. And I rise in opposition.

Mr. SWING. The gentleman from Wisconsin has been debating the section which has been passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asked unanimous consent to do that, which was granted.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I offer an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. After line 3, insert a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 15, after line 3, insert a new section as follows: "That on and after July 1, 1922, the retainer pay of all men who were on that day transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve or the Fleet Marine Corps Reserve shall be computed on the rates of pay authorized for enlisted men of the naval service by the act approved June 10, 1922: Provided, That the retainer pay of said reservists shall be not less than that to which they were entitled on June 30, 1922, under decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury in force on that date."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the further point of order that under the rule by which the bill is being considered only the committee amendments and amendments to those committee amendments are in order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand from the statement by the chairman of the Committee on Rules when the rule was presented for adoption that nothing but amendments to the committee amendments are in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is clearly subject to a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois does not wish to contest that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is on the subject matter of the preceding section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the use of sitting here all night considering propostions that are out of order. If the gentleman wants to speak, I have no objection, but we ought to rise now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will reserve his point of order——

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter to which I referred yesterday in a colloquy with the chairman of the committee. He then said that he believed that this matter was covered by the first committee amendment, designated as section 2.

When the pay bill was passed, that bill explicitly provided that members transferred from the Navy to the Fleet Naval Reserve should not, through its operations, be reduced from the pay now being received by them. The words "now being received" being an exact quotation from the language of the law. The Comptroller General subsequently rendered an opinion in which he overruled the decisions which had been rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury for a long period of time, and as a result of which such transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve got large reductions in pay. I think that was a great injustice against the men who have been in the service of the country. I am not going to pass judgment on the opinion of the Comptroller General at this moment, but those who are familiar with the facts in this case—and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in sympathy with the amendment——

Mr. BUTLER. I think it has merit, but I am not acquainted with all the facts.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman stated yesterday that he was in favor of it.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but it refers to another subject.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I will not take more time if the point of order is insisted on.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, under the leave to extend my remarks I want to make some further observations on my proposed amendment to section 12 of the committee amendment to Senate bill 4137. The act of June 10, 1922, was reported by a joint committee of both Houses, and is entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service." It was a comprehensive and well-considered legislative enactment. Section 10 of that act fixed the monthly base pay after July 1, 1922, of warrant officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Coast Guard, and authorized the Secretary of the Navy "to fix the pay grade for the various ratings of enlisted men of the Navy," and the Secretary of the Treasury "to fix the pay grade for the various ratings of the enlisted men of the Coast Guard." Thereupon, and immediately in that connection, there was placed in the law the following provision:

Nothing contained herein shall operate to reduce the pay now being received by any transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve.

It is clear that the purpose of this provision was to confirm these "transferred members" of the Fleet Naval Reserve in the pay which they were receiving on the date the law went into effect, which by its own terms was July 1, 1922. These transferred members continued to receive the pay which they were receiving both on June 10, 1922, and on July 1, 1922, until August 7, 1922, when the Comptroller General of the United States, in a decision, held that men transferred from the Regular Navy to the Fleet Naval Reserve between August 29, 1916, and July 11, 1919, were entitled to retainer pay on and after July 1, 1922, computed on the rates of pay authorized in the act of May 13, 1908. Although on June 30, 1922, they were receiving retainer pay computed on the rates of pay authorized in the act of May 18, 1920, under a series of decisions of the Comptroller of the Currency authorizing such computation. These decisions of the Comptroller of the Currency were four in number and had been accepted by the Comptroller General, who permitted the payments thereunder to be made up to June 30, 1922, and, in fact, up to August 7, 1922, when he reversed the Comptroller of the Currency, as well as his own acceptance of the latter's ruling on the subject.

While the joint congressional committee, appointed under the act of May 18, 1920, was considering the bill which became the law of June 10, 1922, I personally called upon members of the committee and their advisers and was assured that it was their purpose that the transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve should not be reduced in pay.

There is no question as to what was the intention of the Congress. I believe every Member of the House took the bill to mean what it said, viz, that the transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve should continue to draw the retainer pay which they were receiving—now—when the bill was passed. The Judge Advocate General of the Navy took the same position. Upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy the Comptroller General reconsidered the question, and on December 8 last reaffirmed his decision of August 7, 1922, except that in the later opinion he held that "payments prior to July 1, 1922, having been made otherwise under decisions in effect when made, they will not be disturbed." Doubtless the men affected are disposed to bow gratefully with an humble "For this relief, much thanks"; but the inquiry might be pertinent why an erroneous opinion—under the ruling of the Comptroller General—should authorize or condone payments prior to July 1, 1922, but not thereafter. Be that as it may, my view is that the Congress had the authority on June 10, 1922, when the pay bill was passed, to fix the basis for the retainer pay of these transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve, and the Congress did so fix that basis when it declared that nothing in that law should operate to reduce their pay below that which they were then receiving. It was not to be presumed that the executive officers of the Government, with the acquiescence and consent of the Comptroller General himself, were violating the law by paying larger compensation than the law permitted. The Congress took the status quo in this matter and based its action thereupon.

In his opinion of December 8 last to the Secretary of the Navy the Comptroller General stated, with reference to the provision in section 10 of the act of June 10, 1922, as follows:

The clause gives nothing affirmatively, but negatively prevents reduction of the pay authorized by law now being received.

The words "authorized by law" are interpolated by the Comptroller General; they are not in the act of June 10, 1922. The Congress could easily have used those words. It might have said that these service men should not be reduced below the pay "authorized by law," or the pay "to which any transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve is entitled." Those would have been customary and usual provisions. Instead of so expressing itself, the Congress took the state of facts then existing and generally known and made that situation the basis of its action, and that action was as much the law as any prior enactment. The Comptroller General begs the question when he says, as he does in his last opinion to the Secretary of the Navy, that the act of June 10, 1922, "does not authorize the continuance of pay of any character not provided by law." The act of June 10, 1922, is itself a law fixing pay which thereby and thereafter was "provided by law."

It is greatly to be regretted that the pending bill does not relieve the situation to which I have referred, but it is to be hoped that legislation to that end will be embodied in the measure before it is finally enacted. The proposition is highly meritorious and carries out the original intent of the Congress. Most of the men involved served through the war during the period of stress and danger and are entitled to transfer to the reserve fleet upon the basis of the pay they received when their services were no longer demanded.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we have no quorum present.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us read the next section. I am 20 years older than the gentleman from Texas, and I can stand it five minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well; I withdraw the point.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISCHARGES FOR THE GOOD OF THE SERVICE.

SEC. 13. That hereafter persons discharged from the naval service by dishonorable discharge, bad-conduct discharge, or any other discharge for the good of the service, may, upon discharge, be paid a sum not to exceed $25: Provided, That the said sum shall be fixed by, and in the discretion of, the Secretary of the Navy, and shall be paid only in cases where the person so discharged would otherwise be without funds to meet his immediate needs: Provided further, That hereafter the appropriation "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps," shall be available for the purchase of civilian outer clothing, not to exceed $15 per man, to be issued when necessary to marines discharged for bad conduct, undesirability, unfitness, or inaptitude.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 4137 and had come to no resolution thereon.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill for printing under the rules.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

THE REPARATIONS CRISIS.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a unanimous-consent request, and then I would like a minute to make a statement concerning it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, in the course of his remarks yesterday the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] quoted certain passages from an article, of which I am the author, in the January number of the Forum. My views are not at all those expressed by the gentleman from Minnesota. [Applause.] My good wishes are with France in her attempt to collect what is due to repair the damage caused her by Germany and the other central powers. The article in the Forum, which was written two months ago and several weeks before the occupation of the Ruhr Valley by the French forces, attempted to set forth the facts in regard to the reparations crisis in the stage which it had then reached. The article states plainly that there would be no injustice in collecting from Germany the full amount fixed by the Reparations Commission. The passages quoted by the gentleman from Minnesota in his speech are so associated with other material that my own view might be misunderstood by a careless reader. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my article be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated, in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

THE REPARATIONS CRISIS.

[By HENRY W. TEMPLE.]

Three things have brought Europe to the verge of economic ruin—the loss of man power and of capital during the four years of war, certain crushing and unworkable provisions of the peace treaty, and the continuing fears and jealousies of governments and peoples which have perpetuated old hatreds and created new ones. It is true that the present crisis arises out of the differences of opinion between the British Government and the French Government concerning Germany's willingness or ability to meet the reparations payments and the measures that ought to be taken to collect from the unwilling or bankrupt debtor.

In the Versailles peace treaty Germany specifically accepted the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage which the allied and associated governments and their peoples had suffered as a consequence of the war. The allied and associated governments also definitely recognized in the treaty that the resources of Germany were not adequate to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage. The treaty did not attempt to fix the amount of the damage for which compensation was to be made by Germany, but it did provide that Germany should pay 20,000,000,000 gold marks prior to May 1, 1921, and that payment should be made in gold, commodities, ships, securities, or otherwise, as the Reparations Commission might fix. The treaty further provided that the total amount of damages in addition to the above-mentioned 20,000,000,000 gold marks should be determined by the Reparations Commission and notified to the German Government on or before May 1, 1921.

On January 23, 1921, the Reparations Commission issued a statement showing that prior to December 31, 1920, Germany had delivered, in payment of the preliminary 20,000,000,000 gold marks, the following ships and commodities:

Coal estimated at 17,818,840 tons; sulphate of ammonia, 19,000 tons; steamers, sailing vessels, and trawlers, 2,054,729 tons gross; river craft and material, 38,730 tons; live stock, 360,176 beasts; seeds, 6,882,588 kilos; dyes and dyestuffs, 10,787,827 kilos; pharmaceutical products, 57,823 kilos; rolling stock (locomotives), 4,571; rolling stock (freight cars), 129,555; motor lorries, 5,000; railway material, 140,000 tons; agricultural machinery, machines, and implements, 131,505. In addition, the commission's statement showed that Germany had delivered the submarine cables under German control, of which only those privately owned were to be credited to reparations. The statement of the Reparations Commission further said that the list did not include certain other deliveries for which figures were not yet completely determined. In addition to these deliveries there were others not to be credited to the payment of the 20,000,000,000 gold marks, but which were in the nature of restitutions to France and Belgium, of agricultural material, industrial material, locomotives, and freight cars, to compensate for those seized by Germany in territory belonging to France and Belgium.

Conflicting estimates were placed upon the value of these payments in kind, but there is no doubt that they fell far short of the 20,000,000,000 gold marks required.

On May 10, 1921, Germany, under pressure, accepted the estimate made by the Reparations Commission of the additional reparations, which the commission fixed at the sum of 132,000,000,000 gold marks (about $33,000,000,000). This sum was covered by bonds which were to be issued in three series. Series A, amounting to 12,000,000,000, and series B, amounting to 38,000,000,000, bearing interest at 5 per cent, were delivered to the allied governments. The bonds of series C, amounting to 82,000,000,000 of gold marks, were also to be delivered by November 1, 1921.

They were to be without interest coupons and it was provided that they should be issued by the Reparations Commission "as and when it is satisfied that the payments which Germany is required to make in pursuance of this schedule are sufficient to provide for the payment of interest and sinking fund on such bonds." Annual payments were to be made as follows: A fixed sum of 2,000,000,000 gold marks, plus a variable payment amounting to 26 per cent of the value of German exports which, it was estimated, would amount to another billion. These annual payments were really sufficient only to cover the 5 per cent interest on bonds of series A and B and to provide an additional 1 per cent toward the amortization of these bonds. The payment was not sufficient to provide anything for the additional 82,000,000,000 gold marks of the bonds of series C. Payment of the first billion was made within the specified time, but almost immediately Germany began to assert her inability to make further payments as they became due, and there has been conference after conference, postponement after postponement until the present time. The French Government has shown more and more inclination to take stronger measures for the collection of these payments, and the possibility of independent action by that Government is a serious element in the European situation.

Of the proposal to occupy the Ruhr Valley the British prime minister said to the House of Commons: "We can not look with equanimity upon any action which seems to us likely, or which we believe will have the effect, not of producing reparations, but making them more difficult to get, perhaps making them impossible altogether." The prime minister continued: "I believe, and think that almost everyone believes, that the terrible trouble in Europe is that there is no hope of any solution unless France and we get together. I am perfectly sure of this, and I and the Government which I represent will be acting according to the wishes of the whole nation if we make clear that the difference is more serious than a difference between governments. The difference likely to arise is the difference between the public opinion of two countries, and we are looking from the point of view of maintaining good relations. That makes it more dangerous than if the only question were the difference of opinion between individuals and governments, and that is the reason, I am sure, we at home and the French Government will utilize the time that still remains to try to find some common method to deal with this problem."

The British premier recognizes that the German Government has allowed a tremendous inflation of its currency to take place, which has the effect in itself of making it impossible for Germany to meet any claims for reparations. He says also that the French go further and say that this was deliberately done by Germany, but he adds: "Honestly, I can not myself take that view; and this is the reason: It is perfectly true that by that method of passive resistance they can avoid forever paying any indemnity, but it only means what is very like suicide for Germany. I can hardly believe that any sane Government would deliberately adopt that course."

Even in this statement of the differences between his own opinion and that of the French Government we may observe some progress toward agreement. It is only a few weeks ago that many persons in France and even observant travelers in Germany were divided in opinion as to whether Germany was unable to pay or was really prosperous. It was pointed out that the German stores were full of customers making purchases, that there was almost no unemployment in Germany, and that in general business was active. This was true. Business was feverishly active, but the activity had peculiar causes. In the middle of August the mark was worth one thousand to the dollar. At the present time a dollar will buy more than 8,000 marks. The German people had realized that the fall in the value of the mark had only begun. In August and September they were spending their money as rapidly as possible lest it become worthless in their hands.

The depreciation of the mark is, of course, registered in an increase in the price of commodities, as that price is measured in marks. It was wise for the German people to buy to-day all that they needed to buy, or all the goods they could possibly make use of in the near future, because their money to-day would buy two or three times the quantity of goods that it would procure a month or two later. Merchants realized what was going on, and in many instances stores were closed against the rush of customers in order that the goods might be held for the higher prices of to-morrow. The merchant indeed would have been better off if he could have closed his store altogether and kept the goods in his possession rather than exchange them for money that was growing more and more worthless. He was unable to do this, however; he must sell his goods in order that he might have the means of buying food for his own family, even though he realized that he was eating up his capital and must ultimately go out of business. One of the keenest observers in the diplomatic corps in Berlin, an experienced business man and sound economist, said to me early in September that Germany was about six months behind Austria on the road to economic collapse. I had just returned from Vienna to Berlin, and his statement meant much to me.

My cab fare from the railway station to the hotel in Vienna amounted to 36,000 crowns. A very modest breakfast was 27,000 crowns. A room in the hotel was 220,000 crowns a day. These prices mean nothing when translated into American currency at the rate of 80,000 crowns to the dollar. When so translated they throw no light whatever on the economic situation in Austria. It is only when prices are translated into the terms of Austrian income and the changes of value are thought of with reference to contracts and securities that the situation becomes at all apparent. A note secured by mortgage in 1915 called for 250,000 crowns, which at par would be $50,000. The mortgage was paid off in August, 1922, and full payment of the 250,000 crowns was made. Translated into terms of American exchange, this means that a note for $50,000 was paid with $3.12½. A pension of 30,000 crowns was equivalent before the war to $6,000 in American money. The pension is still paid and still amounts to 30,000 crowns a year, but the year's income will pay for only one breakfast at the hotel. Wages have gone up, it is true, but not at all in proportion to the increase in prices. A manufacturer in Vienna told me that he was paying to the skilled workmen among his employees about 400,000 crowns a week, but he added that while this would probably buy food for the workman's family, it would not pay for the replacing of wornout shoes and clothing. The middle class—people living upon fixed incomes—have, of course, had no such readjustment as the working people have had in their advance in wages, and the result is that there is no longer a middle class.

Since September Germany has made rapid progress toward the condition that Austria had already reached; but the importance of Germany in the industrial and commercial organization of the world is so much greater than that of Austria that the economic destruction there, involving 60,000,000 people, destroying both their power to produce goods for the world's use and their power to purchase surplus products of other countries, would have a far greater effect in western Europe and America than the collapse of Austria. The crisis is much more than a political one involving the future relations of France and Great Britain, with the possibility of again disturbing the peace of the world. It is also an economic crisis which, even if war is not to be thought of, threatens disaster to the material side of the world's civilization.

The question involved is bigger than that of reparation for damage done by the war.

It is more important to America than the question of cancellation or payment of the war loans; but that statement does not mean that the war loans should be canceled or that the reparation payments should not be collected. It is far too soon to say that recuperation is impossible. Quick recovery, of course, must not be expected. The people of all the world should realize as early as possible that no act of any Congress or Parliament can at once set the world back on its foundations, so that we may proceed as if there had been no war. The immediate political crisis requires the prompt exercise of all the qualities of statesmanship; the restoration of prosperity, however, must be a slower process. Not only must statesmen realize but also the masses of the people must be convinced that such restoration can only come when the hundreds of billions of wealth destroyed by the war have been replaced—have again been created and accumulated by long-continued industry any saving.

Payments of immense sums by one nation to another, whether in reparation for war damages or for credit upon war loans, can not be made at once. They must be waited for with long patience. The total amount of indebtedness of all European countries to the United States, including war loans, the sums due from sales of war supplies and from sales of flour by the United States Grain Corporation, and other items, and including interest as well as principal, has now reached the enormous sum of eleven billions five hundred and twenty-five millions. The French Government owes the United States three billions seven hundred and seventy millions of this, the British Government owes us four billions seven hundred and forty-seven millions, and Italy owes one billion eight hundred and ninety-one millions. The remainder of the immense sum is owed by 17 other European nations. Great Britain is the only power of the 20 that has begun to pay interest on the obligation.

If the reparation bonds of series C, amounting to 80,000,000,000 gold marks, are to be canceled entirely—and there are signs that European public opinion may be ready for such a step—the remaining obligations represented by the bonds of series A and B amount to 50,000,000,000 gold marks, or approximately twelve and one-half billions of dollars. This sum owed by Germany is larger than the total owed to the United States by the 20 European nations. If the victors, who among them have already received from Germany more than 1,000,000,000 gold marks and the several billion marks in value represented by the payments in kind mentioned above, are unable to pay even the interest on eleven and one-half billions, it would appear reasonable that Germany may be unable to pay any large part of the reparations amounting to a still greater sum. It will be generally recognized in America that there would be no injustice in collecting from Germany the whole of the 132,000,000,000 gold marks ($33,000,000,000) named by the Reparations Commission as necessary to cover the damage for which Germany was responsible, if collection were possible. But if attempts at immediate collection by force would precipitate ruin, that would affect not only Germany but western Europe and America as well, then it is to be devoutly wished that the conference adjourned at London because of disagreement between France and Great Britain may be resumed later, with a better hope of reasonable adjustment.

There is increasing demand that the United States take part, directly or indirectly, in a conference which shall deal with this subject. Doubtless some among those that make this demand believe that the United States should shoulder the greater share of the financial burden. An international loan to Germany is suggested. There is no likelihood that the Government of the United States will tax the American people or will issue bonds to raise the large sum necessary for this purpose. There is no likelihood that private interests will make such a loan to Germany unless there should be a guaranty of such an arrangement concerning reparations as would permit Germany to use the loan for productive purposes—that is, to restore sound conditions in Germany—and unless there should be a further guaranty that when Germany has done this no power will send a military force into Germany to seize and control the industries thus restored. We in America can not live as if we were not a part of the world. We must be willing to use our resources and our energies in cooperation with European nations to prevent the wreck that threatens civilization, but we must avoid such participation as would rouse in America jealousies and hatreds from which our geographical position and our international policy in the past have kept us free.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13926. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3721. An act providing for the erection of additional suitable and necessary buildings for the National Leper Home.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 17, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1000. A letter from the Acting Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, transmitting a statement as of February 1, 1923, indicating the total number of positions at a rate of $2,000 or more per annum, the rate of salary attached to each position, and the number of positions at each rate in the central office, together with a statement indicating the corresponding information as of January 1, 1923, for the district and subdistrict offices; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1001. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for expenses of the international shooting competition, $25,000 (H. Doc. No. 583); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1002. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the General Accounting Office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, for additional personnel for auditing the financial transactions of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, $58,350 (H. Doc. No. 584); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1003. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations for the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, amounting to $602,500 (H. Doc. No. 585); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1004. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental and deficiency estimates for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for prior years, amounting to $21,163,725.37, together with certain proposed legislation (H. Doc. No. 586); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1005. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting deficiency estimate of appropriations for the Department of State for the relief and protection of American seamen, amounting to $1,516.49 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and $10,536.88 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; in all, $12,053.37 (H. Doc. No. 587); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1006. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, to reimburse the Territory of Alaska for moneys advanced to the Governor of Alaska for repairs to his residence at Juneau, Alaska, necessitated by fire in the building, amounting to $857 (H. Doc. No. 588); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1007. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Alien Property Custodian for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, $8,324.93 (H. Doc. No. 589); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1008. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the Supreme Court of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for a marble bust, with pedestal, and for an oil portrait of the late Chief Justice Edward Douglass White (H. Doc. No. 590); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1009. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, amounting to $78,838,515.95 (H. Doc. No. 591); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. VOLSTEAD: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 14337. A bill to incorporate the Belleau Wood Memorial Association; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1624). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DOMINICK: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 7851. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes,'" approved September 1, 1916, so as to provide for the terms of the district court to be held at Spartanburg, S. C.; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1625). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BOIES: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 3892. An act authorizing the State of California to bring suit against the United States to determine title to certain lands in Siskiyou County, Calif.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1626). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HERSEY: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 14226. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1627). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 14361) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to erect a building for the care of tubercular pupils; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 14362) to amend subdivision (II) of section 20 of the interstate commerce act as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mrs. HUCK: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 450) announcing that the Congress of the United States shall make no concessions to any country that does not refer the question of war to its people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PORTER: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 451) requesting the President to urge upon the governments of certain nations the immediate necessity of limiting the production of habit-forming narcotic drugs and the raw materials from which they are made to the amount actually required for strictly medicinal and scientific purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mrs. HUCK: A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 85) declaring the people of the Philippine Islands to be free and independent; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. FOCHT: A resolution (H. Res. 534) for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3136, the teachers' pay bill; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A resolution (H. Res. 535) for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3808; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BRIGGS: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Texas urging immediate recognition of the Obregon government in Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GILLETT: A bill (H. R. 14363) for the relief of Charles A. Eastman; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 14364) for the relief of Charles Beck; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. J. M. NELSON: A bill (H. R. 14365) granting an increase of pension to Aurora C. B. Kinney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 14366) granting a pension to Julia Conger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 14367) granting a pension to Visa A. Moser Elliott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7322. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Massachusetts branch, Boston, Mass., urging repeal of the espionage act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7323. By Mr. BRIGGS: Letter of Mr. R. C. Spinks, Crockett, Tex., urging passage of truth in fabric bill and other legislative relief; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7324. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of chairman New York League of Women Voters, urging passage of House bill 11490 transferring work of Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Bureau to the Department of Justice; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7325. Also, petition of Kings County Republican Committee, favoring a child labor amendment to United States Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7326. Also, petition of Maritime Association of the Port of New York, favoring passage of a bill providing for Government ownership and operation of Cape Cod Canal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7327. By Mr. RAINEY of Illinois: Petition of Eaton Priddy Post, No. 111, of the American Legion, favoring an appropriation for the development and promotion of the Organized Reserves and the citizens' military training camps; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 17, 1923.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Grant that we each may have a part in bringing in that kingdom until the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord, Jesus Christ. Enable us in all our duties to find an earnest of Thee in the understanding of the times and in our desire to fulfill Thy will. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, February 13, 1923, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	Harrison	McCormick
Ball	Dial	Heflin	McCumber
Bayard	Dillingham	Hitchcock	McKellar
Brookhart	Ernst	Johnson	McKinley
Bursum	Fernald	Jones, Wash.	McLean
Calder	Fletcher	Kellogg	McNary
Cameron	Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Moses
Capper	George	King	Nelson
Caraway	Gerry	Ladd	New
Colt	Glass	La Follette	Norris
Couzens	Hale	Lenroot	Oddie
Culberson	Harris	Lodge	Overman

Owen	Robinson	Sutherland	Warren
Page	Sheppard	Swanson	Watson
Phipps	Shields	Townsend	Weller
Pittman	Smith	Trammell	Willis
Pomerene	Smoot	Underwood
Ransdell	Spencer	Walsh, Mass.
Reed, Pa.	Sterling	Walsh, Mont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by citizens of Stoughton, Mass., in town meeting assembled, favoring the passage of legislation creating an agency of the Federal Government authorized to fix maximum prices for coal, providing that in the sale and shipment of coal at the mines or elsewhere orders from consumers, and dealers selling directly to consumers, shall take precedence over all other orders, and to provide for the prompt transportation of such shipments, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from W. T. Sherman, of Eldorado, Ark., chosen a committee of one by the Eldorado (Ark.) Central Labor Union, to transmit resolutions passed by that union protesting against the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution unanimously adopted by the convention of the National Association of Woolen and Worsted Overseers at Boston, Mass., favoring the passage of legislation establishing greater uniformity in the hours of labor in the textile industries of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. STERLING presented petitions of sundry citizens of Parkston, Dimock, Armour, Garretson, Menno, Freeman, and Clayton, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation granting immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A concurrent resolution.

Whereas South Dakota is almost wholly dependent upon agriculture, and consequently the market for agricultural products is of prime importance in our affairs; and

Whereas water transportation will reduce the cost of the carriage of wheat to the seaboard no less than 7 cents per bushel and proportionately upon other cereals, a saving that would add many millions to the market value of the products of our farms, to say nothing of the reduced cost of merchandise by reason of bringing the seaboard to the interior; and

Whereas the proposed Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway will bring South Dakota 2,000 miles nearer to the Atlantic and European markets and will result in substantial advantage to our markets and the consequent improvement to agricultural conditions and the general prosperity of the people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, memorialized and petitioned to promptly take such action as will result in immediate development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway: Be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the Secretary of the Senate and Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to His Excellency the President of the United States, Warren G. Harding.

CARL GUNDERSON,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.
E. O. FRESCOLN,
Speaker of the House.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. STERLING presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A concurrent resolution.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

Whereas a resolution introduced by Hon. W. R. GREEN, of Iowa, for the submission of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States eliminating the exemption from taxation of National, State, and municipal securities has passed the National House of Representatives; and

Whereas such exemption has provided an avenue of escape from taxation of billions of dollars invested in such securities, thus increasing to an unwarranted degree the burdens imposed upon other classes of property; and

Whereas if this plan of exemption from taxation is to be continued the burden of taxation will fall most heavily upon the productive capital and will relieve nonproductive capital from its fair share of taxation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota that provision should be made against the further continuance of this form of tax exemption and that said resolution should be adopted and an amendment should be made to the Constitution of the United States as proposed in said resolution; be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Hon. THOMAS STERLING and to the Hon. PETER NORBECK, Senators of the State of South Dakota.

CARL GUNDERSON,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.
E. O. FRESCOLN,
Speaker of the House.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition, numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of North Dakota, praying for the prompt passage of legislation stabilizing the prices of farm products to a level more nearly equal to the prices farmers have to pay for articles purchased, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate concurrent resolution.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY PROJECT.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring therein)—

Whereas the great and natural resources of the State of North Dakota are as yet undeveloped, and said State is dependent upon agriculture for its prosperity, and agriculture being the fundamental basis for prosperity in all Northwest States; and

Whereas in a large measure, if not entirely, the price of agricultural products is dependent upon foreign markets; and

Whereas the present rates for transportation of such products are too high to be in just proportion to the price received therefor at terminal markets, and thus has a tendency to curtail the production of the staple articles of agriculture needed by all people in all lands; and

Whereas the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project, if completed and perfected, will furnish to the people of the State of North Dakota a cheaper method of transportation of their products to foreign markets, thus assuring them a higher revenue for the same: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That we do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States and respectfully urge that Congress take immediate action toward the passage of such laws or law which will make possible the early completion and perfection of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States and the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and of the Montana and Minnesota Legislatures, respectively, also to our Members in Congress.

Approved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota and the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2625) for the relief of sufferers in New Mexico from the flood due to the overflow of the Rio Grande and its tributaries, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1157) thereon.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5027) to amend an act approved February 28, 1899, entitled "An act relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for District of Columbia buildings," reported it without amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 17, 1923, they presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2531. An act to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 3169. An act to equalize pensions of retired policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 4579) to authorize the Lee County Bridge District No. 2, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge over the St. Francis River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4580) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak.;

A bill (S. 4581) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Brule County and Lyman County, S. Dak.;

A bill (S. 4582) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Walworth County and Corson County, S. Dak.; and

A bill (S. 4583) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Charles Mix County and Gregory County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LADD:

A bill (S. 4584) to prohibit interstate commerce in the drug heroin (diacetyl-morphine); to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 4585) granting a pension to Alexander R. Banks; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 281) for the relief of St. Helens, Oreg., by improving the channel between the harbor of St. Helens and the Columbia River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 282) to amend the resolution of December 29, 1920, entitled "Joint resolution to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government"; to the Committee on Appropriations.

KANSAS CITY, MEXICO & ORIENT RAILROAD.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4528) for the relief of the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad, of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment providing that pursuant to the report of the joint select committee appointed under the provisions of the act of June 29, 1922, there shall be credited to the general account of the District of Columbia, required under the provisions of said act to be kept in the Treasury Department, the sum of $7,574,416.90, being the reported balance in the general fund of said District, as shown on the books of the Treasury on June 30, 1922, as certified by the Comptroller General of the United States, and as verified in the report of said joint select committee, and that certain sums enumerated shall be debited against said fund, leaving free surplus revenues in the Treasury on June 30, 1922, belonging to the District of Columbia of $4,438,154.92, as reported by said committee, which shall be available for the same purposes and to the same extent as amounts otherwise properly credited to the said general account in the Treasury Department, intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES—RELEVANCY OF DEBATE.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 443), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule XIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph, to be numbered 7, as follows:

"7. Debate shall be confined to the question under consideration, unless otherwise provided by unanimous consent, and if any Senator speak beside the question, the Presiding Officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order, and when a Senator is called to order he shall be admonished by the Presiding Officer to proceed in order, and if he be called to order a second time under this rule he shall sit down and not proceed without leave of the Senate, which leave, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order, which motion and all proceedings under this rule shall be determined without debate."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR LENROOT.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in the regular type, an address delivered by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] at the annual dinner of the Alumni Association of the Law School of the New York University, in New York City, February 10, 1923, on the subject of Congress and the Constitution.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

On the occasion stated, Senator LENROOT spoke as follows:

CONGRESS AND THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies, and gentlemen, when I chose the subject of this address I hoped to be able to make such preparation as would enable me to present a careful review of the historical side of the subject to form the basis for some observations upon congressional government generally and pending proposals enlarging the powers of Congress to construe and, in effect, amend the Constitution. I regret that my official duties have been such that I have been unable to deal with the subject in the manner I had planned, and I must, therefore, content myself with a more general survey.

With the Constitutional Convention, its debates, its conflicting elements, and the necessary resulting compromises in the framing of the Constitution you are all familiar. But inasmuch as we to-day so often hear it urged by those who charge that we are drifting away from democracy and toward aristocracy, that we turn back to the ideals and purposes of the founders of our Government, it may not be amiss to dwell for a few moments upon the character of the men composing the Constitutional Convention, and some of the purposes they had in mind in agreeing to certain provisions of the Constitution.

There were 55 members entitled to seats in the convention. Of these, only about 20 took a prominent part in its deliberations. But of these 20, it may be truly said, "There were giants in those days." Strange as it may seem, there were the same contending elements of differing political theory that we have to-day—one distrustful of democracy as well as monarchy, the other having confidence that there could be no such thing as an excess of democracy in government.

As we look back through the years and read the history of that convention, we are impressed that although we like to pride ourselves that we have progressed greatly since then—and we have—that greater trust is now reposed in the people than was then thought wise, yet I do not believe it possible to have a convention to-day where the delegates would be men of such learning, of such ability, and patriotic purpose as were those men of 1787.

Distrustful of too much democracy, yet they reversed all political theories of their day in that they established sovereignty in neither the executive nor legislative departments of government, but in the people themselves. They had studied other governments in which sovereignty was in the King, or becoming more democratic, in the parliament or legislative assembly. But, in establishing our government, sovereignty was placed with the people. The Constitution and the executive, the legislative, and the judicial departments were but creatures of their will. They then proceeded to clothe their creatures with certain grants of powers, but to insure that such grants would not be abused set up a system of checks and balances familiar to us all. Of Congress, the House of Representatives was to be the popular body, representing more directly the will of the people, with frequent elections, while the Senate was designed to be the more conservative body, guarding property rights from encroachment by the popular will and representing the State governments as distinguished from the people within the States. When I hear some of our radical friends plead for a return to the government and ideals of the fathers, I wonder if they have any knowledge of what some of those ideals were.

The composition of the Senate, elected by State legislatures, as originally established in the Constitution, was determined upon motion of Mr. Dickinson in the constitutional convention, and Mr. Madison in reporting the debate tells us "Mr. Dickinson had two reasons for his motion: First, because the sense of the States would be better collected through their governments than immediately from the people at large; secondly, because he wished the Senate to consist of the most distinguished characters, distinguished for their rank in life and their weight of property and bearing as strong a likeness to the British House of Lords as possible, and he thought such characters more likely to be selected by the State legislatures than by any other mode." The motion was adopted. General Pinckney, another member, proposed "that no salary be allowed Senators, giving as his reason that as that branch was meant to represent the wealth of the country it ought to be composed of persons of wealth, and if no allowance was made the wealthy alone would undertake the service." His proposal was not adopted, but I have quoted him to show the conception the framers of the Constitution had of the Senate, and how we have departed from it in placing greater trust in the people. Many members of the convention expressed distrust of the people, and the word "demagogue" was used almost as frequently in the debates then as it is in the press to-day. Elbridge Gerry, one of the prominent members, said: "The evils we experience flow from the excess of democracy. The people do not want virtue, but are the dupes of pretended patriots. In Massachusetts it had been fully confirmed by experience that they are daily misled into the most baneful measures and opinions by the false reports circulated by designing men." There is opinion of the same sort to-day in certain quarters, which confirms the saying "There is nothing new under the sun." But as there is an exception to every rule, the framers of the Constitution did have a new conception.

A written Constitution, made by the people, restraining not only their servants created by it, but restraining the people themselves from violating its terms so long as it was in force. Too much praise can not be given the men who framed the Constitution. It was not a perfect instrument, compromises were made, and defects may be shown, but they launched upon the world a system of government that has stood the test of 136 years, of four wars with foreign nations, and one domestic rebellion. It has passed the experimental stage, and if we and our children shall be true to our obligations of citizenship, it will live as its founders hoped, but hardly dared believe, through the ages.

That it has so lived, however, is due not alone to the framers, but more especially to John Marshall. Had it not been for his master mind I am afraid that the United States of America would have held now only a place in history, a Government that was but is no more. There were two things essential to the perpetuity of the Constitution, an authoritative construction of its provisions, independent of the legislative and executive departments of the Government, and also a liberal construction of the powers granted. Without these the Constitution of 1787 could not long endure. With them, together with the power of amendment provided for in the instrument itself, there is no reason why it should not live and serve as long as human beings shall inhabit the earth. The first essential was the establishment of the power of judicial review over the acts of Congress. This was definitely settled by the great opinion of Marshall in Marbury against Madison.

Never was his reasoning more conclusive, never was his logic more penetrating. I shall only take time to quote one paragraph from the opinion. He says, "The powers of the legislature are defined and limited, and that those limits may not be mistaken or forgotten the Constitution is written. To what purpose are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may at any time be passed by those intended to be restrained? The distinction between a government with limited and unlimited powers is abolished if those limits do not confine the persons on whom they are imposed. It is a proposition too plain to be contested that the Constitution controls any legislative act repugnant to it, or that the legislature may alter the Constitution by an ordinary act." His reasoning is conclusive. Unless the Constitution be held superior to an act of Congress, the Constitution becomes a mere scrap of paper, an instrument "more honored in the breach than the observance." Marshall, however, does not go into the actual intent of the framers of the Constitution with reference to the power of judicial review of acts of Congress. He is content to read the intent from the instrument itself. But it has been argued in the past, and is being argued to-day, in attacks upon the court, that it has usurped the power of the legislature, and that the framers of the Constitution never intended that the Supreme Court should exercise any such power. In support of this they quote from a speech of Mr. Mercer, a delegate in the convention. But it is difficult to believe in the intellectual honesty of these men. One would naturally assume that anyone attempting to publicly discuss this question would have read all of the debate found in the reports upon the subject, but if he had he could never make such claim. As a matter of fact, 20 members of the convention, and they were the most prominent members, at various times expressed themselves as being of the opinion that the judiciary would have the power of review over legislative acts, and there were only three members who expressed themselves as being opposed to such power being lodged in the courts. One of the three was Mr. Mercer, but none of the three expressed an opinion that the power was not granted by the Constitution, only that it ought not to be.

I now wish to discuss very briefly what would have happened had the court held that it did not have the power of judicial review. The result would have been the destruction of the Constitution. To illustrate, a protective tariff would have been constitutional when the party favoring it was in control of Congress, it would have been unconstitutional when the opposition had control. Likewise as to internal improvements undertaken by the Government; and I might give several other illustrations where one party insisted that a policy of the other was contrary to the Constitution. But this is not all. But for the restraining influence upon Congress, who can tell what rights would have been impaired or destroyed in obedience to party bosses and representatives of special privilege upon the one hand, and the passing emotions of the people, led by unscrupulous demagogues, upon the other?

But, it is said, are not Senators and Representatives as patriotic and as conscientious as judges? I wish I could answer in the affirmative. I wish I could say that legislators have a most scrupulous and tender regard for the Constitution and would not go beyond the limitations placed upon them by it. I regret that I can not so answer. If I did one would only need to refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to confound me.

But to return to my subject. The doctrine of Marbury against Madison has long since been accepted by all political parties and the people generally. It would be interesting to follow the subject from the Marbury to the Dred Scott case, but time will not permit. It need only be said that the followers of Jefferson, the strict constructionists, did not fully accept it until after the decision of Chief Justice Taney, in the Dred Scott case, when the platform of the Democratic Party in 1860 declared—

Resolved, That the Democratic Party will abide by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on questions of constitutional law.

Again illustrating the truth of the old maxim, "It depends on whose ox is gored." Here the followers of Jefferson and Jackson, who had strenuously opposed the doctrine of the Marbury case, accepted it when a vitally important decision was made which was to their interest, and likewise the Republicans supporting the doctrine of Marshall and Hamilton for the first time began to question it. Happily the doctrine is now accepted by everyone, and no one proposes to change it except by amendment of the Constitution itself.

So much for the power of judicial review. The second essential for the permanency of the Constitution and our form of government was the doctrine of implied powers or liberal construction. Without this construction Congress would have been placed in a strait-jacket, utterly unable to function in such a way as to serve the people. Nevertheless, the contest between the strict and the liberal or loose constructionists went on for years and is still at times in evidence. Jefferson and Madison were the great exponents of strict, and Marshall and Hamilton of liberal, construction. I can not take the time to review this subject at length, but Jefferson, when confronted with the results of the application of his own doctrine, failed to practice what he had preached. The Louisiana Purchase conducted by him was the first important application in a concrete case of liberal construction. Under no circumstances could a strict construction of the Constitution have permitted the Louisiana Purchase, and yet to-day it stands as one of the monuments to Jefferson's greatness. It is only fair to say that he asked Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution ratifying the Louisiana Purchase, but it was not done, and Jefferson himself never afterwards claimed that his act was a violation of the Constitution.

For many years strict, as against liberal, construction was a party issue, the Democratic Party taking the side of strict construction and the Whig and Republican Parties the liberal side. To-day the issue is practically dead. At least, it is not a matter of party alignment. In a general way it may be said the party in power to-day is for liberal construction, but when out of power takes the other view.

To conclude this phase of the subject, I do not think it can be denied that the great instrument framed in 1787 at Philadelphia would not have endured to this day had it not been for the establishment of the doctrine of judicial review and of liberal construction of the Constitution.

I now wish to devote a few minutes to a discussion of the exercise of the power of judicial review.

There have been only a few instances where its exercise has had an important bearing upon the life of the Nation. Its greatest value has been the restraining influence upon Congress to keep within the limits of the Constitution and the liberal construction of the document itself.

There have been some cases, however, where the court held acts of Congress invalid which were so important, and the decisions of the court were so contrary to the interests of the Nation that they did not long prevail.

I can not take time to more than recall the cases to your minds and what happened with respect to them. The Legal Tender case is one of the most important. Has the Congress of the United States power to make bills of credit a legal tender? was the question. It came before the court in the case of Hepburn against Griswold, and the legal tender act of 1862 was held unconstitutional; but a vacancy occurred in the court through the resignation of Justice Grier, and by act of April 10, 1869, Congress increased the number of members of the court by one, so President Grant had two appointments to make. Both of his appointees were of the opinion the act was constitutional, and the case again came before the court in Parker against Davis. The decision in Hepburn against Griswold was overruled and the act was held valid.

I think this is the only important case where an important constitutional question was settled by changing the complexion of the court. The decision in the Dredd Scott case was overruled at the point of the sword, and the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments resulted.

The action of the court in holding invalid the income tax law of 1894, together with its action holding invalid the child labor law of 1916, can not, it seems to me, be successfully defended. But the Constitution was amended and income taxes are now levied under the express sanction of the Constitution, and the Constitution will soon be amended to permit the prohibition by Congress of child labor.

That the court is subject to just criticism in some of its decisions in construing the police power of the States, I believe is true, but that is a subject which I have not the time to discuss to-night nor you the patience to listen to. I wish to restrict my observations to Congress and the Constitution and the attitude of the court with respect to the same.

I may suggest, however, that members of the Supreme Court continue to be human beings after their appointment. While theirs is the last word of authority upon the Constitution, they are not infallible as men, and the Constitution itself provides a way by which their mistakes may be corrected. The only practical question is whether the method provided to amend the Constitution is too difficult. I am frank to say that I think it is. I believe that as to certain matters affecting fundamental rights of men, rights that are based upon principles that can not change with time or circumstance, because they are the foundation stones of civilization itself, that there should be no relaxation of the difficulty of amendment. But as to matters of policy of government, I believe we might safely provide that amendments touching those matters when proposed by Congress and ratified by direct vote of the people in two-thirds of the States, instead of three-fourths, should become valid amendments to the Constitution.

There is, however, an insidious propaganda to destroy the power of the Supreme Court to pass upon the validity of acts of Congress, and to make of Congress the supreme judge of its own acts. It is proposed that if the Supreme Court shall hold an act of Congress unconstitutional it shall again be considered by Congress, and if passed by a two-thirds vote of each House it shall become a law, notwithstanding the action of the Supreme Court.

Should this ever come to pass, the end of the Constitution will not be far distant. It is astonishing that this proposition should come from the source it does. It emanates from those who declare that human rights are being destroyed by the courts. They also declare that Congress is worse than the courts; that Congress is utterly reactionary, and that the Members of both Houses, with a few exceptions, are controlled by Wall Street and the predatory interests of the country. Their proposition is: "We have no confidence in Congress; it does not represent the people, but only special interests, and we propose to amend the Constitution so as to provide that whatever such a reactionary Congress may do if supported by a vote of two-thirds of its membership shall be the law of the land, notwithstanding the provisions of the Constitution of the United States." They say they are willing that the rights of free speech, the right to peacefully assemble, the right of religious freedom, of trial by jury, and all of the other rights guaranteed by the Constitution shall be placed in the hands of a Wall Street Congress, with the power to destroy them by a two-thirds vote. To say the least, there has been a great deal of loose and hurried thinking by those favoring this proposition. As for myself, while I have a higher regard for Congress than the proponents of this amendment, I hope I shall never live to see the day when by a two-thirds vote of Congress any man may be denied the right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, when right of trial by jury may be denied, or any of the other rights handed down from Magna Charta and embodied in the Constitution of the United States.

While the power of judicial review is well established, it relates only to inquiring and determining whether an act of Congress or of the States is in conflict with the Constitution. The court has no power to inquire into the wisdom of acts of Congress falling within its constitutional powers. For the court to legislate is as much a violation of the Constitution as for Congress to exceed the limits of its constitutional powers. In one notable case the Supreme Court has read into a valid statute words not placed there by Congress and which Congress had repeatedly refused to place there. I refer to the Sherman Anti-trust Act as construed in the Standard Oil case. I believe that that opinion will always stand as a reflection upon that great court. It is no answer to say that in this case Congress has seen fit to accept the amendment of the statute made by the court. The fact is that the court acted not in a judicial but in a legislative capacity under every rule of legislative intent and the doctrine of stare decisis. However, the exercise of such power can never bring lasting injury, for Congress always has power to amend the law within its constitutional powers and declare its will in such unmistakable language that the court will be compelled to follow it.

I now pass to a very brief consideration of the eighteenth amendment and the present agitation concerning it. I shall refer only to its legal aspects wholly apart from the merits or demerits of prohibition. It is a part of the Constitution, and it is the duty of Congress and the Executive to enforce it and of every citizen to abide by its terms. It is the right of every citizen to advocate the modification or repeal of the eighteenth amendment, but no citizen has the right to ask Congress to violate its terms. There is a widespread propaganda to secure legislation from Congress permitting the manufacture and sale of beer and light wines. That Congress could constitutionally increase the alcoholic percentage of beer to between 2 or 3 per cent is admitted. Whether it should do so is a question of policy, but to go beyond that or permit the manufacture or sale of light wines would clearly violate the Constitution. To use the language of the Supreme Court, "the eighteenth amendment is operative throughout the entire territorial limits of the United States, binds all legislative bodies, courts, public officers, and individuals within those limits, and of its own force invalidates every legislative act whether by Congress, by a State legislature, or by a Territorial assembly which authorizes or sanctions what the section prohibits."

Any attempt, therefore, to secure legislation permitting the sale of intoxicating beverages is asking Senators and Representatives to deliberately violate their oaths of office, and all to no purpose, for the court would hold any such legislation invalid.

The remedy for such ills as can be remedied is by obedience to the Constitution, securing amendments where amendments are necessary, by the appointment of judges of our courts who are not only able lawyers but men of human sympathies and outlook, living neither in the last century or the next, but in the living, throbbing world of to-day, keenly alive to the thought and aspirations of the people, and who will apply the Constitution to twentieth-century problems with twentieth-century minds.

It should never be forgotten by members of all courts, and by lawyers as well, that, to use the language of the Supreme Court in the case of South Carolina against United States, "the Constitution is a written instrument. As such its meaning does not alter, and what it meant when adopted it means now. Being a grant of powers to a government, its language is general, and as changes come in social and political life it embraces in its grasp all new conditions which are within the scope of the powers in terms conferred. In other words, while the powers granted do not change, they apply from generation to generation to all things to which they are in their nature applicable." And we should never forget the words of Story: "The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the wants of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence."

The Constitution has not outlived its usefulness. Its protecting care was never more needed than to-day. It is the duty of every citizen to withstand every assault upon it, whether its enemies be predatory interests seeking special privileges to the public injury or whether they be those who are opposed to any government that would safeguard and protect the rights and liberties of every citizen under its flag.

That Congress shall at all times have respect for and be governed by the Constitution is the responsibility of the voters. It is their obligation to see to it that Members of Congress, Senators and Representatives, shall be men who will legislate not for bloc or class or section but for all the people of America, who recognize that duty to country comes before duty to party, men who shall do their part to conserve all that is good in our past and strive to make to-morrow better than to-day.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have here a clipping from the Christian Science Monitor, under the heading "Editorial notes," which relates to prohibition. It is short and I ask that it may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor.]

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Whatever may appear to be the extent to which the prohibition law in the United States is being willfully disregarded by the rich, indications on every hand point to the fact that since the enactment of the Volstead Act drunkenness among the poor has diminished so considerably as to have practically disappeared in many sections of the country. In this connection, what Dr. Thomas J. Riley, general secretary of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Bureau of Charities, recently stated may be taken as authoritative. He declared in part:

"Of the families that come to the Bureau of Charities for aid, the percentage in which drunkenness is a cause of their need has declined from 12 per cent in 1916 to 4 per cent in 1922. * * * This decrease is not peculiar to New York City. * * * In Cleveland the percentage dropped from 11.15 in 1919 to 2.61 in 1921; in Boston, from 10.63 to 2.28; in St. Louis, from 6.03 to 0.70; in Milwaukee, from 9.64 to 3.45; in New Haven, Conn., 13 to 0.3; and in Rochester, N. Y., 15.3 to 3.8.

"This decline is coincident with the spread of State and National prohibition, and one who works with families can not escape the conviction that it is chiefly, if not wholly, due to the enforcement of prohibition, however faulty it may have been."

Such figures do more for the cause of prohibition than almost any amount of propaganda by the wets can do against it. What is more, such families as those to whom Doctor Riley refers constitute a mighty section of the Nation, and it may be taken for granted that, having once tasted the benefits of prohibition, they will have something very definite to say before permitting its modification in the slightest degree.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HENRY D. FLOOD, OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, on the 10th of last December the remains of the late Hon. H. D. Flood, formerly a Representative from the State of Virginia, were removed from a vault in this city, where they had been temporarily placed with appropriate ceremonies, participated in by the Senate and House of Representatives, to their final resting place in a mausoleum at Appomattox, Va., his home. The occasion was made notable by the attendance of a vast concourse of people from all parts of Virginia, including the highest State officials, who thus met to pay just tribute to this distinguished Representative, so dearly loved and so highly esteemed by the people of his native State. Upon this occasion I was requested to deliver an address.

I ask unanimous consent that the address then delivered by me may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type and be made a part of the "Memorial Addresses" to be published regarding the life, character, and public services of the late Representative Flood.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

Senator SWANSON spoke as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen, We have assembled to-day to put in his final resting place and pay just tribute to one who while living possessed in a most preeminent degree our abiding and abounding love. If permitted to pursue my own inclination instead of addressing you, I would be a silent participant in these exercises, communing with my own great sorrow in the loss of one who was closer and dearer than a friend—one for whom I entertained an affection and admiration equal to that of a brother. For more than 35 years I knew him intimately, our relations, personal and political, being closely intertwined. There were no shadows on our friendship, no secrets in our hearts.

"Our association began at the University of Virginia in 1885 when we were members of the law class, graduating the same year and commencing at the same time our professional and political careers. At the university he was my college chum—our relations fully measuring up to all this term implies. We studied together; we visited together; we recreated together, discussed our future hopes and ambitions, and were closely associated and cooperated in all class and college politics. We were inseparable, and each rejoiced in the others' honors and preferments almost like they were personal triumphs.

"How vividly do I recall these halcyon college days, so bright, so joyous, made doubly so by dear 'Hal,' as we all lovingly called him! The chivalric feelings of friendship and admiration then formed never cease, but continue through life and gather strength with each receding year. How sweet and inspiring are the days of early youth, sparkling with unselfish friendship, gleaming with lofty aspirations and high ideals, unburdened by cares and responsibilities, with young blood rapidly coursing through the veins, and we looking upon life as through a gilded veil and everything appearing so bright, so pleasing. The poet has well expressed it:

"We are stronger and better under manhood's sterner reign,
But still we feel that something sweet,
Followed youth with flying feet,
And will never come again.

Something beautiful has vanished and we sigh for it in vain,
We behold it everywhere,
On the earth and in the air,
But it never comes again.

"Ah, the ties of love and friendship then formed never break. Like hooks of steel they grab and hold through the stress and storm of life. Thus it was with Hal Flood and myself. The friendship then pledged and formed continued and increased to his death. In the many political conflicts in which we engaged we were to each other a supporting and sustaining friend. Where one was seen on the field of conflict the other was invariably found. When his untimely death came, upon none did the blow fall more heavily than upon me. None miss more than I his cheery smile, his cordial greeting, his generous and kind consideration, and the friendly pulsations of as loyal and manly heart as ever throbbed in human breast.

"Hal Flood possessed an unusually attractive and pleasing personality. His clear, open, frank, blue eyes looked you straight in the face, bespeaking honesty, integrity and truth. He loathed a lie and a falsehood never soiled his lips. He had a cheerful, hopeful disposition which radiated sunshine and happiness. His presence dispelled gloom and doubt. His manner was cordial and hearty, easily winning good will. His society was universally sought and enjoyed. He was the soul of chivalric honor and integrity. His word given was never withdrawn nor broken. No personal dangers, no allurements or promptings of personal advantage or preferment could induce him to violate a promise. Those who knew him trusted him implicitly.

"He had a heart as courageous as a lion, declining no conflicts and fearing no danger. The fiercer the conflict the more resolute he became. His moral courage was equal to his physical courage. He never evaded an issue, he never shirked a responsibility; at times carrying this splendid virtue to a point almost beyond the limits of prudence and discretion. No man of my acquaintance surpassed him in the manly virtue of courage, both moral and physical. In all fierce political contests his clear voice rang out with bold defiance and encouraging hope. This battle call of his was a great rallying force in hours of doubt and confusion.

"This quality marked him as an aggressive leader, cheered and loved by an enthusiastic following. He hewed his way to the front with the battleax of the warrior. He despised preferment obtained by the insinuating arts of the demagogue. His chosen place of action was on the field of battle and not in the cloister of intrigue and diplomacy. He was the Rupert of Virginia Democracy—bold, courageous, and daring. He cheerfully and proudly wore scars obtained by fidelity to friendship or for a cause espoused.

"He possessed a persistency and perseverance of purpose which would have attained distinction in any vocation of life selected. When he reached a conclusion in the course of life no obstacles could deter him in continuous effort to reach the attainment. He was the personification of tireless energy and determined effort. He hammered, hammered, and hammered until success came. His industry was as much an element in his success as were his moral and intellectual qualities. From early youth to death his life was one of ceaseless activity. This sapped the foundations of a constitution phenomenal in its robustness and strength and occasioned his early death.

"Only those who are actively engaged in public life know its heavy exactions, its ceaseless wear and tear, its continuous mental and physical strain, all of which must finally end in a shattered constitution unable to sustain the heavy burden. Hal Flood's death bears testimony to his unselfish and patriotic devotion to public duties regardless of personal consequences. For years before his death he knew of his ailment and of its dangerous character, but it did not deter him from discharging his full share of public duty and responsibility.

"He died with his armor on, as chivalric, as brave, and worthy a champion as ever contended for a cause. His life illustrated forcibly and completely those striking lines from one of America's greatest poets:

"The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upwards in the night.

"Hal Flood's intellectual attainments were of rare excellence. He possessed a strong masculine mind, fully capable of logical reasoning and of reaching safe and sensible conclusions. He was thoughtful and gave public questions full and conscientious examination and consideration. He mastered the details of questions and arranged his conclusions and expressions logically and attractively. He had a splendid, regular, and orderly mind that worked harmoniously. What he lacked in brilliance and eloquence of expression he more than made up by strength and solidarity. He was a ready and aggressive debater and an attractive, instructive, and entertaining speaker. He was highly educated and splendidly read in history, literature, and law. His intellectual attainments were such as to enable him most efficiently to discharge any position in our State or National Government.

"He possessed to a preeminent degree those moral qualities which constitute the foundation for success in any of life's undertakings. He had a deep religious conviction which was well known by those intimately acquainted with him. This was one of his marked characteristics. He had absolute faith in the Christian religion, its teachings, and its promises for the future. How often have I seen him when he had been through exciting storms and conflicts humbly kneel before retiring to engage in prayer. This he did in early life when I first knew him and continued to his death.

"This denoted a religious reverence and a deep strain of Christian faith, which ennobled him in my mind and bore testimony of his splendid worth as a Christian character. It was always done in such an unostentatious way and with such simplicity as to prove his deep conviction and sincerity.

"These splendid moral and manly qualities were further enriched by a gentle nature and an affectionate heart. Like all true Virginians, he cherished almost to a passion the ties of blood and family. Never in all of my experience have I seen a sweeter, deeper, and more enduring love than that which he possessed for his only sister. It was a flower he cherished in his youth, and its fragrance filled his heart until the hour of his death.

"The shadow of death never fell upon a purer, sweeter, happier home, where mother, father, children lived in mutual adoration. His love for his wife went to the deepest depths of his noble heart. A widow now weeps where almost yesterday a wife adored; two orphans now mourn where almost yesterday two children lovingly played on a father's knee. He was a most dutiful son, a generous, loving brother, a most devoted, attentive, and incomparable husband and father.

"This man, with qualities of mind and heart of the warrior type, gave new grace and brought new charms to social and domestic life. A man possessing such qualities of mind and heart could not fail to attain success in any undertaking to which he might aspire. Capacity, character, and courage are the three great elements forming the foundation upon which success is builded. Each of these splendid qualities strikingly existed in Hal Flood and contributed to the great success he attained. Statesmanship consists in the wisdom to discern the right pathway and then in the character and courage to follow the right pathway when found. Hal Flood had the wisdom to discern and then the valor to follow this pathway. This makes great and successful men. The measure of life's success is not the days you have lived but the distance you have traveled. His life was crowned with honors, triumphs, and the affection and admiration of the people of his district and the State of Virginia. He had traveled far on the road of honorable success.

"He had just passed the age of 21, which made him a citizen, when he was elected to the General Assembly of Virginia, being at that time the youngest member of that body. He at once attained prominence by his indefatigable industry, his ability as a debater, his thorough and varied information upon legislative matters. He was at this youthful age one of the most potential members of the general assembly, and his rapid advancement gave promise of his future career of high honor and great usefulness.

"He was shortly afterwards elected Commonwealth's attorney of Appomattox County, which position he held for years, filling it with marked ability and fairness and increasing his reputation as a lawyer and the esteem of the people of his county for his faithful and fearless discharge of his duties. He practiced at the bar of all the surrounding counties, and soon acquired one of the largest and most lucrative practices in his section. He was recognized as a leader of the bar of the courts in which he practiced. There is no greater school in the world for the development of men for usefulness and responsibility in after life than the practice of law in country circuits. Far from law libraries and legal authorities, lawyers are here compelled to settle difficult questions of law by force of their intellect and by persuasive argument addressed to court and jury. Legal contests are clashes of intellect, and not a race of industry in collecting authorities and decisions. It is a school for developing clear, logical reasoning, cogent and forceful expression, great resourcefulness, and efficient management of men and matters.

"From this school has emerged America's most eminent lawyers, statesmen, and orators. From it came Patrick Henry, the forest-born Demosthenes, whose eloquence called a continent to arms; from it came Chief Justice Marshall, the greatest of all modern jurists, whose mighty decisions infused life and vigor into the Federal Constitution, a dry legal parchment, forming under it the most efficient and capable of governments; from it came Thomas Jefferson, the founder and father of the democracies of the world; from this school emerged Douglas, Lincoln, Andrew Jackson, Clay, and many great and distinguished men whose achievements illuminate the pages of American history.

"Those who are capable of surviving the fierce mental contests daily encountered in these courts are equipped for success in any arena of life. Hal Flood, by sheer force of industry, intellect, persuasive power of speech, and masterful management of men, attained distinction at the bar of these several counties and prepared himself for the successful legislative career in State and Nation with which his after life was so splendidly adorned.

"His success in politics largely obscured his success, ability, and reputation as a lawyer, which was very extensive, large, and commanding. So successful was his career in the general assembly and in his administration of the office of Commonwealth's attorney that the people of the several counties in which he practiced law soon sent him to the Senate of Virginia, which position he filled for many years with marked ability. He was practically the leader of the Virginia Senate, a body composed of able and worthy men, and many of the great legislative acts which benefited the people of Virginia were the products of his brain and the handiwork of his masterful hand.

"He became the leader and adviser of all the surrounding counties, where the people knew him and recognized his worth as a man and his ability and patriotism as a public servant. That these surrounding counties were securely held for good government in Virginia and did not come under the domination of ignorant negroes was largely due to the skill of Hal Flood as a political leader, his great capacity, his tireless energy, and his indomitable pluck and courage. He stood firm and adamant as a rock, around which the good moral forces of this section rallied in their contests for good government and white supremacy.

"These elements in one so young gave him an enthusiastic following, which determined that he should be sent to Congress and given a broader field for his talents and usefulness. In 1896 he was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the tenth congressional district, but was defeated in that election. He might have availed himself of legal technicalities and possibly have received the certificate of election. I recall how manfully he repudiated any suggestion to accept such a commission and forcibly stated that he never wished to represent a people unless he was satisfied he was entitled to do so by the people's free and fair choice. This splendid conduct endeared him to his friends and won the esteem and respect of his political enemies. He desired no honor not fairly won and honorably bestowed.

"I recall meeting him a short time after his defeat, which would have ended the political career of most men, but it did not in the least affect his stout heart nor lessen his firm and honorable ambition. In this—the only defeat that ever came to him in his long and successful political career—he displayed a manly worth, a hopeful courage, and a fearless determination which proved his greatness as much as any triumph that crowned him. It is in the hour of defeat and disaster that the innate greatness and power of men are displayed. Those who can triumph over the discouragement incident to defeat will long wear the crown of success. This truth was fully illustrated in the life of our dear friend.

"Four years after this the Democratic voters of this congressional district renominated him for Congress. He was overwhelmingly elected and continued to serve the people of his district until the hour of his death—for more than 20 years. In my long experience in public life I have never known a Representative to have closer relations with his district or possess to a greater degree their affection, esteem, and admiration than did Hal Flood. The people of his district followed him with a loyalty, with a constancy, and with a devotion that was unexcelled. So deep was their affection they almost considered his political friends were their friends and his political enemies their enemies. Never did a Representative serve a people more faithfully, more efficiently, and more willingly than did he the splendid citizenship of the tenth district. Their troubles were his troubles, their desires his desires, their misfortunes his misfortunes, and their successes his successes. We here witness a spectacle so pleasing and so consoling in politics of a Representative and his people welded together by an insoluble bond of affection and esteem. Such ties lighten the burdens of political life and makes an onerous work a duty of love and delight. It gives a gleam of sunshine to political life with its storms, tempests, and hardships. Frequently Hal Flood was deterred from listening to the promptings of ambition for higher honors and broader fields of usefulness because he feared that the change might lessen this association which so strongly and so delightfully bound him to the splendid people of this district. Frequently have I heard him give expression to this sentiment. The heart throbs of the people of this district met a full and grateful response in the pulsations of his noble heart.

"His career in Congress was one of great usefulness and marked distinction. An able, accomplished, and thoroughly equipped debater, he was listened to with great attention and had much influence in the House of Representatives. He was chairman of the Committee on the Territories of the House and was for many years largely responsible for the legislation governing our Territories. This entailed great work and responsibility on him, which he efficiently and faithfully discharged. He was the author of the resolution which admitted Arizona and New Mexico to statehood, and thus to him belongs the honor of placing the last two stars in Old Glory, thus completing statehood of continental United States. Under his wise and constructive statesmanship the measure was enacted giving to Alaska, that land of wonderful wealth and enchanting beauty, its first legislative assembly, forming the greatest epoch so far in its history.

"The people of the various Territories for which he as chairman of the Committee on the Territories legislated acquired for him an affection and esteem equal to that possessed by the people of his district and State. Their sorrow at his untimely death was deep and profound. They had learned to appreciate his fairness, his statesmanship, his ability, and his deep interest in their welfare and progress. His achievements as chairman of this committee furnished proof of his ability as a constructive statesman.

"He was made chairman of the great Committee on Foreign Affairs in January, 1913, which responsible place he held as long as the House was Democratic, until the 4th of March, 1919. He was chairman of this great committee, with all of its vast responsibilities and burdens, during the great World War and for some time after the conclusion of peace. During the great World War he occupied a most important place in the House of Representatives as chairman of this great committee. He introduced in the House and secured the passage of the resolution declaring war against the Imperial German Government, and opened the debate on this resolution with a speech of rare ability, clearness, eloquence, and power. This address made a profound impression in the entire country and marked him as a man of unusual ability.

"In the House of Representatives, with all of its conflicting views and interests, the responsibility of guiding our foreign affairs during the Great War was intrusted to him. It was a most difficult task, requiring rare ability, masterful management of men, and great parliamentary skill. He fully measured up to the responsible duties imposed, and greatly added to his established reputation as a debater, parliamentarian, and statesman. During these dark days and by the handling of these grave responsibilities he grew from a State to a national character, becoming one of the potential and trusted men of the Nation. If he had lived and continued in the House of Representatives, the highest honors, the most important posts the House had to bestow were within his grasp. He had attained an acknowledged position where the highest honors inevitably would have crowned him.

"With this work and these burdens, which were sufficient for anyone to bear, he had assumed at the same time other grave and important responsibilities. He was made chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, which directed the campaign for the election and return of Democratic Members in all the congressional districts of the United States. He was absorbed in this work, conscientiously and industriously meeting all the vast and varied duties appertaining to this important position. Only those who have been connected with national campaigns can fully appreciate the immense and important work thus entailed upon him. In this he displayed ability as a national leader in politics, was most successful, and his associates insisted upon his continuance in this arduous position.

"But this was not the limit of his work and responsibility when he died. The Democratic State committee of Virginia had unanimously elected him as chairman of the Democratic Party to conduct the last gubernatorial election. All the work, burdens, and responsibility of this campaign were imposed on him. He went into this election with all the energy, activity, zeal, and enthusiasm he possessed. He campaigned the State; he organized the Democratic Party; he put spirit, enthusiasm, and determination in the Democratic ranks, and by his indomitable energy, judgment, wise and courageous management of the campaign he achieved the greatest success ever obtained by the Democracy of his State.

"We have the consolation of knowing the last days of his life were cheered by this splendid Democratic victory and were crowned with the loving admiration of a grateful State Democracy. All of this vast work which he assumed he was able to successfully administer because he worked systematically, orderly, and energetically, and gave all of his mind, intellect, and time to the work he had assumed.

"In every line of human endeavor that he entered he made marked success. He was a successful business man, and if he had devoted his time and talents to the accumulation of money he would have been one of our richest men. Few possessed better business judgment.

"He was a member of the constitutional convention, and one of its most influential members. His work in this convention alone would have entitled him to the everlasting gratitude of the people of Virginia. He was a member of the State debt commission, which amicably settled the existing debt between Virginia and West Virginia. His judgment, his ability, his skill, his power of managing men were largely instrumental in effecting the happy results of this delicate and intricate matter.

"During his long political career no scandal ever soiled his fair name, no stain ever followed his footsteps. He possessed to a preeminent degree sterling honesty, that great virtue around which all other virtues cling, without which they, groveling, fall in dust and weeds. This clean and brilliant record had so impressed the people of Virginia that they would have willingly bestowed upon him any honor, any position, however exalted, within their power to bestow.

"It is well that his remains will rest in the dear old county of Appomattox. He loved every inch of her soil, her people were closer to him than all others. How often in speaking of the future and of his old age had he pictured with delightful anticipation living among her kindly people and engaging in the cultivation of the farm which he cherished to a passion. We lay to rest here one of Appomattox's most distinguished sons, one who brought distinction to this county, one who was a potential factor in the distribution of blessings to State, Nation, and humanity. He comes to remain among the people who loved him with a deep affection and who had for him a confidence and admiration never excelled.

"As we gather here to-day we can not fail to recall some of the close associates of Hal Flood, who have departed this life and whose society we believe he now enjoys. Foremost and first, Senator Daniel, possessed of a marvelous eloquence, able, patriotic, whose gleaming brilliance and genius made Virginia famous and illustrious the world over; then, that sturdy character, that splendid statesman and leader, Senator Martin, the personification of wisdom and achievement; Frank Lassiter, the soul of chivalry, courtesy, gallantry; dear Walter Watson, cultivated, judicious, gentle, and attractive as a woman, strong and firm as a man; Edward Saunders, the best parliamentarian that ever presided over the General Assembly of Virginia, an intelligent giant, cold exterior but a warm, kind heart; Robert James, the wise and capable Democratic chairman and leader of whom it may well be said: He never failed a friend, he never forgot a favor.

"My friends, standing at the grave of our departed loved one, our belief in a Supreme Being, just and merciful, and in the immortality of the soul, furnishes us consolation in our grief and illumines with hope the dark shadows of our sorrow. 'If a man die shall he live again?' has been the perplexing problem which has agitated alike the keen intellect of the philosopher and the untutored mind of the savage. Is death the end of our individual and conscious being? Are all of these pleasing sensations, these delightful thoughts and ardent affections, our glowing hopes and our lofty aspirations, our conscious capacities for happiness and knowledge which we feel expanding—are all of these to cease at death and be buried in the grave? If this be true, as Chauncey Giles has well said, 'then man is the greatest enigma in the universe. Compared with the possibilities of his nature, he is the fading flower, the withering grass, the morning cloud, the tale is told.'

"But if death is, as we believe, but the withdrawal of a man's spirit, the real man, from the material body to enter into an endless career of immortality, then is the mystery of man's existence here solved. Life and death form but parts of one grand drama. Death becomes the real step in life by which man ascends in order to attain the fruition of his hopes and aspirations. As has been well said, death is the means by which one acquires the fulfillment of which this life is but a prophecy. Death, my friends, is of the body, not the spirit. To the spirit death means the seed time, the budding time is over, and that the spirit, with all of its faculties alive and increased, will now blossom and bear immortal fruit. Death releases the spirit from the restraints of the material body, enabling it to soar to lofty heights for which it has so long pined, and to gratify those pure yearnings so long unsatisfied.

"As a writer has well said: 'Death, like the sunset, speaks, but speaks only feebly of the glories of another day.' Toward death we feel like Tennyson, one of England's sweetest poets:

"Nor blame I death because he bare
The use of virtue out of earth,
I know transplanted human worth
Will bloom to profit otherwhere.

"To the wise and pure death opens the shining portals of an endless day, gorgeous with perpetual glories.

"My friends, in conclusion, let us all so conduct our lives that when the time comes for us to depart we can calmly and serenely face death without terror. Let our lives, like that of our beloved friend here, be so replete with good deeds for our fellow man, so full of achievements for humanity that our memory will ever be a blessing and an inspiration to those who shall follow us. Let us follow faithfully the advice given in those beautiful lines of Charles Kingsley:

"Do noble things, not dream them, all day long
And so make life, death, and that vast forever
One grand sweet song."

BELLS FOR HOUSE OF HOPE CHURCH, ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. McCUMBER. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3973) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the House of Hope Church, St. Paul, Minn. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the report. I merely desire to say that we passed a bill in precisely similar terms and for the same purpose for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage at Gloucester, Mass., on the 28th day of last February.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read as folows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit free of duty a certain carillon of 28 bells to be imported for the House of Hope Church, St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota explain what the purpose of the bill is?

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill proposes to permit certain bells, which are for a church in St. Paul, Minn., to be imported without the payment of duty. The church is a modest one, without much means, and it is anxious to secure the bells. The bells are very fine, but the church can not afford to pay the duty on them.

Mr. McCUMBER. The bells have been presented to the church, let me suggest to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I might say that the bells are a present to the church; that it did not buy them, but they were given to it. Of course, however, the church will have to arrange for the importation of the bells.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator from Minnesota state what the amount of the duty on the bells would be?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know whether that information was submitted to the committee or not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the amount of the duty would be about $7,500, and the bells would be worth about $15,000. I repeat that we passed exactly the same kind of a bill for the benefit of another church in Gloucester, Mass., a very short time ago.

I desire to say, in addition, that the donor of these bells attempted to ascertain whether the same kind of bells could be manufactured at any place in the United States, and he was unable to find a foundry which could make them here. They are imported from Belgium and, as has been stated, they were given to the church.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] why the general law can not be modified so as to permit the importation free of duty of articles coming within the class that is embraced within this bill, so as to avoid the necessity of frequently legislating in individual cases? It does seem to me as though some general provision of law ought to be enacted which would avoid the necessity for the passage of special bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say to the Senator from Arkansas that that could be done; but we had that matter under consideration by the Committee on Finance, and it was impossible to fix a proper line of demarkation as to what articles should be imported free of duty. By special bills the importation of such articles has only been allowed where there were no profits and where the article desired to be imported was a gift to a church or for charitable purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe that in every instance——

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield in just a moment. I believe that in every instance where a request is made in such a case the duty has been remitted; and it would seem, if it is the policy of the Government not to tax such articles as are designed for the uses embraced in this bill, that that policy ought to be established in the general law and carried out.

Mr. CALDER. In further response to the inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas, I would advise him that when the present tariff law was passed the subject referred to by the Senator was before the Senate Committee on Finance. On my motion we incorporated a provision in the bill to permit the importation free of duty of altars, communion services, and other articles designed for church use, and works of art generally for church purposes where they were donated. Apparently we did not include chimes or bells, but those were the only articles of which I know which we did not include, and had attention been called to them, perhaps they also might have been included.

Mr. KELLOGG. Those articles were probably omitted by inadvertence, and it is only where such articles have been donated, as they have been in this case, that we ask for legislation permitting them to be imported free of duty.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill ought to go through. I regret that church bells are not on the free list, and I suggest that if the passage of this legislation will induce the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and others to attend church and listen to the beautiful chimes, we ought to be very glad to pass the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think that is a worthy object.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have no desire to embarrass the passage of this bill, but I desire to say that since the passage of the last tariff bill the price of sugar has been increased at a very rapid rate, as the Senator has read and realizes. I desire to ask if he would have any objection to having an amendment incorporated in the bill to take off a part of the tariff, which is very high, which in the last tariff bill we imposed upon sugar imported from Cuba?

Of course, if the Senator is opposed to it, I shall not offer the amendment at this time, but shall bide my time before the Committee of Finance.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator that I have reason to believe that if I consented to have considered on this bill the amendment he suggests, the bill for the admission of these bells free of duty would not pass. So I hope the Senator will not press his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not press the amendment at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator from Mississippi that the duty on sugar—on Cuban sugar—was increased 15 cents a hundred pounds, and in Cuba at that time sugar was selling at $1.67, while now sugar is selling in Cuba for over $4 a hundred pounds.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not desire during the morning hour to get into a controversy over sugar; but I have an amendment on my desk which I shall offer in due time, and ask to have referred to the Committee on Finance, in the hope that the Senator from Utah will join me in reducing the tariff on sugar in order to meet present-day conditions.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I hope that the pending bill may now be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF SCHOOL LANDS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BALL. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5020) to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia acquired for a school site, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be reported.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, a similar bill passed the Senate on May 16, 1921, and the House passed an identical House bill on May 22, 1922, but for some reason did not pass the Senate bill. The measure merely provides for the sale of a small strip of land which was acquired for school-site purposes in 1869, but which was never used for such purposes. A large portion of the land was utilized for the construction of streets which passed through that section, but there is still a small strip which it is desired to sell, and there are some real estate people who wish to build upon the land.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is any use now being made of the land?

Mr. BALL. None whatever.

Mr. ROBINSON. What use is expected to be made of the land after it shall have been sold?

Mr. BALL. It is intended to sell the land to a real estate company which contemplates erecting buildings on it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me ask the Senator what will become of the proceeds?

Mr. BALL. The proceeds will go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FERNALD. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the land in question adjoins property on which school buildings are now located?

Mr. BALL. No; there are no school buildings there now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to sell at public or private sale, at a price not less than the true value of the abutting property based on the assessment, all that part of the subdivision of Granby acquired by the commissioners of primary schools of Washington County by deed from George H. Baer and wife, dated the 25th day of June, in the year 1869, excepting that part of said land lying within the lines of Twentieth and Jackson Streets, as recorded in book 52, page 174, of the records of the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, the land herein authorized to be so conveyed being assessed among the records of the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia as parcel 156 sub 38 and parcel 156 sub 39, reserving, however, so much of said land as is in the judgment of said commissioners necessary for alley purposes, the portion of land so reserved not to be included in said sale: Provided, That the entire proceeds of such sale by the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the bill. I will have it prepared in just a moment, if the Senator will give me that opportunity.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, but I do not desire to do so unless the Senator will agree to it. I desire to have the proposed amendment read and I should like to have it incorporated in the bill, if there is no objection, and, if not on this bill, then on some other similar bill. If, however, it would embarrass the passage of the bill, I shall not offer it, but I do not think there will be any opposition to it, and I hope the Senator may accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to make full and complete investigation of the rates charged by the owners and operators of taxicabs and automobiles for hire in other cities and in the District of Columbia, and to recommend to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for action and enforcement, such rates as may be reasonable and which may compare with such rates as are permitted to be charged by the owners and operators of automobiles and taxicabs for hire in other cities of the United States. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make full report of the investigation and findings of the Public Utilities Commission on or before the convening of the next regular session of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I have no objection to such a measure as that proposed by the Senator from Mississippi being adopted by the Senate, but I do not think it ought to be made a part of the bill which is now under consideration. It would require some discussion, I imagine.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; I will withdraw the proposed amendment if the Senator has any objection to it going on this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Add at the proper place in the bill the following:

The Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia shall not hereafter have or exercise power to fix rates of fare for the street railway companies in the District of Columbia at rates in excess of the rates of fare fixed in existing charters or contracts heretofore entered into between said companies and the Congress, and from and after the passage and approval of this act the said street railway companies shall receive 5 cents per passenger as a cash fare but they shall issue and sell six tickets for 25 cents, as provided in existing charters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Upon that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator offered a similar amendment here some days ago, but it was not discussed. I do not think a proposition of such importance should be voted on without some information being given.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to give the Senator any information I have.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I should like briefly to state my viewpoint and then I should like to hear from the Senator, because I have an open mind on the question and if the Senator convinces me he is right I will be glad to vote with him; but if not, I will vote against his amendment. I think it is a matter of importance and if there is information available I should like to have it.

Of course, Mr. President, I realize that most of the street railways companies in the United States before the Great War made contracts for a 5-cent fare and carried passengers for a 5-cent fare. In most of the cities of the Union during the war or immediately thereafter the cost of such transportation was increased by the public-service commissions of the various States above the 5-cent rate. As a rule it was impossible for the street railway companies to increase the fares themselves, but they applied either to the local legislatures, the boards of aldermen, or to public-utilities commissions in which the power was vested and obtained the right to charge increased fares. Why? On the ground that the cost of carriage had so greatly increased that the street-railroad companies of America could no longer function unless the cost of service was increased.

Of course, we all know that wages have increased throughout the United States. We all know that the cost of supplies has increased in the United States. We all know that in every walk of life and in every industrial development there has been an increase of cost. We know it ourselves in our grocery bills, in our rent bills, in every cost of living. I know that when Mr. Cleveland was President of the United States and I came here as a young Congressman I was receiving $5,000 a year to live on. Now the Congressman or the Senator is paid $7,500; but the purchasing power of the $5,000 I received at that time was vastly in excess of what I am receiving as a Senator to-day, although there is an increase of $2,500 in the amount of my compensation; but the purchasing power of the dollar has very greatly decreased. It decreased before the war and it has vastly decreased since the war.

This is the question I am addressing to the Senator from Tennessee, and I am addressing it in good faith, because I really want the information. I really want a reply. With that in view, and knowing the fact that the costs of steam railroad companies, of which we have the statistics, have largely increased, and that all other transportation costs have increased—I mean the costs to the carrier—if I could cast my vote and bring back to 5 cents the cost of transportation to those who ride on the street cars in the District of Columbia without destroying these companies, if they could continue to serve the public for that sum and make a fair return, to which they are entitled, as they did before the war, I should be very glad to do so; but if the increased cost of carriage has put on these companies so great a cost for transportation that they can not do business if we reduce the fare to 5 cents—and that is the question that was decided when the increase was allowed—then I should not feel justified in doing it.

I am not a member of the Committee on the District of Coulmbia——

Mr. McKELLAR. Nor am I.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I have not studied the question. I have not had an opportunity to do so. I have no information in reference to the street-car system here; and I think that if the Senator desires his colleagues who are not informed to vote on his amendment now it will be most serviceable if he will give us the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to give the Senator and the Senate whatever facts I have in my possession.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the floor to the Senator. I merely wanted to ask a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. If any question arises in the Senator's mind, I hope he will rise and ask it in my time.

The last reports of the street car companies show that there are two street car companies here—the Capital Traction Co. and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. The Senator will recall that when these fares were raised during the war the Capital Traction Co. did not ask for the increase. The Capital Traction Co. was satisfied to continue under its contract, so the papers stated, and so it was generally understood. Statements were made here in the Senate to that effect. By the way, I will say that the last report shows that the Capital Traction Co. made something like 13 per cent, in addition to improvements that it made on its lines, which were admittedly very great. So I think the Senator will assume from that fact that the Capital Traction Co. is making more than a fair return under the present rate of fare.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a minute; let me finish, and then I will yield to any Senator who wants to ask a question.

The Washington Railway & Electric Co. is in a very different situation. It has a number of lines outside of the city. It claims that those lines outside of the city are not paying. It claims that it must have this rate of fare on its lines so as to make its system pay; that if it did not have to carry these lines outside of the District which are not paying, which are a burden upon it, it could get along on the 5-cent fare, as I understand, but that if it is to continue to operate the lines outside of the District it must have an additional fare.

In reference to that company, Senators know that it has been a stock-jobbing company. It is a company that has been exploited a number of times. It has been reorganized, and other lines bought, and stock issued, and my understanding is that the greater part, practically all of the $6,500,000 of common stock of that company, is watered stock; that the stockholders did not actually pay for it. In my judgment, manifestly the Congress ought not to undertake two things that the Public Utilities Commission now is undertaking to do. One of them is to raise the fares in the District so high that it will make the property of these companies in these outside lines pay. The other is that we ought not to undertake to make these lines return an income on watered stock.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McKINLEY. Is it not true that 10 years ago the wages of the men employed on the local street railways were 18 cents an hour, and to-day they are 56 cents an hour?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and it is also true that these companies carry about that proportion of increase in passengers over the number that they carried 10 years ago.

Mr. McKINLEY. Is it not also true that the cost of coal to-day is double what it was 10 years ago?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and it is also true that the number of passengers carried has more than doubled. Washington has grown, as we all know, and the number of passengers has enormously increased, and it has increased more than the cost of materials and labor.

I want to yield now to the chairman of the District Committee.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the junior Senator from Tennessee where he got his data that the Capital Traction Co. earned 13 per cent during the last year. I have here the report of that company, and I do not find those figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. I got them from a statement published in the Washington Post, I think, some time in January. The company made a report that was published, and, as I recall the figures—I put them in the RECORD at the time—they were 13 per cent. They were either 13 per cent plus or 13 per cent minus. They were about 13 per cent.

Mr. BALL. My recollection is—I can not find the figures just at this moment——

Mr. McKELLAR. I had them before me, and put them in at the time. I talked about them at the time.

Mr. BALL. My recollection is that the Capital Traction Co. earned between 7 and 8 per cent, and that the Washington Railway & Electric Co. earned between 3 and 4 per cent; but on the basis of a 5-cent fare, Mr. President, the returns of last year would not pay the operating expenses of the Washington Railway & Electric Co.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BALL. I should like to finish this statement. It makes no difference as to whether it is watered stock or what it is; if the income at 5 cents would not pay the operating expenses, it is paying nothing on the investment anyhow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator just allow me to say this, and then I will yield, because I want this matter fully discussed?

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply wanted to ask a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just want to say to the Senator from Delaware that I do not conceive it to be the duty of Congress to raise fares high enough to give any concern, regardless of management, a reasonable income on the amount invested. Let us look at it a minute.

Here in New York the companies have operated all during the war and up to this time on a 5-cent fare, and I understand that they are in the hands of a receiver. I understand that the companies in Pittsburgh, where they raised the fares to 10 cents, are in the hands of a receiver. In the city of Memphis, where I come from, they raised the fare to 7 cents, and they are in the hands of a receiver. Why? Because they can not make money on watered stock; and that is the position of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. Is it right and fair for Congress to undertake to make a company earn money to which it is not entitled?

I now yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the valuation of the property of each of the street-railway companies in Washington has been fixed by an expert commission. It is not a question of the stock issued by those companies—watered stock, as the Senator terms it—but an expert commission have fixed the valuation of the property of each of the companies, and it is that valuation that the commission consider in fixing the rates.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes, Mr. President; we know exactly how that is. Everybody knows that valuation is a matter of opinion. For instance, the steam railroads of the country have stock issues—and we all know that many of them are watered—of something like $16,000,000,000, as I recall, and yet a valuation of something like nineteen or twenty billion dollars has been put upon their property.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee one question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be delighted to answer it if I know how.

Mr. BALL. While Congress has a legal right to fix a rate, does the Senator consider that Congress has a moral right, merely because it has the power, to confiscate the property of individual stockholders because they invest their money in a street-car line and operate it in the city of Washington?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not contend any such thing. The fact is that the stockholders whom the Senator from Delaware talks about are principally the holders of watered stock, and I say that it is not the duty of Congress to legislate so as to give these gentlemen returns on money that they have never invested. That is my contention; and I want to say another thing right here and now: These companies have a contract with the Congress. They entered into it voluntarily. They are claiming every right that they have under that contract. They have not yielded one jot or one tittle they secured from the Government under that contract, and yet they are asking the Government to let them violate those provisions of the contract which are favorable to the Government and favorable to the people of this District.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to a question of order. Has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; unanimous consent has been given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was granted.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the rule, is not debate limited to five minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that it is when unanimous consent is given.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to ask the Senator whether the question of granting a zone fare by either company has been considered?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know.

Mr. DIAL. What would be the Senator's opinion about that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the first thing we should do would be to require the companies to live up to their contract, because the Public Utilities Commission has no legal or moral right to permit them to violate the contract. The contract was honorably made. The consideration has passed.

Congress has given to these companies the consideration they were asked to give for the 5-cent fares, 6 tickets for 25 cents. That having taken place, before they should ask anything further from us, they should live up to the contracts they voluntarily made. They made the contracts. They felt that they could carry passengers at 5 cents; and they can. One of the companies has never asked that the fares be increased. It is only for the other company, which has watered stock, and has these outside ventures, outside of the District.

Mr. DIAL. I presume, then, if Congress had known the company were not going to live up to the contract, it would not have granted the charter, and we would have had only one company which would have lived up to the contract.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe the Senator from North Dakota rose first, and I will yield to him first.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Tennessee has made a very interesting statement, namely, that the fare in Pittsburgh is 10 cents——

Mr. McKELLAR. I was so informed. I stated it was on information that I made the statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am assuming that the information is correct, and that the fare in the Senator's own city is 7 cents——

Mr. McKELLAR. And both companies, I understand, are in the hands of receivers.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator says the reason why they are in the hands of receivers is on account of watered stock. I can not imagine how a company can go into the hands of a receiver, whether it pays a cent on any stock or not, so long as its income exceeds its expenses, and it is able to meet its debts as they become due. It does seem to me that if they are in the hands of receivers, it must be because 10 cents and 7 cents, respectively, do not pay their running expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not speak for the Pittsburgh company, but I can speak for the Memphis company.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator in a minute. Every two or three years in Memphis there is a reorganization of the street-car company, and they issue additional bonds, as well as additional stock, with the result that they can not pay the interest on the bonds, and therefore they have had to go into the hands of a receiver.

Mr. SMOOT. No company would issue bonds to pay a dividend; in fact, it would not be allowed.

Mr. McKELLER. I do not know what they issue bonds for.

Mr. SMOOT. They issue them to pay their debts.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have my doubts about whether they are always issued for proper purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator deny the fact that the actual cost to the street railways in this District for carrying each passenger is 6.2 cents?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I do. Of course, that is not the case. It could not be. Both these companies would be in the hands of receivers if it were true, because that is all they are getting.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not all they are getting.

Mr. McKELLAR. Practically all, because passengers use the tokens in almost every instance. There are very few cash fares paid. Just look at the street cars any time you wish. The Senator from Utah may not travel on the street cars, but I do.

Mr. SMOOT. So does the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McKELLAR. In 99 cases out of 100 tokens are used instead of cash fares, because that means a fare of 6⅔ cents required of each passenger for every ride.

Mr. SMOOT. I said 6.2 cents.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield now to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has been waiting for me to yield for some time.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, we are taking so much time on the amendment that I ask that the bill go back to the calendar.

Mr. FERNALD. I hope the Senator will not withdraw the bill. It is a very interesting matter. I shall have something to say about it later.

Mr. McKELLAR. I make a point of order that the Senator has no power to withdraw a bill after it is before the Senate by unanimous consent. I have the floor, and I object to that course.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Merely to correct misinformation which I think has been given to the Senator, permit me to state that the fare in Pittsburgh is not 10 cents, and never has been.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state what it is? I have been misinformed, possibly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was 5 cents. The company went into the hands of a receiver. It had never paid any dividends while the fare was 5 cents. The receivers secured permission to raise the fare to three tickets for a quarter. The receivers have now applied to be dismissed, because the company is again solvent. The receivers have accumulated a fund.

Mr. McKELLAR. The fare is 8⅓ cents?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Eight and one-third cents.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am much obliged to the Senator. As I said in the beginning, I was informed that the fare in Pittsburgh was 10 cents. Permit me to ask the Senator a question on that subject, just in order to get the information straight. Three tickets are sold for a quarter; and if it is paid in cash, the fare is 10 cents.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then my informant was correct. If there are other Senators who want to ask me any other questions on this subject, I will be glad to answer them.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FERNALD. I wanted to ask the Senator a question. In speaking of watered stock, if a company were not able to pay its running expenses would it make any difference whether its capitalization was $10,000,000 or $10,000,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. That raises a question which some one else raised a few moments ago. It depends on circumstances. As a rule when a company is reorganized, without additional money being put in, they do two things; they issue so many bonds and they issue so much stock to go along with the bonds, and they do not get the full value of the bonds; they have to sell them at a discount; but they have to pay interest on them at par, and it is very, very difficult for some of the companies which have been thus manipulated time after time to earn enough money to pay the interest on their outstanding bonds, and that is why they get into trouble. That is why they get into such trouble as the Washington Railway & Electric Co. is in and has been in for some time, and as the Memphis street railway has been in. They have been issuing bonds and stock together, and the purchasers of the bonds get stock. It is just another way of earning dividends, or attempting to earn dividends, on watered stock and fixing the salaries of officers, as has been suggested by a Senator.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator referred to contracts the street railway companies have. When do the contracts expire?

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought I had them here, but I will have to get them and put in the RECORD a statement as to the time they expire. Contracts have been entered into with the various companies which compose the Washington Railway & Electric Co., and also the Capital Traction Co., under which large grants of important rights, of the right to occupy the streets of Washington, of the right to use other public property of Washington, have been granted, and the consideration for those rights was the agreement of the companies to charge a 5-cent fare and give six tickets for 25 cents. The city of Washington is living up to its agreement, and the company is holding the city of Washington to every right, and using every right that was conferred in that contract, and simply wants to avoid its duty by going before a utilities commission and have given to them the specific right to disregard the consideration.

Mr. SMITH. Does the Senator recall whether or not the city of Washington demanded any money consideration for the franchise for the use of its streets?

Mr. McKELLAR. It demanded none at all.

Mr. SMITH. It was a gift?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was a consideration for granting 5-cent fares. By the way, I want to say to the Senator that the public utilities commission act, which was passed, I believe, in 1911 or 1912, was not passed for the purpose of allowing these companies to raise their fares. The express purpose of that act, as stated here on this floor and in the other House, was to make the companies lower the fares and to grant universal transfers. It was held out that the utilities commission would bring about a system of universal transfers in the city, and that was one of the reasons urged for the passage of the act. It was never contended at all that this utilities commission would have the right to disregard the contract which had been made as to 5-cent fares.

Mr. SMITH. What I wanted to get clear was that the franchise granted this street car company provided that in view of certain concessions on the part of the city, they were to do certain things under that contract, and amongst them grant a 5-cent fare.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is right.

Mr. SMITH. They were given the almost priceless privilege of utilizing and monopolizing certain thoroughfares in this city for the carrying of passengers, which means cutting out competition in that territory.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator stop there long enough for me to say that I understand the Public Utilities Commission will not permit a bus line to operate on any streets so as to bring it in competition with these street car companies? It has gone that far.

Mr. SMITH. I was coming to that very point, and I would like to have the Senator enlarge on that, because those of us who are members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce have this problem presented to us, that under the rules laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission the rates, fares, and charges should be uniform within a given territory. We have found that certain railroads running through territory where their cars, both passenger and freight, were carrying about the capacity of the road, were making under a given fare a splendid return, while other roads in the same territory were not carrying capacity, and under the fare were making hardly more than current expenses.

In this instance we find within a given territory no competing line. The population has increased by leaps and bounds. The cars are filled almost to capacity, without any cost to the company for the use of the right of way. Shutting out competition even by bus lines, with the increase of business due to the fact that their cars run through the populous sections of our city, has there been an increase of expense in the way of overhead charges to justify an increase in the charge for service of something like 50 per cent, from 5 cents to 7½ or to 8 cents?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the increase in the number of passengers has been as great as the increase in wages and the cost of material, and, as I understand, the Capital Traction Co. is perfectly willing to go back to its contract fares—at all events, it has never complained about the franchise fare.

It has never asked to have the fares raised, and my understanding is that the Washington Railway & Electric Co. say they could get along on a 5-cent fare if it were not for the subsidiary lines outside of the District. Surely we should not legislate compensation into the pockets of the company simply because they own lines outside of the District.

Mr. SMITH. This is a matter which comes under our jurisdiction, and, of course, we ought to be thoroughly informed of the facts. We do not want to do any injury to a public utility such as a street railway company. Has there been a thorough investigation by a competent committee of experts, taking the books and the returns and the actual expenditures of the concern, and the income by days, by months, and by years, to arrive at a balance of debits and credits?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there has not been such an examination, but surely, while such an investigation was pending, the Senator would not want to allow these companies to violate their contracts while they were exercising all the rights under the contracts?

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not think they ought to be allowed to do that, but I think we ought to have full information as to whether the present rate of fares is justifiable. If they are actually compelled to spend an amount of money that would absorb the present fares on the cars, the public then would have no right to object even to a modification of the contract, if they still desired street car service, because they could not expect a company to serve them at a loss.

Now, the question for us to decide is whether the increased volume of business on these roads has not discounted any increase that they might ask, and that they could carry the increased volume of passengers to-day at a lower rate, because it does not cost them any more to carry a full car than it does an empty car, or appreciably no more. They use the very same equipment and have the same manual service for a full car, which costs no more than an empty car going over a given mileage of track. These are matters of vital importance. It is my opinion that the increased volume of traffic within the city limits or within the limits of the District of Columbia has been sufficient to justify a 5-cent fare under the contract.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. FERNALD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator from Oregon tried to attract my attention before. So I yield first to him.

Mr. McNARY. It is quite obvious that we can not regulate street-car fares during the morning hour. There are a number of important measures on the calendar which ought to receive our attention——

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the Senator was going to discuss the matter now before us. I do not yield to the Senator to make a motion. I decline to yield to permit him to make a motion.

Mr. FERNALD. I can not agree with my friend from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. I would like to know from the Chair if it is in order to make a motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee on the table?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not while I have the floor, and I decline to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor and declines to yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yielded for a question only. I now yield to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] for a question.

Mr. FERNALD. I want to say that I am very greatly interested in what the Senator from Tennessee has had to say, and I can not agree with my friend from Oregon. I believe we may be able to settle this question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope so.

Mr. FERNALD. In reply to the statement I made a few moments ago, the Senator from Tennessee stated that it was on account of the large issue of bonds and stocks, as I understood.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not say that that is true in every case, but it is very often the case.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; in many cases.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I have known corporations to issue so many bonds that they could not pay interest on them.

Mr. FERNALD. I wanted to state to the Senator, because I know he desires to be exceedingly fair in the matter——

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course I do.

Mr. FERNALD. I am sure he does. The interest on the bonds and the dividends on the stock and the taxes do not enter into the operating expenses of a railroad.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are so charged in ordinary bookkeeping.

Mr. FERNALD. No; not as a part of the operating expenses. I am not a lawyer and would not undertake to discuss the legal questions involved, but I recall very well a decision by the Interstate Commerce Commission that the operating expenses of a railroad should not include interest on bonds, and so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think many corporations are put into the hands of receivers where they are paying interest on their bonded indebtedness and their taxes.

Mr. FERNALD. If the Senator will allow me to finish——

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. FERNALD. My original statement was that in the operating expenses it would not make any difference whether the capitalization was $10,000,000 or $10,000,000,000, if they were not able to pay operating expenses. That has nothing to do with it whatever.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am much obliged to the Senator from Maine for his contribution. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. I understood the Senator from Maine to state that there may be watered bonds as well as watered stock. I know of a railroad company that has watered stock and watered bonds and watered operating expenses, all of them watered, and the president called me a Bolshevik because I found it out.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am discussing this particular question. I think frequently corporations pay their officers too great salaries and of course they are charged to operating expenses.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not understand the Senator from Iowa. Did he say the President had called him a Bolshevik?

Mr. BROOKHART. The president of the railroad company to which I referred.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, I got the railroad president confused with the President of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I understood the Senator from Iowa to mean the president of the railroad company to which he referred.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. May I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether he has ever introduced a bill for the purpose of bringing about the purpose desired by his amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but I have introduced a number of amendments to effect that purpose.

Mr. CALDER. I thought the matter might have been investigated by a committee of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the Committee on the District of Columbia, before which any bill would go, is practically unanimously opposed, or very largely opposed, to my proposition. So it would be a useless or vain thing to introduce a bill when I would know in advance I would either get an adverse report or none at all.

Mr. CALDER. As I understand it, the subject has never been before the District Committee or any other committee of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. It ought to have been. I am surprised that a subject so important as the question of an 8-cent cash fare has not been before the District Committee. I asked the chairman of the District Committee if his committee had ever discussed it, and he said no.

Mr. CALDER. What I had in mind, I will say to the Senator, was that we are apparently attempting to legislate on a question of great interest to the people of the District and to the people of the country——

Mr. McKELLAR. I think Senators know about it.

Mr. CALDER. And in which the railroads have some rights, and we do that without any first-hand intimate knowledge of the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, the Senator can not make that statement. He surely desires to modify it, I know. The street car companies have contracts with the Government for 5-cent fares or six tickets for a quarter in the District of Columbia. They know it themselves. They have certified to the Congress that that was a reasonable and proper fare.

Mr. CALDER. And then the Public Service Commission of the District of Columbia, after hearings and after investigating the subject of rates, decided that they should have an 8-cent fare.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; we all understand that the Public Service Commission has done that.

Mr. CALDER. We have already voted on the Senator's proposition of a 5-cent fare, and, of course, we may have a second vote on it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not object to voting on it, I am sure. I shall be very glad to have a vote on it.

Mr. CALDER. We could vote on it in the proper way in the Senate if a bill were introduced for that specific purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not want to ask a question. I want to appeal to the Senator, if he will not allow us to vote on this question——

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; unless some other Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But I have not finished. There are a number of bills on the calendar in which some of us are interested.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is right about that. I am perfectly willing to take a vote as soon as we may properly do so.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. We ought to vote. I am appealing to the Senator if he will not give us an opportunity to vote, so that we may take up some of the other bills on the calendar in which some of us are greatly interested.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; I am willing to do that. I suggest to the Senator that if we lay aside the shipping bill we would have ample opportunity to vote on all these measures.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that just as soon as I have yielded to the Senator from Nevada and any other Senator who may desire to ask me a question I am ready for a vote. I yield now to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I merely want to get a little information in addition to what I already have. I would like to ask the chairman of the District Committee, for the information of the Senate, if there has been any consideration by that committee looking to a reduction of fares on the street car lines of the District?

Mr. BALL. There has been.

Mr. PITTMAN. Has the committee made any recommendations either to the street car companies or to Congress relative to the matter?

Mr. BALL. It has introduced, considered, reported to the Senate, and the Senate has passed certain bills which the committee believe will materially reduce the fares and still enable the companies to live.

Mr. PITTMAN. What is that general plan, briefly stated?

Mr. BALL. It would repeal the law at present forbidding the merging of the companies. The committee believe that if all the trolley lines and bus lines of the District were under one management, under one head, they would be enabled to give very much better accommodation at a less cost to the citizens of Washington. For the accomplishment of that purpose we have introduced and the Senate has passed a bill, which has now been reported in the House, authorizing such a merger, and there is another bill following that measure providing that if the companies fail to merge within a certain length of time they may, in a measure, be compelled to do so.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the committee has discovered a method by which the expenses of the transportation companies may be reduced, why would it not be a good idea to add it as an amendment to the pending bill in the words of the bill which has already passed the Senate and to which the Senator has just referred, and pass them both at once? The Senator has said the bill passed the Senate, but it has not yet passed the House. We do not know whether it will pass the House. If it does pass the House, I assume from statements there that they would be able to operate their roads on a 5-cent fare, but there is nothing to compel them to operate the lines on 5-cent fare, even though we pass a bill which would reduce their operating expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that suggestion is a very wise one, because unless there is such a provision in the merger legislation which has already passed the Senate it would not become a law at this session of Congress.

Mr. BALL. I would like to make one statement, and then I shall take no more time. The first necessary step for merging the street railway companies is the ascertainment of the real value of the two companies. That matter now is in the Supreme Court, which is to decide whether the expert valuation fixed by the commission is a fair and just valuation of each company. The decision is expected shortly. I do not know just when we shall get the report on the valuation. With a reasonable valuation of each company, I think that shortly we would have but one company in Washington.

The Washington Railway & Electric Co. also own the electric-light plant. While they own every share of that stock, they are prohibited by a law enacted by Congress from merging with that company and forming one company. The bill which we have reported and which the Senate has passed provides for the repeal of the acts which prohibit the formation of one company through the process of merging two or more of the companies. I do not know whether we can get a 5-cent fare bill enacted that would enable the companies to live, but I am sure we can get much less than an 8-cent fare. Of course, in order to provide for the proper extension of lines and proper service we shall have to allow the railway companies a reasonable charge.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Delaware if it is not a fact that the Washington Electric Light Co. is making a good profit on the electric-light plant which it owns?

Mr. BALL. That is true.

Mr. PITTMAN. The same stockholders are making a profit on that stock?

Mr. BALL. But I would like to state further that they are not getting the surplus charge. That is to say, they are only permitted by the Public Utilities Commission to receive 7.75 cents per kilowatt hour, while the people are actually paying 10 cents per kilowatt hour. But the difference between the two is in a fund of which the court at present has control, and when a decision is reached in the matter that fund will either be refunded to the people or retained by the company on the basis that 10 cents is a reasonable charge.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was on a special committee of the Senate a number of years ago that investigated the situation. The evidence then laid before the committee caused them to conclude that there was a considerable paralleling of the lines of railways in this city, which was an economic waste.

Mr. BALL. That is the very reason why we want but one company.

Mr. PITTMAN. I agree that is the situation, but whenever we provide by law to eliminate this waste and give a monopoly to one company, it should be done under the strictest control with regard to fares. That bill has been passed through the Senate. It has been reported to the House, I understand. It will probably pass the House, will it not?

Mr. BALL. I hope so.

Mr. PITTMAN. If it does pass the House and becomes a law, now is the time to say that having benefited their private stockholders by eliminating all of this waste, by allowing them to consolidate all of their money-making instrumentalities, we are of the opinion that, having been granted those rights, they should be able to operate upon the basis of a reasonable rate, or a 5-cent fare. Such a provision should be enacted either before or simultaneously with that measure. Otherwise no one except the stockholders will get any benefit from the passage of the act. I insist, under the statement of the chairman of this committee, that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, if the members of the Public Utilities Commission are not honestly and properly performing their duties, the proper way to proceed is for Congress to create a new Public Utilities Commission. There is a bill, I think, before the committee now for that purpose. Competition always increases cost of operation; without competition the lowest cost of service is obtained. The Public Utilities Commission stands between the people and the companies, to see that the companies are protected and that the people also are protected.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Public Utilities Commission certainly stands in a position to see that the companies are protected, but I very much doubt whether the present Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia has the slightest regard for the people of the District.

Mr. COUZENS and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield first to the Senator from Michigan and I will yield to the Senator from Kansas in a moment.

Mr. CURTIS. I shall ask to be recognized after the Senator from Michigan shall have concluded.

Mr. COUZENS. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee, is it not true that we have heard a good deal on the floor of the Senate about the sacredness of contracts?

Mr. McKELLAR. We have heard a great deal recently about the sacredness of contracts, in which I very heartily concur, for I myself am a believer in the sacredness of contracts, I will say to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. But does it not appear that the question of the sacredness of contracts is always raised on the side of the public utilities?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; in these matters I think that is so.

Mr. COUZENS. I see from last evening's Washington Star one of the District Commissioners wrote a paper which was read at the mid-year conference of the American Electric Railway Association. The article in the Star states:

> Human beings, otherwise reasonable, seem to take "a most unreasonable attitude in regard to public utility companies, especially street-car companies," Engineer Commissioner Keller, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, declared in a paper read at the mid-year conference of the American Electric Railway Association to-day at the New Willard Hotel. Commissioner Keller wrote the conference that he was ill, but sent the paper to be read to the meeting.
>
> This mental attitude, hard as it is to explain, Commissioner Keller said, is exaggerated by the "demagogue whose stock in trade it is to attack public utility rates without reference to their fundamental fairness.

In other words, I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee, is it not true that the "fairness" is not in the interest of the car riders of the District of Columbia, who years ago made a contract in which they, as citizens, gave to these companies, through Congress, an exclusive monopoly, in consideration of which they were to have a 5-cent fare? Now, over a great period of years the records show that these companies under that contract made millions and millions of dollars, for in 1919 the Public Utilities Commission of the District criticized one of the companies for issuing $5,000,000 worth of stock without any physical value back of the stock. Then they proceeded to earn under the contract which the District had given them a return on that stock.

It is true, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has said, that it does not make any difference whether there is watered stock or any other kind of stock, so long as the rate is based upon the physical value of the property rather than upon the stock issues; but I desire to point out that Congress did not require the companies to break their contract at that time and reduce the rate because of those exorbitant earnings. If they had attempted such a thing there would have been a procedure resorted to prohibiting Congress from interfering with the rights of contract.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, there would have been filed a bill in equity to enjoin somebody from interfering with the obligation of contracts. Of course, the Senator from Michigan is correct.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; and the court would probably have intervened and said the company had a right to enjoin any interference with the contract. Now, after having made millions of dollars of profits—and I do not object to their having done so, so long as they have a good contract——

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely not.

Mr. COUZENS. But now when the tables are reversed and the companies are asked to lose some money temporarily, because of unusual conditions——

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Michigan is mistaken there. I do not think the companies will lose any money. I believe that the street-car companies in the District, if they are properly managed, will make more money under a 5-cent fare than they will under the fares which they are now charging.

Mr. COUZENS. It has been proven in Boston and other places that rates of fare may be so high that they decrease street-car traffic, and that the net result has been worse than before the fares were increased.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. So that it seems to me that the Public Utilities Commission and Congress should put the street railway companies on their mettle and make them live up to their contracts. They might well do that in view of the enormous earnings made in previous years. While, as one Senator has suggested, a thorough investigation might be made and probably a bill be passed in which not only the rates might be regulated but the expenses of operation also might be regulated. As I understand, there is no provision in the law whereby expenses of operation may be regulated, either as to salaries or purchases of supplies or anything else. So it seems to me it is the duty of Congress to adopt the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Tennessee in order that the street-car companies may be put on their mettle. Then, after the experience of conducting their business on the basis of their contracts, we might determine whether or not they were entitled to some relief. They might not even be entitled to very much relief if they would use some of the enormous profits which they have earned in previous years.

I only speak of this because I hope that the Senate will indorse the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, so that we may get at the real facts in the case, for it is quite evident that the Commissioner of the District of Columbia who has charge of this matter is not in sympathy with any reduction in fares, but that he rather criticizes as a demagogue anyone who suggests that the Public Utilities Commission might be wrong and that the people of the District of Columbia might be entitled to a reduction in fares.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his splendid contribution to this debate, and I think his argument is unanswerable.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. A few moments ago I submitted a parliamentary inquiry to the Presiding Officer. I asked if debate was in order under the rules of the Senate during the morning hour. The Chair stated it was his opinion, inasmuch as unanimous consent had been given, that debate was in order. I wish to call attention to a ruling of Vice President Marshall found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 1, 1913, at page 877, from which I read:

> Mr. SMOOT. I submit a resolution and ask for its consideration.
> The resolution (S. Res. 70) was read as follows:
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?
> The Chair hears none.
> Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suppose I can rise to discuss the resolution. I was about, before concluding my remarks, to read from the report of the Economy Commission. I will just go on with my remarks on that matter.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think under paragraph 3 of Rule VII debate is not in order. The rule provides that—
> "Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar shall be entertained by the Presiding Officer, unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent is given"—
> Which has happened in this case—
> "the motion shall not be subject to amendment and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up."
> I make the point of order that debate is not in order under that rule.
> Mr. OVERMAN. Has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of the resolution?
> The VICE PRESIDENT. It has.
> Mr. OVERMAN. It is then before the Senate and is debatable.
> Mr. LODGE. At this stage of the proceedings debate is not in order. It is open to the Senator to object, of course.
> Mr. OVERMAN. If it is before the Senate by unanimous consent, then I have a right to debate it.
> Mr. PENROSE. Not under the rule.
> Mr. LODGE. Not under the rule I have read.
> Mr. OVERMAN. It seems that Senators do not want to hear the truth. I will bring it out at another time. I give that notice.
> The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was that before or after the first hour of the day's session had expired?

Mr. CURTIS. I was going to refer to that. The Senate met this morning at 11 o'clock, and it is now after 12 o'clock; but I raised the question before 12 o'clock. The Chair said he was of the opinion that debate was in order. I wanted simply to keep the record straight. I am not raising the question now, as it is after 12 o'clock, and I think after one hour has elapsed from the beginning of the session the question is debatable. I merely wanted the RECORD to show that the decision had been rendered that debate was not in order before 1 o'clock. I hope in the future the Senators will observe the rule. This morning we will hardly conclude the presentation of petitions and memorials and other ordinary routine morning business before the morning hour has elapsed, although an adjournment was taken last evening in order that some business might be transacted this morning.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it seems that the pending measure is going to take some considerable time. I have a very important committee engagement which I must go to fulfill. I have a small private bill here which I think ought to be passed. It has been favorably reported by the committee; and if the bill is to be passed at all, it must be acted upon very soon. I should like to ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not yield for that purpose.

Mr. POMERENE. I think there will be no debate on the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the pending bill has been taken up by unanimous consent, and I do not believe we could make another unanimous-consent order without interfering with the one under which we are now proceeding, and I object to any such request for unanimous consent.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well, if the Senator objects I will bring the matter up at another time, as I am obliged to leave the Chamber now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very sorry to be compelled to object, for I should like to accommodate the Senator. If no other Senator has any questions to ask, I shall be very glad indeed now to have a vote on the amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, this is about as important a matter as could occupy the attention of the Senate. We have a couple of weeks yet before the end of the session, and I think we can pass all needed legislation in that time.

Mr. President, I must say that I am not thoroughly in sympathy with the fixing of fares by Congress. I do not know whether we have sufficient facts before us to enable us to do that properly or not. I question it; but I fully appreciate the motive of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] in pressing this matter. Personally, I feel very kindly toward all investments, and I desire to see every honest dollar get a legitimate return upon itself. However, there has grown up in the country a habit of too much competition; enterprises are duplicated uselessly, and we have this condition here.

When this second street-railway company applied to Congress for a charter and received it, it ought to have lived up to it. With a city here of some 450,000 population it is very probable that a second street railway was unnecessary. It involved double expense, double overhead charges, and all that kind of thing. I do not believe that Congress ought to do anything to deprive investors of a fair return upon honest investments, properly made.

It occurs to me that the right thing to do here would be to consolidate these companies, and, if they do not do it voluntarily, to force them to consolidate.

I am not an expert in regard to the cost of operating railways, but I question the statement that there has been so great an increase. It is true that the increase was considerable, but the construction in later days has been more permanent. Formerly, the ties were exposed to the weather. They rotted, and great expense was involved in replacing them. In these modern times, however, steel ties are used, and they are removed in a great measure from the ravages of the weather, and after the track is once constructed not so much repair is necessary.

If this second company can not carry its country lines without charging an unreasonable fare to the people who live in the District, perhaps a zone fare system could be established. Anyway, those who live nearer the center of the city should not be penalized for the unnecessary expenditure resulting from the building of branch lines which are not self-sustaining.

Mr. President, a still larger question presents itself to Congress. We are to blame for not having better facilities in the District. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] a few years ago took great pains to have a bill passed by the Senate to develop the water power up the Potomac River here; and no better work could have been done for the District of Columbia and this section of the United States than to have developed that water power. Here we have this water running right by the District every day, thousands and thousands of dollars going to waste, and we have not the forethought or the judgment to develop that power. If we should consolidate these railways and develop that water power, the cost of transportation could be reduced to a minimum; we would save great quantities of coal for future generations; we would have a better system; we could have better and cheaper lights in the District; we could even heat many of the houses by electricity.

Not only that, Mr. President, but if that power were developed it would be an example to the rest of the United States. It would be a wonderful incentive to anyone who looked at it to go back home and have power developed in his own section. If I may be excused for a personal allusion, the first large dam I ever saw was something like 40 feet high, and it made a wonderful impression upon me. I thought if those people could utilize their stream, we ought to utilize ours near home. Hence, that was the beginning of many developments in my section of the country.

I do not believe in being penurious with investments, but we are all persuaded to believe that the fare charged here now is excessive. I am a stickler for contracts, and I believe this company should be required to live up to its contract with the people of the District of Columbia. I have a deep sympathy for the people here. They feel hurt because we do not allow them representation in Congress. While I would not vote to allow them representation, that is a greater reason why we should look after their interests more carefully. So, Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be agreed to.

As I say, I am not much in sympathy with this kind of legislation, but I believe that the groundwork has been laid here to show that it is just. If these people had not wanted to accept the charter, they need not have done it. They did it with their eyes open. The population has increased since that time. The people who organized the company have not come here and shown any reason why the contract should be modified. On the other hand, they are pleased with it. The public is not posted about the bookkeeping of these different companies. Figures can be manipulated so as to arrive at almost any conclusion that is desired; and while this company may not be making a great profit upon one of its branches, yet on another it may be piling up enormous profits.

I for one am not envious of people who make money. I am not envious of people who go out and develop the country. I believe they should have a return upon their investment and should have a good return, because they assume many obligations and take many chances; but in this matter I believe that for the present we ought to adopt this amendment and give this experiment a trial, and see if these people will not consolidate, and if they can not get along and make a reasonable profit by charging the fare fixed in the contract.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether any investigation of this matter has been made by the committee of the Senate naturally intrusted with the duty of investigating it and the power to make some determination on the merits of the question?

Mr. DIAL. Not to my knowledge. I am not on the District of Columbia Committee. I saw something in the paper a year or two ago about some figures or some preliminary investigation about consolidation, or some talk of consolidation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I answer that question?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I wish the Senator would. I am not posted on it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has just asked a question. He was not here when the matter came up a few minutes ago. The chairman of the committee said they had had under consideration all of these questions, and that they found as a committee that the expenses of these railroad companies could be materially reduced if they were consolidated, and their power plants consolidated, and the paralleling lines cut out, but that there was no authority in the law to do that. He added, however, that they had actually passed a bill through the Senate providing for that, and that the bill has been favorably reported from the House committee, and that in his opinion it will pass the House.

If that is accomplished—and I agree with the legislation—it will, as the committee said it would do, greatly reduce the cost of operating these railroads. That will be a benefit to the stockholders. It will be no benefit to the passengers unless there is a reduction in the rate. There should be a reduction in the rate at least back to the normal fare of 5 cents. There is no assurance that it will go back to the normal fare of 5 cents unless the commission puts it there. We are not fixing rates in this amendment, but we have a right as a Congress to impose a maximum restriction. That maximum restriction is 5 cents.

There will be no harm in adopting this amendment. Why? Because if that bill does not pass the House, then the House will kill this bill, and if that bill does pass the House, giving this great benefit to the stockholders of that railroad, it is their duty at the same time to pass this bill, so as to see that the people who pay the fares get some benefit from it.

There can be no harm, therefore, in passing this bill. I would not vote for this amendment except for the power of consolidation of those railroads, but if those railroads are going to be consolidated they should be restricted to a 5-cent fare. We have some obligation to the people who ride on these cars, as well as to the stockholders, and while we are legislating for the profits of these railroads by cutting down their expenses it is our duty, in my opinion, to make some restriction as to the fare.

Suppose we adopt this amendment. The bill providing for the consolidation has already passed the House. If the House does not pass it, then let it kill this amendment. If the House does pass it, then it is its duty to adopt this amendment.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and attend the meetings whenever my duties in Congress will permit. Very often, as my colleagues know, committee meetings are held at the same time, and it is impossible to attend more than one. There have been more or less exhaustive hearings, as I recall, on the question of the economies incident to a compulsory consolidation of the two lines. I do not desire to take too much of the time of the Senator——

Mr. DIAL. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky. In fact, I yield the floor.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not want the floor. I will be through in just a moment. It appears that one of these lines is either more favorably situated or more efficiently operated than the other. I express no opinion on that subject, but one of these lines is making a much better return than the other, and for that reason Congress is about to pass an act which will compel the efficient line to take over the inefficient line, and the inefficient line is bigger than the efficient line.

The mileage of the inefficient line is twice as great as the mileage of the efficient line. The owners of the efficient line claim that they are not so well located as the line that is making the least money, but that their profits are due entirely to the efficiency of their operation. They do not care to be consolidated with the other company. They were organized under a law, in my opinion a very wise law, which prohibited the consolidation and gave us something of competition. Of course, that idea of competitive business and of restraining trusts and combinations, except by means of a governmental commission which shall run their own business and feed them with a spoon, has passed into a dream of things that were; but be that as it may——

Mr. PITTMAN. Will the Senator pardon me one moment? Did the Senator ever hear of competition existing between two lines, except competition to get passengers? Was there ever any competition in fares?

Mr. STANLEY. There is competition in service, necessarily.

Mr. PITTMAN. But there never is competition in the matter of fares.

Mr. STANLEY. As a rule, the fares that prevail on one line under similar conditions will prevail on another, just as there must be the same fare at the common termini of the same railroads, although there may be competition at intermediate points and in a dozen different ways. But be that as it may, the law as now written forbids consolidation, under the opinion of Congress that that was the best way to get good service.

Mr. DIAL. Does not the Senator think it would be advisable to change the law?

Mr. STANLEY. It may be; I am not saying it is not. As to whether you get better service by combining the telephone companies and street car companies under one control arbitrarily or not, I am not expert enough to express a well and matured opinion, and for that reason I do not care to express any. But right or wrong, one of these companies was organized under a law which forbade its consolidation with any other company. These lines parallel each other and run within a few blocks of each other all over the city, and the company most efficiently operated claim that they get the bulk of the traffic at the same fare because of the promptness and efficiency of the service. If that be true, you are compelling an efficient line to take over an inefficient line after it was incorporated and created under a law which assured them that they would not be compelled to consolidate, that it would be illegal to do it. In addition to that, my impression is that there has been no definite determination by any committee of the Senate as to the cost of this service to either one of these roads, or on the question as to whether or not a 5-cent fare will throw them both into the hands of a receiver. Pending that, it strikes me that if we should agree to an amendment of this kind we would be getting the cart before the horse.

If Congress has power to fix a 5-cent fare before the consolidation, it has ample power to fix it after the consolidation. If these companies can be operated at a profit charging a 5-cent fare, they ought to charge that, and if they can not, we ought not to force them into bankruptcy. We are passing without evidence upon a question that is technical, which requires the opinion of engineers and the careful, sober, well-considered judgment of business men. It is not a question for stump speeches or for appeals to the sympathy of the great public. I am in favor of protecting the public as much as anybody, but the public never demanded an injustice and never should do so.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have the highest opinion of the opinion of my friend from Kentucky, but I do not see how on earth he can conceive that the restriction to a 5-cent fare can put either one of these roads, or a consolidation of the two, into bankruptcy when he knows the history of the two roads. They have operated for years on a 5-cent fare without going into bankruptcy. A 5-cent fare is not an unusually small fare; it is an unusually large fare in these days and times. But you are not only going back to normal, but there is an act which has passed the Senate and is going to pass the House which will reduce the costs of both of those roads, undoubtedly.

The Senator says that one of the roads is inefficiently managed. One of the roads has not been making as much of a profit as the other road, but that so-called inefficient road has been making enormous profits out of its electric light plant, which the same stockholders own. The law, however, provided that they could not combine the two, but the same stockholders own both of them. If your act provided that they could combine their light company and their inefficient street car company when they combined those companies the consolidated company would be just as efficient as the other company.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I do not profess to know all that is in the hearings. As my valued friend the Senator well knows, these hearings occurred at a time when we were considering vital matters of the same character in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, matters affecting the whole country, and when I had to choose between a matter affecting the citizens of the District of Columbia and one affecting the shippers of the United States I attended the same committee that I presume the Senator who is addressing me attended.

Is there any finding as to this matter on the part of those qualified to know? I endeavored to ascertain that fact on one or two occasions, when those witnesses present could not tell——

Mr. DIAL. Let us have order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. STANLEY. Is there any finding on the part of any disinterested engineer or expert in the management of these facilities that upon the combination or consolidation of the power plant and of the two systems they can be operated at a profit charging 5 cents, without any regional arrangement or any division of fares for long hauls, or anything of that kind? I know that if there is one man in the Senate who is removed as far as the heavens from the earth from any attempt to support a merely popular thing, without regard to its justice——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from South Carolina obtained the floor about 15 minutes ago, and in that time has farmed it out to other Senators. I make the point of order that for that reason the Senator from South Carolina has lost the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can we not have a vote?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I hope that if he has lost the floor, I have found it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator has not been recognized.

Mr. DIAL. I am glad to give up the floor. I have been trying to give it up for 10 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. McNARY. I think I have obtained the floor by that fact. Am I recognized?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. It is evident to most of us that we can not regulate the street railway fares on the floor of the Senate.

There are many important bills on the calendar, and we have lost almost two hours this morning. I have a bill in mind now—the filled milk bill—which should receive the attention of this body, and in order to clear the way I move to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee on the table.

Mr. McKELLAR. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. McKELLAR. A vote having been asked and the yeas and nays having been ordered——

Mr. LODGE. That makes no difference.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am asking the Chair what the parliamentary situation is. Under those circumstances, can a motion to lay on the table be entertained?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands it can be entertained, notwithstanding that the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. PITTMAN. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PITTMAN. Was not a point of order made against that?

Mr. LODGE. The Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. Has the Chair sustained the point of order made against the Senator from Kentucky speaking?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina stated that he relinquished the floor. The Chair then recognized the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, it may be too late to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, but I think the RECORD will show that when the Senator from Kentucky was speaking the Senator from South Carolina said, "I yield the floor," and the Senator from Kentucky continued to speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course, if the Senator from South Carolina said he yielded the floor, it was then the province of the Chair to recognize some one, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PITTMAN. While the Senator from Kentucky was speaking?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He was not speaking at that time.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. STANLEY. I have had only about twenty years' experience in this body and the other, and this is the first time in an orderly debate I have ever seen a Senator or a Member taken off his feet in the midst of a discussion by one who asked to be recognized while he was talking, unless he was out of order, and was so advised. If that is the rule, I want to know it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MOSES (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Ball	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Bayard	Harreld	Moses	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	New	Townsend
Cameron	Kellogg	Norbeck	Warren
Colt	Ladd	Oddie	Watson
Cummins	Lenroot	Phipps	Weller
Curtis	Lodge	Poindexter	Willis
Ernst	McCumber	Pomerene
France	McKinley	Reed, Pa.
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smoot

NAYS—36.

Ashurst	George	La Follette	Shields
Borah	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Brookhart	Glass	Norris	Stanley
Capper	Harris	Overman	Sutherland
Caraway	Harrison	Owen	Swanson
Couzens	Heflin	Pittman	Trammell
Culberson	Hitchcock	Ransdell	Underwood
Dial	Johnson	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	King	Sheppard	Williams

NOT VOTING—23.

Brandegee	Fernald	Myers	Shortridge
Broussard	Gooding	Nelson	Simmons
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Stanfield
Dillingham	Kendrick	Page	Wadsworth
Edge	Keyes	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	McCormick	Reed, Mo.

So Mr. McKELLAR's amendment was laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCUMBER in the chair). The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the bill which has been under consideration will go to the calendar, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me a moment to submit a request?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield with the understanding that it will not lead to long debate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it recess until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate about what time he expects to close the session this afternoon?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to run until at least 5 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. I object to the request for a recess. Monday is calendar day, and there are a great many bills on the calendar which ought to be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not desire to ask Senators to remain here this afternoon. I had hoped to avoid that, because I want to recess when we do quit the work to-day. I shall now have to ask Senators to remain, and we will take a recess by motion.

Mr. SWANSON. We ought to have a morning hour on Monday.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I must decline to yield further. I claim the floor in my own right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course; we had a morning hour this morning, and it was wasted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona declines to yield further, and will proceed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the words I used a few moments ago are deemed offensive by my friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I am not the kind of man to use words of an offensive nature in public and then whisper an apology in the ear of the person offended. If I use words in public that seem offensive, my apology is made in public. I now ask leave to withdraw the language deemed to be offensive. We were given a morning hour and it is irritating to have the entire hour consumed by one bill. That was the reason why I spoke with vehemence, but I assure my good friend from Tennessee I meant no reflection, and I hope he will accept what I now say.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator suspend just a moment and yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. Cheerfully, provided I do not lose the floor.

CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR ON MONDAY.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the calendar ought to be considered. I was just about to propose that when the Senate conclude its business to-day, it adjourn with the understanding or agreement that during the morning hour Monday unobjected bills on the calendar shall be considered. There is good reason for that. It is about the last opportunity the Senate will have to pass over to the body at the other end of the Capitol its bills which have not yet been disposed of by this body and to consider House bills for action during the present session of Congress. An agreement to consider only unobjected bills under Rule VIII would enable Senators to avoid the consumption of the entire morning hour in the consideration of one or two bills. It would afford the Senate an opportunity to transact such business on the calendar as it desired to transact. I myself would not urge an adjournment to-day but for that consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that if we may adjourn until 10 o'clock Monday morning I would be willing to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hear about me declarations that there are a number of committee meetings called for Monday morning. I myself have one.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator knows the situation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I understand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am willing to adjourn until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator ought to be content with adjournment until 11 o'clock Monday in view of the fact that committee meetings have already been called.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have now, I think, far more important business before us than committee meetings at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent, with the indulgence of the Senator from Arizona——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it adjourn until 11 o'clock Monday morning, and that during the morning hour only unobjected bills on the calendar shall be considered under Rule VIII.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If that is amended to make it 10 o'clock I shall not object.

Mr. ROBINSON. As it is now the practice of the Senate to meet at 11 o'clock, I feel certain that if we should meet at 10 o'clock perhaps half of the hour between 10 o'clock and 11 o'clock would be consumed in getting the attendance of a quorum. I do not think anything would be accomplished by meeting at 10 o'clock. The time would be consumed in procuring the attendance of a quorum rather than in the disposition of business on the calendar. I think every Senator realizes that that is true. In view of that situation, I am unwilling to modify my request for unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Several Senators on this side of the aisle have urged that we adjourn until 11 o'clock. Of course I know that it makes a difference of only an hour, and I am willing to do that.

Mr. LODGE. The understanding is that only unobjected bills are to be considered?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; that is the proposed agreement.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I understood the agreement to be, because in any other way it would be a waste of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request presented by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business for this day it will adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m., Monday, February 19, 1923, and that during the morning hour on Monday the Senate will consider unobjected bills upon the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me to give a notice?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to give notice to the Senate that I expect to hold the Senate in night session Monday night and every night thereafter until the bill is disposed of or we reach some agreement. I hope we may be able to avoid night sessions, but that notice I give and I expect to stand up to it as long as the majority of the Senate will stand behind me.

Mr. SWANSON. May I ask the Senator from Washington how late he expects to remain in session each night?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, we may remain in session all night. How late we sit will depend upon the progress we make with the bill.

ROAD IN FORT APACHE INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, and I will make as brief a statement of the object of the bill as may be.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not yield for that purpose. If the Senator——

Mr. ASHURST. I have the floor, and I hope the Senator from Washington will allow me to state my request.

Mr. LODGE. But the Senator from Arizona is making a request for unanimous consent, and objection may be interposed.

Mr. ASHURST. But I have not yet stated my request for unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it appears from its reading that the bill for which the Senator desires consideration may be passed without any discussion, I shall not object. I merely wish to make that suggestion.

Mr. ASHURST. I should be grievously disappointed if the Senator from Washington after my short statement should object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I do not want even a short statement. If I yield to the Senator from Arizona, I shall then have to yield to other Senators.

Mr. ASHURST. But Senators should not be called on to vote on the bill until they know what it is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator from Arizona in the interest of his bill will merely have it read.

Mr. ASHURST. Indeed, I can make my statement briefer than the reading of the bill.

During the time the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department was under consideration I offered an amendment to that bill proposing to appropriate $15,000 from the funds of certain Indians in Arizona for the construction of a road which is wholly and solely within an Indian reservation in northeastern Arizona. There are over 2,000 of those Indians. Their property is worth about $3,000,000 and their income is about $75,000 from the sale of matured timber. A county, the poorest in our State, has bonded itself for over $200,000 to build the road and has set apart $15,000 to build the road in the Indian reservation.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] objected to the amendment which I offered to the appropriation bill, but stated that if I would prepare a separate bill he should have no objection to that. Such a bill has passed the House of Representatives, has been reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and is now on the calendar.

It proposes to appropriate $15,000 of the funds of the Fort Apache Indians to construct the road, which, as I have stated, is wholly on their reservation. I ask that the report on the bill may be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1144) submitted by Mr. ASHURST on February 14, 1923, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Report to accompany H. R. 13128.]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13128) authorizing an appropriation for the construction of a road within the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts relating to the bill are fully set forth in House Report No. 1380, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[House Report No. 1380. Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13128) authorizing an appropriation for the construction of a road within the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., having considered the same, report the bill back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was referred to the Department of the Interior for report, and in the following letter the Secretary recommends its enactment:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 9, 1923.

Hon. HOMER P. SNYDER,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SNYDER: This will refer further to your letter of December 5, 1922, transmitting for report and recommendation a copy of H. R. 13128, proposing to authorize an appropriation of $15,000 from the tribal funds of the Fort Apache Indians to pay one half the cost of constructing a road between Cooley and the northeastern boundary of the reservation, contingent upon payment by the county of the other half. I recommend that the proposed bill receive the favorable consideration of your committee and of Congress.

This reservation comprises over 1,000,000 acres of land inhabited by 2,552 Indians. It is estimated that the timber on the reservation is worth approximately $3,000,000. A contract has been made to cut the timber on the reservation, which will very likely bring in over $100,000 annually for a number of years. The amount now to the credit of the tribe from this source is about $79,000 in excess of the sum required for support and civilization during the current fiscal year.

I fully realize the necessity of better roads on this reservation as one of the most important factors in the progress of the Indians and am, of course, willing to cooperate with the local people along this line to the greatest practicable extent so far as available funds will permit consistent with the welfare and interest of the Indians.

The road in question is to take the place of an old, unimproved road connecting Cooley with Springerville and other parts of Apache County off the reservation, and will be about 20 miles in length. While this particular road is not the one most needed by the Indians now, from the standpoint of the actual use they will make of it, in view of the fact that, as I understand, Apache County has already voted $15,000 to pay its half of the cost I am inclined to favor the proposed appropriation from tribal funds as being justified by the indirect benefit the road will be to the Indians by opening up that part of the reservation, and to show our willingness to meet the local people halfway in such matters.

Sincerely, ALBERT B. FALL, Secretary.

The following letter from the chairman of the board of supervisors of Apache County, Ariz., shows that $15,000 has been set aside by that county to match this appropriation if authorized to be made from the tribal funds of the Indians of the Fort Apache Reservation:

ST. JOHNS, ARIZ., November 16, 1922.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Apache County, not having any highway to connect the town of Cooley, on the Apache Indian Reservation, with any part of the county, has by bond issue raised $15,000 to apply on building a road from Cooley across the Apache Indian Reservation to connect with a highway to Eagar and Springerville.

The county is not financially situated to complete this highway, as it has reached the limit on issuing bonds.

As this road is of vital importance to this county and the Indians on the reservation as well, opening up their country a distance of 20 miles—and, besides, this road will connect with the road from Cooley to the White River Indian Agency, enabling that agency to procure what produce it needs which is raised here—we therefore respectfully request you to use your best efforts in securing for this road a sum amounting to at least as much as we are expending, to wit, $15,000, in order to build a graded road.

I remain, respectfully yours, JOS. UDALL,
Chairman Board of Supervisors of Apache County.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the sum proposed to be appropriated reimbursable?

Mr. ASHURST. It is to come out of the funds of the Indians.

Mr. LENROOT. It is to come out of their own funds?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized an appropriation of $15,000 from any tribal funds on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians of the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., to be immediately available, to pay one-half the cost of constructing a wagon road, within said reservation, between Cooley and the northeast boundary of said reservation: Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein authorized shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the county of Apache, Ariz., satisfactory guarantees of the payment by said county of one-half of the cost of the construction of said road.

Mr. LENROOT. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Arizona may have his bill passed if he does not proceed further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. With the understanding that the bill will not lead to further debate, I shall not object to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13128) authorizing an appropriation for the construction of a road within the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID C. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4071) for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis. I do not think there will be any discussion of the bill at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there is no discussion of the bill, I shall make no objection to its consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senate cares to hear a brief statement from me——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the bill may be read.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to David C. Van Voorhis, of Bowling Green, Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,931.17, being the amount of war savings stamps lost by him while postmaster during the year 1918, without fault on his part, and which amount was thereafter by him paid to the Government out of his own funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the report on the bill which has just passed was submitted by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In order that Senators and others who may be interested in the bill may know what the facts are in regard to the measure, I ask that the report on the bill be incorporated in the RECORD, without reading.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1126) submitted by Mr. ROBINSON on February 9, 1923, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Report to accompany S. 4071.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4071) for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The purpose of the bill is to reimburse David C. Van Voorhis, of Bowling Green, Ohio, the sum of $1,931.17, being the amount of war-savings stamps lost by him while postmaster during the year 1918, without fault on his part, and which amount was thereafter by him paid to the Government out of his own funds.

The facts are fully set forth in the following letter from the Post Office Department, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 18, 1920.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR POMERENE: Referring to your personal call at the department in behalf of D. C. Van Voorhis, postmaster, Bowling Green, Ohio, the records show that the shortage in the 1918 war-stamp account at Bowling Green has been thoroughly investigated by the department under Case No. 54663–C.

The following is quoted from the report of the post-office inspector assigned to this investigation, which covers the salient points in connection with the shortage:

"In the personal investigation at Bowling Green the accounts and records of the office covering the 1918 transactions in war-savings and thrift stamps have been carefully examined and no information has been obtained therefrom which would account for any part of the alleged loss or shortage. The accounts have been properly kept and no attempt to alter or falsify them in any way has been made. It appears that this discrepancy in the account became apparent in September or October, 1918, and both the postmaster and assistant were aware of it, but were entirely unable to account for it or to find any errors in the account.

"Investigation at the office in question has also been made with a view to ascertaining whether or not the shortage was due to the dishonesty of any employee connected with the service or who had access to the war savings stamp supplies, but nothing has been disclosed by investigation to indicate that such is the case.

"The clerical force at this office is not large, and during 1918, when this shortage occurred, it consisted of John W. Brewer, assistant postmaster; Claren Crane, George A. Phillips, and Jessie Mitchell, clerks; with substitute clerk Harold Bates, who was appointed regular on August 16, 1918. The record and reputation of each of these employees have been examined, but there is apparently no reason to question the honesty of any one of them. The assistant postmaster and clerk Jessie Mitchell did most of the work in the money-order and registry room, where practically all of the financial work is handled and where the war savings and thrift stamp stocks were kept, but the other clerks, although assigned to the mailing section, had access to the financial section. So also did the janitors, but these are both men of good reputation and several years' service and have never been suspected of dishonesty.

"The post office at Bowling Green is of the second class, and from the installation of the central accounting system until March, 1920, it was the central accounting office for Wood County and the source of stamp supplies for 36 offices, of which 10 are presidential. The handling of the accounts, requisitions, etc., for the 36 offices entailed an enormous amount of work, practically all of which fell upon the assistant postmaster * * *.

"The handling of the war savings and thrift stamp transactions was, of course, in addition to the regular work, and during several months of the year 1918 was of such proportions that it could not be properly taken care of by the force at this office. During the months of August and September, 1918, a war savings stamp drive was put on by the State war savings committee, and the sales at the Bowling Green post office, including district requisitions, amounted to $242,199.65 for August and $102,786.15 for September, as against an average monthly sale of $35,567.49 for the other months of the year. While this amount of business might easily have been handled by the office had the individual sales been in large amounts and fewer in number, they were, in fact, small in amount and great in number and accordingly required a great deal of time and labor. The requisitions from district post offices, whose fixed credits were not large owing to their inability to give proper protection, were small and frequent and entailed a great deal of work. It is stated that, during the rush period, which extended over two months, the office was unable to make up daily cash balances and to check the transactions and stock in order to ascertain accurately how the account stood.

"The work during this period was so heavy and his duties so onerous that Assistant Postmaster John W. Brewer suffered a nervous breakdown and was absent from duty several weeks. He returned to work before he was really able to do so and the postmaster claims that he was entirely unable to perform his duties and for a time was obliged to leave the office daily after two or three hours' work. The postmaster endeavored to induce him to resign owing to his physical and mental condition, but he insisted that he was recovering and continued to fill the position until March 1, 1919, when he resigned.

"The postmaster does not suspect the dishonesty of any employee of the office and does not believe that the shortage is due to the theft of stamps or funds by anyone connected with the service. He is of the opinion that the discrepancy is the result of errors made over the counter in sales to the public or in the handling of requisitions for district offices, and that it is likely due to the nervous condition and disability of former Assistant Postmaster Brewer.

"The postmaster states that he reported to the department the condition of the assistant and requested that he be given authority to replace him, but that no action was taken in the matter. It appears, however, that some investigation of the matter was made by an inspector in October or November, 1918, and it is probable that the condition of the assistant postmaster at that time was not as serious as the postmaster thought it to be, and that it did not justify his displacement.

"It is more probable that this discrepancy in the war savings stamp account has occurred through errors or accidental loss of stamps during the period when the savings drive was at its peak and when the office, as a result thereof, was in a chaotic condition because of the unusual amount of work, which the force was unable to handle.

"An inspection of this office made on July 9, 1918, prior to the discrepancy in the account, disclosed that the office was in an unsatisfactory condition, due partly to the amount of work to be done and partly to lack of organization * * *.

"There never has been any question of Mr. Brewer's integrity * * *. His reputation and standing in the community in recent years appears to have been very good.

"Whether or not the loss was due to errors or incapacity on the part of the assistant postmaster can not at this time be determined, and Mr. Brewer, prior to his being adjudged insane, was entirely unable to account for it, and he and the postmaster had known, searched for, and discussed the loss for some time before the close of 1918 accounts.

"Prior to his breakdown, Mr. Brewer had always been considered reasonably accurate in his work, although slow and without much ability to systematize. The postmaster * * * is without any particular training in the keeping of records and in financial transactions * * *. It is quite as probable, therefore, that the errors which caused this loss may have been made in part by the postmaster as well as the assistant or others. In any event, there is no evidence that the responsibility rests with the assistant to an extent which would justify a demand upon him or his sureties for the payment of the whole or any part of the shortage.

"In connection with this investigation the accounts and records of a number of the district offices of the county have been examined in connection with regular inspection of those offices in the hope that some questionable transaction between them and the central accounting office might be found which would furnish some clue to the alleged loss, but none has been found.

"If there was any way in which the postmaster could be given credit or be reimbursed for this loss it would seem to be an equitable thing to do, because, whatever the actual cause of this loss may have been, its greatest contributing factor was the unusual burden and responsibility placed upon him and his office force by the work of the central accounting system and the war savings and thrift stamp drives."

It appears from the letter of Mr. Van Voorhis to you, dated November 29, that he is of the opinion that in view of the fact that the former assistant postmaster, John W. Brewer, "had full charge of all accounts, including the war-saving stamp account in question," that he, as postmaster, should be relieved of responsibility for the financial affairs of his office. Obviously this view can not be accepted by the department unless the postmaster can actually fix responsibility for the shortage on the assistant postmaster to whom he had assigned the war savings account, and the postmaster admits that he is unable to fix the responsibility for this shortage on the former assistant postmaster, and the investigation made by the inspector assigned to the case confirms that fact.

The report shows that in so far as could be determined by the investigation made nothing has developed which indicates criminal negligence on the part of the postmaster or any of the employees connected with the Bowling Green office and the personal integrity and honesty of the postmaster and employees of the office are not involved. The only reflection is the lack of ability on the part of the postmaster to properly organize the work in his office in such a manner as to properly protect Government securities and to be able to fix responsibility for losses or shortages in case losses or shortages occurred.

The department is not unmindful of the great amount of extra work performed at the Bowling Green office in connection with the sale of war-savings and thrift stamps, and that the postmaster and other employees at the Bowling Green office cheerfully performed this extra work and assumed the heavy responsibility resulting from the sale of $700,660.72 in war-savings and thrift stamps during the calendar year 1918 without extra compensation, exhibiting a high degree of patriotic service to the country during the war. In view of this fact, in addition to the fact that a searching investigation fails to disclose any criminal responsibility on the part of any of the officers or employees connected with the Bowling Green office, it would be a pleasure to relieve the postmaster from accountability for the shortage, but unfortunately there is no provision of law whereby such relief can be granted by the Post Office Department.

A copy of this letter is inclosed for transmission to Postmaster Van Voorhis, if you wish to use it for that purpose, and the papers which you left at the department are returned as requested.

Yours very truly,

W. J. BARROWS,
Acting Third Assistant Postmaster General.

WILLIAM H. LEE.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for just a moment, in order that I may call up a bill, which I do not think will take any time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Might not the Senator's bill be considered during the morning hour on next Monday, when we take up the calendar?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Washington has yielded to other Senators and why might he not also yield to me for this purpose?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. Perhaps we shall consume less time by taking that course.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely desire to make a brief statement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will merely ask that his bill may be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well, I ask that the bill may be read. The bill has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy and of everyone else who has had anything to do with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill (S. 3879) for the relief of William H. Lee, was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Lee, lieutenant commander, United States Navy, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $828.29, said sum being the amount of restitution made by him out of his private funds for money stolen from his safe by a man serving under him, for which said officer was held responsible, while stationed as recruiting officer for the United States Navy in the city of San Francisco, Calif., on December 30, 1920.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the bill leads to no discussion, I shall not object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which the Secretary has read?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is there a unanimous report made on this bill, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the committee is unanimous in favor of the bill.

Mr. KING. I have very grave doubt about the wisdom of passing the bill, but, in deference to my very genial friend, I believe I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33 to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10003) to further amend and modify the war risk insurance act; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SWEET, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, and Mr. RAYBURN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 40) providing for the reenrollment of the bill (S. 2023) defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes, with amendments.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3721. An act providing for the erection of additional suitable and necessary buildings for the National Leper Home;

H. R. 369. An act for the relief of the owner of Old Dominion Pier A;

H. R. 7583. An act for the relief of Henry Peters;

H. R. 10529. An act for the relief of Harry E. Fiske;

H. R. 13351. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the Daughters of the American Revolution of the State of South Carolina the silver service which was used upon the battleship South Carolina;

H. R. 13926. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 418. Joint resolution authorizing the use of public parks, reservations, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia; and the use of tents, cots, hospital appliances, flags, and other decorations, property of the United States, by the Almas Temple, Washington, D. C., 1923 Shrine Committee (Inc.), and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 440. Joint resolution to satisfy the award rendered against the United States by the arbitral tribunal established under the special agreement concluded June 30, 1921, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Norway.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The Secretary will state the next amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 14, after the word "vessels," it is proposed to insert "operating on routes established by the board prior to the enactment of this act."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "this" before the word "act" and inserting the word "such."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let us see just exactly what is proposed to be done. The committee amendment is, in line 14, after the word "vessels," to insert the words "operating on routes established by the board prior to the enactment of this act." That is the amendment now under consideration. Now, what is it the Senator from Washington proposes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Section 2 of the bill refers to section 7 of the act of 1920, under which the routes were established, but the word "such" should be employed in the proviso, because it refers to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 3, in line 14, before the word "act," it is proposed to strike out the word "this" and insert the word "such," so as to read:

operating on routes established by the board prior to the enactment of such act.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume that relates to vessels operating at the present time, but I do not gather the entire purport of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The proviso refers to the act of 1923, while the whole section, as the Senator realizes, is an amendment to section 7 of the act of 1920 and becomes a part of the act of 1920. The word "such," proposed to be inserted, refers to the words "merchant marine act of 1922." Of course, the figures "1922" should be changed to "1923."

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, "1922" ought to be changed to "1923"?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I will offer that amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I thought the Senator meant to cover. He intends to move to strike out "1922" and substitute "1923."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that will be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. And now the Senator proposes to strike out the word "this" and insert the word "such."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, I move to strike out, on line 14, "1922" and in lieu thereof to insert "1923."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 3, section 2, line 16, after the word "who," to insert the words "in the judgment of the board," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That the board shall not for the period of two years after the enactment of the merchant marine act, 1923, sell vessels operating on routes established by the board prior to the enactment of such act to persons other than those who in the judgment of the board have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 24, after the word "sales," to insert the words "and its assignment," so as to read:

(b) Such section is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to discourage monopoly in the American merchant marine, and, in pursuance of this policy, the board is directed, in the development of its sales and its assignment policy, to continue as far as possible and practicable, subject to the provisions of this section, all existing steamship routes and regular services, and to endeavor in every way to bring about the permanent establishment of such routes and services, and their retention, as far as possible, in the hands of persons having the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such routes and services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 8, after the word "appliances," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to the construction or equipment of vessels by corporations of individuals primarily for the purpose of transporting their own products.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment in lieu of that amendment. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted, I move to insert the words found on page 8, beginning in line 14, of the bill as it was ordered reprinted last evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In lieu of the amendment appearing on page 7, lines 9 to 11 inclusive, it is proposed to insert a comma, and the words:

Except that no loan shall be made under this section to any person for use in the construction or equipment of a vessel to be operated primarily for the transportation of the property of the borrower or of any person affiliated with him within the meaning of subdivision (c) of section 409 of the merchant marine act, 1928.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is a very great improvement over the proposal now contained in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I observe on page 72 of the bill, in section 711, the following provision:

SEC. 711. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application thereof to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

As I understand, it is intended to provide that the courts may set aside any part of this act which they think may be unconstitutional. Is that the idea?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is the idea. I had not noticed that particular language. We usually have a provision like that referring to the unconstitutionality of any provision of a proposed act. I really had supposed that it related only to unconstitutionality, but I see that it is broader than that.

Mr. OWEN. It is broader than unconstitutionality; it covers validity.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can hardly conceive, however, of a basis for holding a portion of the act invalid except upon the ground of unconstitutionality.

Mr. OWEN. It might be held invalid on the ground of public policy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would go ultimately to the unconstitutionality of the provision.

Mr. OWEN. It might be against public policy and not be unconstitutional.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not believe the court could hold a provision against public policy unless it based its opinion upon some provision of the Constitution.

Mr. OWEN. I think there have been cases where the court has determined questions of public policy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should have no objection, if the Senator would like to have the provision refer particularly to unconstitutionality, to having such language put in.

Mr. OWEN. I object to Congress itself inviting the courts in this way to declare that acts of Congress may be declared invalid in part or that they may be declared unconstitutional in part. I do not think the Congress ought to yield that right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the Senator offer any amendment that he may desire when we reach that provision.

Mr. OWEN. I will offer an amendment right now. In all events I want to make some remarks upon it, because I regard this as a very objectionable feature of this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As far as offering an amendment is concerned, I should be glad if the Senator would wait until we reach that.

Mr. OWEN. I will offer the amendment at that time, but I wish now to call the attention of the Senate to it.

As the Senator from Washington very properly said, it has been not infrequently the case that Congress has put an amendment or a provision in a bill by which the bill was to be affected only in such part as the Supreme Court should hold unconstitutional. That has been done in a number of instances. In effect, it is an abdication by the Congress of the United States of its right to pass upon, and finally pass upon, the constitutionality of the acts passed by Congress. I do not think Congress has any constitutional right to abdicate its powers. In my judgment, it is a violation of the Constitution of the United States for the Congress of the United States to abdicate its right to determine the constitutionality of its own acts.

The Congress of the United States is composed of Representatives directly chosen from the people of the United States—in the House of Representatives every two years, and one-third of the Senate approximately every two years. They send these Representatives to represent them on the floor of Congress under the powers of the Constitution of the United States, and they have a right to expect of them that they will discharge their full duty under the Constitution.

The Constitution of the United States does not give to any court—district court, circuit court, or Supreme Court—the right to pass upon and declare unconstitutional the acts of the sovereign assembly of this Nation. I know perfectly well that all the law schools—the big law schools and little law schools—have taught the boys, all the boys, who go to law school that the Supreme Court has the right to nullify acts of Congress and set them aside; and it is not unnatural, it is to be expected, that the law schools should teach the boys who study law that this is the law. I deny that it is the law, however, and I deny the right of Congress to abdicate its powers and duties to the people of the United States and permit its laws to be nullified by any court; and I want to present to this RECORD the reasons why I take that position. I say it is in effect an abdication by Congress of its own powers. This power of Congress in this matter has been passed upon on various occasions by the Supreme Court of the United States. I want to call the attention of the Senate to a few of these decisions.

In Wiscart against Dauchey, in 1796, a long time ago, and in Durousseau v. United States (6 Cranch, 307), in 1810, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what the Supreme Court says in regard to the power of Congress. This latter was an opinion delivered by Chief Justice John Marshall.

In discussing the right of the court to pass upon the matter before the court in that case, the judge said:

> The force of this argument is perceived and admitted. Had the judicial act created the Supreme Court without defining or limiting its jurisdiction it must have been considered as possessing all the jurisdiction which the Constitution assigns to it. The legislature would have exercised the power it possessed of creating a Supreme Court as ordained by the Constitution; and, in omitting to exercise the right of excepting from its constitutional powers, would have necessarily left those powers undiminished. The appellate powers of this court are not given by the judicial act. They are given by the Constitution. But they are limited and regulated by the judicial act and by such other acts as have been passed on the subject.
>
> When the first legislature of the Union proceeded to carry the third article of the Constitution into effect, they must be understood as intending to execute the power they possessed of making exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. They have not, indeed, made these exceptions in express terms. They have not declared that the appellate power of the court shall not extend to certain cases; but they have described affirmatively its jurisdiction, and this affirmative description has been understood to imply a negative on the exercise of such appellate power as is not comprehended within it.

In other words, John Marshall declared that the Congress of the United States even by giving affirmatively certain appellate powers to the Supreme Court must be construed as withholding those powers not expressly granted by the judiciary act, and Senators and Members of Congress apparently forget what the powers of the Congress of the United States really amount to.

It will be recalled by every Senator that the Constitution provides that Congress may make such exceptions and impose such regulations as to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as it sees fit. I wish to read the language of that section of the Constitution.

Article III, section 1, declaring the judicial power of the United States, says:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.
>
> SEC. 2. The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

And then it says:

> In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress may make.

When Congress voluntarily puts in an act a provision such as section 711 of this bill, practically inviting the court to pass upon the validity of any part of this measure, it is failing to make the exception which the public policy of this Republic requires.

I am not willing to see the Senate of the United States abdicate its constitutional powers. Section 711 should provide——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I am perfectly willing to have the whole section stricken out.

Mr. OWEN. I wish now to discuss this matter. It is in the bill. It has been in bills here repeatedly, and I am no longer willing to have this kind of legislation passed without protest so long as I am a Member of this body.

Congress has no right to abdicate its duty to pass finally upon the constitutionality of the acts passed by the Congress itself. There should be put into this statute a provision that no appeal shall be permitted in any case in which the constitutionality of this act or of any other act of Congress is challenged, the passage by Congress of any act being deemed conclusive presumption of the constitutionality of such act. Any Federal judge who declares any act passed by the Congress of the United States to be unconstitutional should be declared to be guilty of violating the constitutional requirement of "good behavior," upon which his tenure of office rests, and he should be held by such decision ipso facto to have yielded his office, and the President of the United States should be authorized to nominate a successor to fill the position vacated by such judicial officer.

I pointed out the case just called to the attention of the Senate, and there are a number of others of like purport and effect: The case of United States v. Gorden (7 Cranch 287); of Daniels v. The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad (3 Wallace 250); in re McCardle (7 Wallace 510); National Exchange Bank v. Peters (144 U. S. 570); of Col. C. C. M. v. Turck (150 U. S. 138).

The abstract in the McCardle case is as follows:

> 1. The appellate jurisdiction of this court is conferred by the Constitution, and not derived from acts of Congress; but is conferred "with such exceptions, and under such regulations, as Congress may make"; and, therefore, acts of Congress affirming such jurisdiction have always been construed as excepting from it all cases not expressly described and provided for.
>
> 2. When, therefore, Congress enacts that this court shall have appellate jurisdiction over final decisions of the circuit courts in certain cases the act operates as a negation or exception of such jurisdiction in other cases, and the repeal of the act necessarily negatives jurisdiction under it of these cases also.
>
> 3. The repeal of such an act, pending an appeal provided for by it, is not an exercise of judicial power by the legislature, no matter whether the repeal takes effect before or after argument of the appeal.
>
> 4. The act of 27th of March, 1868, repealing that provision of the act of 5th of February, 1867, to amend the judicial act of 1789, which authorized appeals to this court from the decisions of circuit courts in cases of habeas corpus, does not except from the appellate jurisdiction of this court any cases but appeals under the act of 1867. It does not affect the appellate jurisdiction which was previously exercised in cases of habeas corpus.

Mr. President, there are so many lawyers, there are so many men who have been trained as lawyers, so many men who have gotten their degrees from law schools, who regard it as an act of lese majeste to question the right of the Supreme Court of the United States to declare unconstitutional and void any act of Congress they may see fit, that I think it is worth while to emphasize to the Senate the decision of the Supreme Court itself as to the powers of Congress over the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, because it must always be remembered that the Supreme Court's jurisdiction in so far as ambassadors and public ministers are concerned is almost negligible in number and is entirely negligible in importance, because none of the great questions which have shaken this Republic to its foundation, passed upon by the Supreme Court, lie within the rule of that original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under the Constitution.

The Chief Justice, delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Ex parte McCardle, said:

> The first question necessarily is that of jurisdiction, for if the act of March, 1868, takes away the jurisdiction defined by the act of February, 1867, it is useless, if not improper, to enter into any discussion of other questions. It is quite true, as was argued by the counsel for the petitioner, that the appellate jurisdiction of this country is not derived from acts of Congress. It is, strictly speaking, conferred by the Constitution, but it is conferred with such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress shall make.

That "but" and that phrase put into the Constitution of the United States, "with such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress shall make," makes it incumbent upon the Congress of the United States, makes it the duty of the Senate of the United States, not only not to pass such legislation as is found in this bill, page 73, section 711, but if anything is put in, to put in the contrary expression, that this act shall not be declared invalid, in whole or in part, by the judiciary. The judiciary is not the law making power of this Republic. Their function is to interpret the laws which have been passed by the Congress of the United States, and interpret the laws in accordance with the meaning of the Congress of the United States, and before I shall conclude I am going to call the attention of the Senate to some of the most disastrous decisions made by the Supreme Court in the past, and the effect upon this Republic.

The Chief Justice, continuing, said:

> It is necessary to consider whether, if Congress had made no exceptions and no regulations, this court might not have exercised general appellate jurisdiction under rules prescribed by itself. For among the earliest acts of the First Congress, at its first session, was the act of September 24, 1789, to establish the judicial courts of the United States. That act provided for the organization of this court and prescribed regulations for the exercise of its jurisdiction.
>
> The source of that jurisdiction and the limitations of it by the Constitution and by statute have been on several occasions subjects of consideration here. In the case of Durosseau against The United States, particularly, the whole matter was carefully examined, and the court held that while "the appellate powers of this court are not given by the judicial act but are given by the Constitution," they are nevertheless "limited and regulated by that act and by such other acts as have been passed on the subject." The court said, further, that the judicial act was an exercise of the power given by the Constitution to Congress "of making exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court." "They have described affirmatively," said the court, "its jurisdiction, and this affirmative description has been understood to imply a negation of the exercise of such appellate power as is not comprehended within it."

The Supreme Court has been tender in the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by the Congress of the United States. I have the greatest respect for that court, and nothing I shall say or that I have said can ever be regarded as showing any want of the highest regard and respect for that honorable body. There is no court in the world, I think, with a finer record than that court. That does not alter a particle what I am saying with regard to the duty of Congress to assume and to exercise the constitutional powers of Congress and not to abdicate those powers. Congress has in a way abdicated them. Over and over again they have abdicated them, and over and over again they have passed bills with just this kind of vicious provisions in them. Of course with Congress maintaining that attitude the Supreme Court is going to continue to exercise this jurisdiction. They would not think of doing so if the Congress of the United States would by proper means indicate to them the dissent of Congress to their exercising any such appellate jurisdiction.

The Chief Justice, continuing in the case of McArdle, said:

The principle that the affirmative appellate jurisdiction implies a negation of all such jurisdiction being affirmed, having been thus established, it was an almost necessary consequence that acts of Congress providing for the exercise of jurisdiction should come to be spoken of as acts granting jurisdiction.

I emphasize that language, "spoken of as acts granting jurisdiction, and not as acts making exceptions to the constitutional grant of it."

The Chief Justice, continuing, said:

The principle that the affirmation of appellate jurisdiction implies the negation of all such jurisdiction not affirmed having been thus established, it was an almost necessary consequence that acts of Congress, providing for the exercise of jurisdiction, should come to be spoken of as acts granting jurisdiction, and not as acts making exceptions to the constitutional grant of it.

The exception to appellate jurisdiction in the case before us, however, is not an inference from the affirmation of other appellate jurisdiction. It is made in terms. The provision of the act of 1867, affirming the appellate jurisdiction of this court in cases of habeas corpus is expressly repealed. It is hardly possible to imagine a plainer instance of positive exception.

We are not at liberty to inquire into the motives of the legislature. We can only examine into its power under the Constitution; and the power to make exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction of this court is given by express words.

What, then, is the effect of the repealing act upon the case before us? We can not doubt as to this. Without jurisdiction the court can not proceed at all in any cause. Jurisdiction is power to declare the law, and when it ceases to exist, the only function remaining to the court is that of announcing the fact and dismissing the cause. And this is not less clear upon authority than upon principle.

Several cases were cited by the counsel for the petitioner in support of the position that jurisdiction of this case is not affected by the repealing act. But none of them, in our judgment, afford any support to it. They are all cases of the exercise of judicial power by the legislature, or of legislative interference with courts in the exercising of continuing jurisdiction.

On the other hand, the general rule, supported by the best elementary writers, is, that "when an act of the legislature is repealed, it must be considered, except as to transactions past and closed, as if it never existed." And the effect of repealing acts upon suits under acts repealed, has been determined by the adjudications of this court. The subject was fully considered in Norris v. Crocker, and more recently in Insurance Co. v. Ritchie. In both of these cases it was held that no judgment could be rendered in a suit after the repeal of the act under which it was brought and prosecuted.

It is quite clear, therefore, that this court can not proceed to pronounce judgment in this case, for it has no longer jurisdiction of the appeal; and judicial duty is not less fitly performed by declining ungranted jurisdiction than in exercising firmly that which the Constitution and the laws confer.

Counsel seem to have supposed, if effect be given to the repealing act in question, that the whole appellate power of the court, in cases of habeas corpus, is denied. But this is an error. The act of 1868 does not except from that jurisdiction any cases but appeals from circuit courts under the act of 1867. It does not affect the jurisdiction which was previously exercised.

Now, in this case the Congress of the United States by an act withdrew from the Supreme Court of the United States the right to pass upon this particular line of habeas corpus cases. The Supreme Court very properly held that Congress has the right to make exceptions and to make regulations with regard to cases pending in the Supreme Court.

As I said, the law schools have been teaching thousands of boys to be lawyers, and have been teaching them that the Constitution established three coordinate, coequal branches of the Government. This is a fundamental error because there were established three coordinate, but not coequal, branches of the Government.

It is extremely important to realize the huge powers and duties of the Congress.

The sovereign law-making power of the people, so far as they have delegated such power, is vested expressly in Congress, using these the words of the Constitution:

to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

Congress by statute established a Supreme Court and the executive departments, and fixed their powers in accordance with the Constitution and in accordance with the power vested in Congress as the law-making power. Congress fixed the number of judges of the Supreme Court. It can add to that number now, or it can diminish the number by an act of Congress. Why, Mr. President, the Congress of the United States, if it desired, could double the number of judges in that court. It could increase the number of judges on that court from the present number to 20 or to 25 or to 48 or to 148. It could add to the number just as it sees fit, and could diminish the number just as it sees fit. To say that the Supreme Court has coequal power with the Congress of the United States is obviously preposterous.

It will be remembered in the legal tender case, when the legal tender act was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, that President Grant put on two additional members of the court who thought that the legal tender act was constitutional and reversed the Supreme Court by that process.

The Supreme Court is not a coequal body with Congress and should not be so regarded. It has the highest dignity, the highest honor, and highest respect as a court, but no power to be compared with the powers of the Congress of the United States. Congress, of course, fixes the compensation of the judges of the Supreme Court, could increase the compensation, could diminish it, could make it very large, could make it very small. It has power over the living of the judges who serve in that capacity. I am speaking of power and only of power. I am challenging the claim that the Supreme Court is coequal with Congress.

Congress, through the Senate, confirms the justice of the Supreme Court before he can take his seat. It in this way creates him a justice. Congress can impeach the Supreme Court and remove the court from office. That court could not very well remove Congress from office.

I am speaking of power, relative power, the power given under the Constitution to the Congress of the United States as compared with the power given to the Supreme Court by the Constitution. The only power they were given under the Constitution was to have appellate power with such exceptions as Congress saw fit to make under such regulations as Congress saw fit to make, and the negligible original jurisdiction in cases where a State was involved or where ambassadors or foreign ministers were involved. I think there have only been about 25 such cases since the foundation of the Government. Congress under the Constitution was expressly charged with fixing the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and the statutory jurisdiction is all the jurisdiction the court has worth mentioning. Take all their dockets and we would find not one case of original jurisdiction while we would find 500 cases under the appellate jurisdiction given by Congress, given by the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives.

Congress has the duty imposed upon it under the Constitution to fix that appellate jurisdiction and make such exceptions and such regulations as Congress sees fit to make, and one of the exceptions which I insist shall be made is that the Supreme Court shall not nullify any part of any act passed by the Congress of the United States, and shall not declare any act unconstitutional and shall not assume to declare national policies. It is said that the Congress may make mistakes and therefore the mistakes should be rectified by the court. Yes; that is a possible suggestion. It might make mistakes. It is less apt to make mistakes than a smaller number of conscientious God-fearing men discharging their duty to the Republic.

In the only important differences that have ever arisen between the Congress of the United States and the Supreme Court, so far as I can recall at this moment, the Supreme Court was positively wrong and adopted a policy highly mischievous to the Republic, as in the case of the Dred Scott decision, which led immediately to the bloody Civil War of 1861–65; as in the legal tender case; as in the income tax case. I am talking of the power of Congress under the Constitution as contained in the Constitution, without modifying its meaning, without putting a strained interpretation upon it. I am talking of power alone. I shall talk presently of the duty of exercising that power and give reasons why I think the time has come to exercise it.

The Constitution, Article I, section 1, declares the full powers vested in Congress. I wish Senators would listen to these powers of Congress:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

It gave the House of Representatives and the Senate power to impeach any officer of the United States, including judges.

It gave the Senate power to sit as a high court of impeachment over judges and all other Federal officials.

It gave the Senate the right to advise with the President of the United States and confirm the appointment of all officers of the United States, including judges.

It gave each House authority to determine its own membership and its own proceedings.

It exempted the Members of the Senate and the House from arrest by judges, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace.

It provided that they should not be questioned in any place about any speech or debate in either House, not even by judges.

The Constitution gave Congress the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay debts and pay for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

To borrow money, and Congress has borrowed billions under this authority and power given by the Constitution of the United States.

To regulate commerce, and it has regulated commerce to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars and it is regulating commerce now on a gigantic scale.

To establish a uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies.

To coin money, to regulate the value thereof and of foreign coins, and to fix the standard of weights and measures.

To punish counterfeiters; to establish post offices and post roads, and under that one single line the United States is expending approximately $400,000,000 a year right now.

To grant patents and copyrights. Over a million of such patents have been issued.

To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court.

To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations.

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and to make rules concerning captures on land and water.

To raise and support armies. And under that one line of the Constitution the Congress of the United States on June 5, 1917, called to the colors 10,000,000 men.

I am talking about power as between the so-called coequal branches of this Government. The Supreme Court has no power but what Congress gives it in the appellate jurisdiction, affirmatively gives it under its own decisions which I have just read to the Senate. I am reading now the powers of Congress, which are gigantic and unlimited.

To provide and maintain a Navy.

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasions.

To provide for organizing and disciplining the militia and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States.

To exercise authority over all places purchased by Congress, carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof, including the judicial department.

The Constitution expressly provides that Congress shall not do certain things. For instance:

It forbade interference with the slave trade up to 1808.

It forbade the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus except where the public safety required it.

It forbade a bill of attainder or ex post facto law.

It forbade a capitation or other direct tax on the States unless in proportion to the census.

It forbade an export duty.

It forbade a preference to be given to the port of one State over another.

It forbade expenditure of money except by lawful appropriations.

It forbade titles of nobility.

And the people refused to ratify that Constitution until the Bill of Rights in the 10 amendments was agreed to be added to that Constitution and made a part of it. In that Bill of Rights were reserved the various rights of the people which Congress was charged with the duty of defending.

The first of those rights was freedom of religion. The gentlemen who first wrote the Constitution forgot to put that in, and it was added as an after matter.

Free speech and a free press. The gentlemen who wrote the Constitution forgot to put those provisions in. Thomas Jefferson and other men of his opinions demanded that they go in.

Free right of assembly.

Free right of petition for redress of grievances. The gentlemen who wrote that Constitution forgot to put those things in.

The right of the States to have troops.

The right of the people to keep and bear arms.

The right of the people to be free from the quartering of soldiers upon them.

Freedom from unlawful searches and seizures.

Freedom from arrest for crime except on indictment.

The right of life, liberty, and property not to be interfered with except by due process of law.

The right against taking private property for public use without just compensation.

The right to speedy public trial by an impartial jury.

The gentlemen who wrote the Constitution forgot to put all those things in, but when they went home and heard from the people it became evident that it was necessary to put these provisions in the Constitution, and afterwards all of these provisions were written into the bills of rights of the several 48 States. All of the States which succeeded the blending together of the first 13 States put in their bills of rights these great fundamental provisions of human rights. Those already recited and—

The right to be informed of the nature of the accusation against a citizen.

The right to be confronted with witnesses against a citizen.

The right of compulsory process for obtaining witnesses.

The right to have counsel in the defense of the rights of a citizen.

The right to a trial by jury.

The right against excessive bail, excessive fines, or cruel or unusual punishment.

These were the rights which were omitted and which, as I have said, were subsequently written into the Constitution in the first 10 amendments, and afterwards written into the bills of rights of the 48 States.

Those who opposed the idea of having the Congress of the United States declare finally the constitutionality of an act always go back and quote Alexander Hamilton and Gerry and men of that class who were among those who were active in writing the original Constitution without the 10 amendments; they were reactionaries; but, Mr. President, progressive Democrats, progressive Republicans, and progressive men everywhere throughout the world believe that the people ought to have the right to rule in their own country and that they ought not to be governed without their consent. The people took very good pains in the Constitution to require the entire House of Representatives and one-third of the Senate every two years to come before them and give an account of their stewardship and receive the approval of the people before they continue the duty of making laws for the people. Not only that, but the people kept in their own hands the sovereignty which was declared vested in them by the Bill of Rights in every one of the 48 States of the Union.

On the 31st of July, 1911, I put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an extract from the constitutions of each of the 48 States on this very point, because at that time when the Standard Oil decision was rendered I made a demand for the control of the Federal judiciary and put in the RECORD then the power which the people of this country still retained over the State judiciary. The people kept control of Congress, and when Congress passes a law in pursuance of the Constitution the Congress itself declares that law to be the supreme law of the land and does not say that the law may be declared void by the judges. Unhappily, Congress not having in express terms forbidden this unwise practice, Congress may be fairly held to have acquiesced in it, and when it put in a law such a provision as section 711, on page 72 of the pending measure, which is a bill to amend and supplement the merchant marine act of 1920, Congress is again doing the very thing which I have for so long regarded as a bad—an unendurable—practice, and one which ought no longer to be supported.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States requires every Senator and every Representative in Congress to take a solemn oath to support faithfully and truly the Constitution of the United States. When on their oaths Members of the House of Representatives and of the United States Senate, with the approval of the President of the United States, pass an act, a conclusive presumption arises that the act is constitutional, and this presumption can only be overthrown by the disapproval of the people of the United States, who will return a new Congress to correct any unconstitutional or impolitic act of an expiring Congress.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the supremacy of the legislative powers of the legislative assemblies of other nations. No civilized nation permits the judges on the bench to declare unconstitutional or void the acts of their parliaments. Great Britain, on February 6, 1700, declared that judges should hold their offices "while they behaved themselves well," subject alone to removal by resolution of Parliament. This control of the judges sufficed. That is what I proposed in 1911 for the United States. I thought the time had then come for that rule in the United States.

France does not permit the laws of her Parliament to be set aside by the French judges. No French judge would dare to declare an act of the French Parliament void or invalid in part, as this bill proposes to permit.

Italy in her written constitutional law provides that the judges shall not set aside an act of Parliament.

Austria does not permit judges to set aside an act of the Austrian Parliament.

Germany does not allow the judges of Germany to set aside an act of the Reichstag.

Belgium does not permit her judges to set aside the law of Belgium.

Denmark does not permit her judges to set aside the laws of the legislature of Denmark.

Australia does not permit it; New Zealand does not permit it.

I speak of these things because the civilized world which has considered government by the people has all agreed upon this doctrine, and there must be sound reason for this unanimous opinion of mankind. It is not an accident; it is written out of the blood and tears of centuries.

Why, Mr. President, the English nation over 200 years ago decided that no longer should judges set aside the laws of Parliament.

It is true that in the Constitutional Convention in 1788 several lawyers of distinction and privilege contended that the contemplated Supreme Court of the United States should have the right to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. Daniel Webster, Oliver Ellsworth, John Marshall, and Alexander Hamilton made the argument, and they made it on behalf of the great property holders of their States, with a view to getting their support for the Constitution, because the Constitution needed friends at that time; but John Marshall, who spoke equally well on either side of the case, defended the Constitution against the charge of Patrick Henry that it would establish a judicial despotism by the following: I should like you to listen to John Marshall, because he is the patron saint of all the gentlemen who differ with me on this question.

Here is what John Marshall said:

> Congress is empowered to make exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction as to law and fact of the Supreme Court. These exceptions certainly go as far as the legislature may think proper for the interest and liberty of the people. (Elliott's Debates, vol. 3, p. 560.)

This was said in the Constitutional Convention that framed the Constitution of the United States, and will be found in Elliott's Debates, volume 3, page 560.

The plain truth is, the people of the American Colonies who lived under the English practice recognized as a fixed principle of government that the judiciary is subject to the legislative power of the people. The English law that I referred to a moment ago was to that effect, and that law was the law of the Colonies, which they perfectly well understood. It is true that Rhode Island did about this time pass an act which its supreme court declared unconstitutional. It is also true that the legislature put the court out of office for that reason.

It is true that two or three other States had a similar experience, and the court was rebuked by the people for its conduct in this matter; but in more recent years the bad practice of the Congress of the United States has led to an extension of this practice, more or less, in some of the States. The Legislature of New Hampshire removed its supreme court four times on the ground of policy.

On July 31, 1911, in Congress, and before the Bar Association of Oklahoma on the 23d day of December, 1911, I explained the extraordinary pains the people of the United States have taken to prevent the usurpation of their power by the judges.

Mr. President, 48 States have two ways of removing judges by impeachment, and either by a short tenure of office or by resolution of the legislature. Thirty-two States have three ways of removing judges. Thirty-two States may remove judges by resolution of the State legislature. Seven States have four ways of removing judges, viz, impeachment, legislative recall, short tenure of office, and popular recall.

They started the popular recall in Oregon, first, because of the gross aggression of the railroad interests and other private interests of the State, which had corrupted practically their whole government in the interest of property against the people. The recall was applied to all officials; no exception was made as to judges. The judges of that State now would compare favorably with those of any other State. They did the same thing in California recently for the same reason, when the present senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was making his campaign for governor and winning overwhelmingly, when the chief issue was the recall of judges and on the slogan that "the Southern Pacific has got to go out of the governing business in California."

Forty-five States recall judges by a short tenure of office, and all the States—the 48 States—have the right of impeachment. No one ever hears any complaint of our State judiciary for the very reason the judiciary is in sympathy with the people and serves them acceptably.

The people are overwhelmingly opposed to the usurpation of legislative power by the Federal judiciary appointed for life.

Nobody knew better than John Marshall himself that the Supreme Court had no right to declare an act of Congress void under the Constitution, for in the case of Ware against Hilton John Marshall stated—and I ask you to listen to the patron saint of the opposition, Mr. Marshall. He said:

> The legislative authority of any country can only be restrained by its own municipal constitution; this is a principle that springs from the very nature of society, and the judicial authority can have no right to question the validity of a law unless such jurisdiction is expressly given by the constitution.

The word "municipal," of course, is used in this text in the broadest sense.

This is John Marshall. And nobody pretends that there is any express provision in the Constitution of the United States conferring any such authority.

The highest authority on English and American law has been Sir William Blackstone. He is the one that all law clerks, law schools, and law students swear by. Listen to Sir William. He says:

> When the main object of a statute is unreasonable the judges are not at liberty to reject it, for that were to set the judicial power above that of the legislature, which would be subversive of all government. (Blackstone's Commentaries, p. 85, sec. 3.)

Thomas Jefferson had a view full of apprehension after John Marshall came on the bench.

The Congress did not rebuke Marshall for the Marbury against Madison case, and Thomas Jefferson did not see the way clearly how to protect the country against that aggression, but this is what he said:

> It has been my opinion that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the constitution of the Federal judiciary, an irrepressible body working like gravity by day and by night, gaining a little to-day and a little to-morrow and advancing with a noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction, until all shall be usurped. (Federal Law Journal, vol. 66, p. 293.)

Evidently Jefferson did not observe the power of Congress to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the court. If he had, he would not have been afraid at all of the court. The country is in no danger from the Supreme Court or from any other court. The Constitution of the United States is all right. It was written all right. It only needs to be interpreted properly; it only needs to be exemplified and made to accomplish the ends for which it was intended.

Mr. President, Andrew Jackson is another authority to whom I want to call your attention. He said of John Marshall and one of his famous decisions:

> John Marshall has rendered his decision. Now let us see him enforce it.

That is what Jackson said, but I want to quote you the language of Jackson in the case of the Bank of United States. Jackson said this:

> It is maintained by the advocates of the bank that its unconstitutionality, in all its features, ought to be considered as settled by precedent and by the decision of the Supreme Court. To this conclusion I can not assent. * * * If the opinion of the Supreme Court covered the whole ground of this act, it ought not to control the coordinate authorities of this Government. The Congress, the Executive, and the court must each for itself be guided by its own opinions of the Constitution. Each public officer who takes an oath to support the Constitution swears that he will support it as he understands it and not as it is understood by others. It is as much the duty of the House of Representatives, of the Senate, and of the President to decide upon the constitutionality of any bills or resolutions which may be presented to them for passage or approval as it is of the Supreme Court, when it may be brought before them for judicial decision. The opinion of the judges has no more authority over Congress than the opinion of Congress has over the judges; and on that point the President is independent of both. The authority of the Supreme Court must not, therefore, be permitted to control the Congress or the Executive when acting in their legislative capacities, but to have only such influence as the force of their reasoning deserve. (Senate Journal, July, 1832, p. 451.)

President Jackson overlooked the fact that Congress has the power to impeach the President and the Supreme Court, and that Congress therefore exercised the sovereign lawmaking power of the people, but he states correctly that "the Supreme Court must not be permitted to control the Congress."

President Jackson overlooked the power of Congress to control the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, which would make it impossible for the Supreme Court to put itself in mischievous conflict with the sovereign lawmaking power of the Nation.

Abraham Lincoln resisted the Dred Scott decision and said that he would not oppose the decision as far as it related to the slave individually, and then he said these memorable words:

> But we, nevertheless, do oppose that decision as a political rule which shall be binding on the voter to vote for nobody who thinks it wrong; which shall be binding on the Members of Congress or the President to favor no measure that does not actually concur with the principles of that decision. * * * We propose so resisting it as to have it reversed, if we can, and a new judicial rule established upon this subject. (Works of Jefferson, vol. 12, p. 163.)

Well, he had some trouble in reversing it. It took the bloodiest war in our history to reverse it, and four years of fratricidal strife, and billions of treasure; with grief, sorrow, heartburning, and bitter hatred that lasted for generations.

It is hard to reverse the decisions of the Supreme Court by that kind of a method, but it was reversed by war. They declared in the Dred Scott decision that slavery was a constitutional right; that Congress had no right to change that constitutional right; that Congress had no right to pass the Missouri compromise law; that Congress violated the Constitution of the United States when it passed the Missouri compromise law on slavery.

The decision inflamed the North and led to the withdrawal of the Southern States and to war.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the Constitutional Convention of 1788 and what was said and done there in regard to the right of the Supreme Court of the United States to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional either before or after the passage of such acts.

In the Constitutional Convention which framed this United States Constitution, Edmund Randolph, on June 4, 1787, proposed the following resolution:

> Resolved, That the Executive and a convenient number of the national judiciary ought to compose a council of revision, with authority to examine every act of the National Legislature before it shall operate * * * and that the dissent of said council shall amount to a rejection unless the act of the National Legislature be again passed. (Elliott's Debates, vol. 1, pp. 159, 164, 214.)

They did not propose to finally veto an act of Congress and never let it go into effect. They only proposed that the judiciary, with the Executive, should have a temporary veto, and if Congress insisted upon passing a measure, to let it be the law, but even that moderate proposition was three times defeated and never received the vote of over 3 States out of the 13.

A like proposition was also rejected August 5, 1787. (Elliott's Debates, vol. 1, p. 243.)

Only 11 members of the Constitutional Convention out of 65 favored giving the judiciary any control. These were Blair, Gerry, Hamilton, King, Mason, Morris, Williamson, Wilson, Baldwin, Brearly, and Livingston.

Hamilton, Morris, Gerry, and several others of this group were known to be strongly opposed to democracy.

George Washington, Charles Pinkney, James Madison, and many others, 22 in number, are known to have expressly opposed any judicial veto. There were 65 members and only 11 on record as favoring any form of judicial interference with the legislative powers. (This is fully set up in Davis on Judicial Veto, p. 49.)

The Constitution, however, speaks for itself; it puts the sovereign power in Congress, the power to control the appellate jurisdiction, and thus to prevent the exercise of the judicial veto, if it is attempted.

The judicial veto has been attempted.

It has been exercised. It has been exercised with the acquiescence of Congress, an acquiescence which Congress has no right to make. The judicial veto has proven to be highly mischievous in our history, and it has become unendurable.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the first case in which the Supreme Court undertook to set up the right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. It was the case of Marbury v. Madison, when John Marshall was Chief Justice of the United States.

John Marshall was a federalist, an aristocrat, a reactionary, a man of considerable ability, with a consuming desire for power, great tenacity of purpose, and a great hatred for Thomas Jefferson and his doctrines.

John Adams, the federalist, took advantage of the election of Jefferson, the democratic republican, to put John Marshall, the federalist, on the bench as Chief Justice for life, as one of his last acts before he turned over the Government to Thomas Jefferson. Keep that in mind, because it meant trouble, and here comes the first trouble. In Marbury v. Madison John Marshall violated the first principles of government of the English-speaking people in assuming the right to declare void the will of the National Legislature.

Congress, under Article III, section 1, in distributing the judicial powers of the United States, when it established the Supreme Court by the judiciary act of 1789, gave the Supreme Court, wisely and justly and lawfully, in addition to its "original" jurisdiction, the right to issue a writ of mandamus as a part of the judicial powers of the United States. A little citizen having a case against a great Cabinet officer could hardly expect to get his relief from a small subordinate officer of the judiciary department. When he makes a demand on the Secretary of State for his right, as Marbury did, he ought to have the backing of the very highest judicial authority, one that can speak to the Secretary of State on terms of some comparative equality.

John Marshall struck down that right on the claim that Congress had no right to add to the "original" jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Congress did not add anything to the "original" jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The Constitution placed the judicial powers of the United States in the Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress should establish, and Congress, in pursuance of that authority, gave the right of issuing the writ of mandamus to the Supreme Court, as it had a plain constitutional right to do.

A citizen named Marbury, in the District of Columbia, had been appointed notary public by the retiring administration; his commission had been made out; it had been signed by the President, by the Secretary of State, had the seal on it, and was lying on the table of the Secretary of State for delivery. The incoming Secretary of State refused to deliver it, and Marbury went to John Marshall, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and asked to have a writ of mandamus issued on the Secretary of State to deliver that commission. John Marshall said "no"; that Congress had no right to authorize the Supreme Court to issue writs of mandamus; that that was unconstitutional on the part of Congress. And when he refused that jurisdiction of a writ of mandamus he seized the power to declare an act of Congress void, and, therefore, attempted to make himself the judicial ruler of the United States by exercising a judicial veto over Congress.

The Congress of the United States ought then and there to have impeached John Marshall. He was guilty of a violation of the true meaning of the Constitution; he himself in that act, as a judicial officer, violated the spirit and purpose and meaning of the Constitution, and he assumed the sovereign power over the legislative agents of the people of the United States. He held office for life, and there was no way for the people to get at him except by impeachment. A great many men who would think he was wrong in his opinions, who would think that he had done very wrong, would hesitate long before they would use that drastic power, which exercised over a Supreme Court judge blasts his name for all history. The remedy would appear too drastic for the offense, because, after all, the Congress can prevent the recurrence of that kind of thing simply by using the power given to it by the Constitution of the United States.

Jefferson did not hesitate to denounce Marshall as a thief of jurisdiction, and Marshall never repeated that offense.

It was 53 years before it was repeated, in 1856, and then, in the Dred Scott case, it caused the enormous catastrophe of the great Civil War between the Northern and the Southern States.

The next mischievous step taken by John Marshall of national importance was in Fletcher v. Peck, where an act of the Georgia Legislature correcting a previous fraud was declared "unconstitutional." In this case the Legislature of Georgia had been deliberately corrupted with money by four land companies and induced to pass an act conveying, without adequate compensation, an enormous grant of land, some 40,000,000 acres, belonging to the people of Georgia. The people of Georgia were enraged over it. They came together, turned out the legislature; they elected a new legislature; the new legislature immediately repealed the act. It came up before John Marshall's court, and after solemnly considering it he decided that a State did not have the right to pass an act "impairing the obligation of a contract." The most mischievous consequences followed. It was only necessary thereafter to corrupt a legislature and get the grant made—that settled it forever.

Since that time many courts have announced a wiser principle: That fraud vitiates a contract; that it is no contract when it is obtained corruptly.

A far more dangerous opinion followed this Fletcher v. Peck case. It was the Dartmouth case—a case that did not seem to be of any importance at all. The Legislature of New Hampshire passed an act increasing the number of trustees of Dartmouth College. The old trustees were Federalists, the new trustees anti-Federalists. Marshall and Washington were Federalists; they opposed the act of the legislature. Duval and Todd supported the legislature. Marshall succeeded in preventing a decision at that term, and by a political campaign the other three judges—Johnson, Livingstone, and Storey—were persuaded to agree with Marshall. (Life of Webster, by LODGE, p. 1–88.)

Listen to these words. Mr. LODGE says:

> The whole business was managed like a quiet, decorous, political campaign.

Chancellor Kent says the decision in that case did more than any other single act proceeding from the authority of the United States to throw an impregnable barrier around all rights and franchises derived from the grant of government. (Kent's Commentaries, p. 419.)

Fifty years later Mr. Chief Justice Cole, of the Iowa Supreme Court, said:

> The practical effect of the Dartmouth College decision is to exalt the rights of the few above those of the many. And it is doubtless true that under the authority of that decision more monopolies have been created and perpetuated and more wrongs and outrages upon the people effected than by any other single instrumentality of the Government. (Dubuque v. Ry. Co., 39 Iowa, 95.)

Judge Cooley, the great constitutional lawyer, said of this case:

> It is under the protection of the decision of the Dartmouth College case that the most enormous and threatening powers in our country have been created. Some of the great and wealthy corporations actually having greater influence in the country at large, and upon the legislation of the country, than the States to which they owe their corporate existence. Every privilege granted, or right conferred—no matter by what means or on what pretense—being made inviolable by the Constitution, the Government is frequently found stripped of its authority in very important particulars by unwise, careless, and corrupt legislation; and a clause of the Federal Constitution whose purpose was to preclude the repudiation of debts and just contracts, protects and perpetuates the evil. To guard against such calamities in the future, it is customary now for the people in forming their constitutions, to forbid the granting of corporate powers except subject to amendment and repeal, but the improvident grants of an early day are beyond their reach. (Cooley on Con. Lim. 279.)

When the Supreme Court declared the Missouri compromise, passed by Congress, unconstitutional and slavery a constitutional right it took a frightful war to settle the error of this judicial usurpation.

When the Supreme Court declared the legal tender act void they took from the Government, or they would have taken from the Government if the case had been permitted to stand, one of the strongest instrumentalities for the protection of the great Republic in the time of war.

This gross error was corrected by reversing it. General Grant did that by appointing two new judges in favor of the legal tender act, whose votes corrected the error of the Supreme Court by reversing the previous decision. It was an undignified remedy but better than none. Congress has this right now, but the American people do not and will not approve any such practice. The judges on the Federal bench ought to represent the matured judgment and will of the American people.

INCOME TAX CASE.

When the Supreme Court declared the income tax void and transferred the taxes from the wealth of the country, which is protected by the expenditure of such taxes, it disregarded the will of the people of the United States and of Congress, vetoed the action of the House of Representatives, of the United States Senate, and of the President, reversed the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States for a hundred years, and it took the people 16 years to correct it by a constitutional amendment, at a cost to the consuming masses of over $1,600,000,000.

Mr. President, it was not necessary to have the constitutional amendment at all. All in the world that was required was another act withdrawing from the Supreme Court the right to pass upon the constitutionality of that act, and notify judges of the inferior courts that it should not be questioned in their hearing.

When the Supreme Court declared the Sherman antitrust law only intended to prohibit unreasonable restraint of trade, they rendered the act nugatory and void. The effect of this decision was to enthrone monopoly and to raise the cost of living.

The remedy which I have proposed is very simple. The Constitution gives Congress all the power necessary. All that Congress has to do is to pass a suitable resolution. The Constitution gives Congress entire control of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in these words:

> In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to law and fact, with such exception and under such regulation as the Congress shall make.

The power of Congress in this matter was passed on in the case of William H. McCardle, an editor in southern Mississippi, arrested by Major General Ord who was putting into effect the reconstruction act in 1868. McCardle sued out a writ of habeas corpus from the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court refused to exercise appellate jurisdiction and dismissed the case on the ground that Congress had withdrawn appellate jurisdiction in such habeas corpus cases, and that Congress had the constitutional power to do so. It was a unanimous opinion.

I have quoted eight cases of like purport in the RECORD to-day.

The court said in the McCardle case:

> We are not at liberty to inquire into the motives of the legislature. We can only examine into its power under the Constitution, and the power to make exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction of this court is given by express words.
>
> What, then, is the effect of the repealing act upon the case before us? We can not doubt as to this. Without jurisdiction the court can not proceed at all in any cause. Jurisdiction is power to declare the law, and when it ceases to exist the only function remaining to the court is that of announcing the fact and dismissing the cause. And this is not less clear upon authority than upon principle.

It is obvious, therefore, that we have no occasion to discuss the past history of the Supreme Court on the point of whether they have usurped jurisdiction in declaring congressional statutes void. We need not go into the past. We might say that since Congress has permitted the right without protest to pass upon acts of Congress, that it was not unreasonable that the justices should think themselves justified in exercising the power of saying an act of Congress was unconstitutional. I am willing to acquiesce in that for the purpose of the argument but not historically. My proposition deals with the future, not the past.

I have demonstrated without the possibility of a doubt that this power is in Congress, and conceded to be in Congress by a unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I call attention to that very interesting fact, which appears to be entirely forgotten by lawyers in this body.

Mr. President, I respect and honor that great court; I respect the learned and able gentlemen who comprise that court, individually and personally; I believe in their integrity of mind; I believe in their learning; I believe in their high personal honor; but I tell you also that I believe when you have a jury of Irishmen you will get a home-rule decision.

All men are fallible. Even judges are fallible. On the Supreme Court every season cases are decided by the hundreds, as the term goes by, in which constantly there is a minority of judges on one side and a majority of the judges on the other, and every time the majority decides a case against the minority there is a judicial ascertainment by the Supreme Court of the United States as to the fallibility of each one of the members on the minority, and there is not a week that some of those judges are not in the minority, so that we have every week through the term the judicial ascertainment by the majority of the Supreme Court of the United States of the judicial fallibility of every one of its own members. There is nothing surprising in that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Is not that also true in the work of the Congress, where there is a majority and a minority?

Mr. OWEN. It is magnificently demonstrated all the time by the Congress. I am merely calling attention to the fact that they are human beings in either case, whether in the Senate or in the House or on the bench, and when they go from the Senate to the bench or from the House to the bench, as they do all the time, they do not cease to exemplify that principle. I am only talking about a supposed infallibility of the court. I am only demonstrating that they are not infallible and ought not to be held up as infallible.

Just look at the income-tax case, and look at the dogma of the Supreme Court on the question of deciding an act unconstitutional only when the unconstitutionality is overwhelmingly established, and only when there is no doubt about the unconstitutionality of the act.

That is the dogma. The Senator from Ohio as a lawyer knows that is a dogma of the Supreme Court, and yet the professional dogma of the court is to give all benefits of the doubt in favor of the constitutionality. The trouble about the dogma is they never pay any vital attention to it. It is only a theoretical dogma; it is not real. Here is the Income Tax case.

For a hundred years the Supreme Court had sustained the right of Congress to pass an income-tax law. Here was the income-tax law, passed by the House of Representatives, who said it was constitutional; passed by the Senate, and the Senate said it was constitutional; approved by the Attorney General of the United States and by the President of the United States, and they said it was constitutional; and then Judge Blank reversed himself overnight and joined the other four, which made them five, and then they decided in spite of this dogma that there was no doubt whatever about its unconstitutionality.

That was rather a remarkable instance where Judge Blank, whose name I do not care to put in the RECORD, when he first voted that it was constitutional, judicially ascertained the fallibility of the other four minority members of the court and then, when he changed his mind and joined the four minority members and made them five, he judicially ascertained the fallibility of the four he had just left, and, since he was on both sides, he must have been fallible, and so there was a demonstration and judicial ascertainment of the fallibility of every judge on the court by the acts of Judge Blank.

So that men must not say the Supreme Court is infallible. Notwithstanding that, it is the most honorable court in the world. Notwithstanding that, the court is composed of a membership of men of the greatest learning, the highest character, for whom I have reverence. But I respect the Constitution itself, and I respect the rights of the people of the United States, and the time is coming when the representatives of the people of the United States should not submit to having the power vested in them by the Constitution taken out of their hands, and I will not yield to it so far as I am concerned.

Senators will all remember the famous case of Tilden-Hayes. Here were five of the justices of the Supreme Court; five of the most conspicuous and able Senators of the United States; here were five of the ablest Members of the House of Representatives—seven Democrats, eight Republicans. There were four great contested-election questions with many controverted questions, and every one of the 15 decided every case according to his own previous political predilection, and the country was astonished to find that 8 was a majority of 15. But they did discover it.

That shows what men will do when they are influenced by their environment and by their predilections. The point I want to make is that human beings of the first magnitude are influenced by their training, by their environment, by their social atmosphere, and sometimes by the men with whom they dine.

Now, if you put the sovereign power of declaring void the acts of your legislative representatives in the United States Supreme Court not responsible to you, you may thank yourselves for the result.

The people of the United States have a right to demand of their representatives a protection of the rights of the people against the nullification of the acts of Congress. The people of the United States have a right to know what a law means after it has been passed. After Congress has enacted a statute of many pages the people have difficulty in understanding it as passed. There come out of Congress great volumes of legislation submitted to the people of the country who must understand it, and the people are told that not a single page of any one of these statutes has any element of finality in it. In the case of the Sherman antitrust law the courts waited 25 years before they discovered that Congress meant a "reasonable" restraint of trade.

STANDARD OIL AND AMERICAN TOBACCO CASES.

Look at that great case known as the Standard Oil case. Here was a case where the people of this country after years of struggling finally had their representatives in Congress, in the Senate and in the House, both agree upon the Sherman antitrust law—that was in 1890, 33 years ago—making it a criminal offense to commit an act in restraint of trade, vital if the principle of competition is to survive; vital if the monopolies are not to be permitted to kill off every competitor and have a masterful control over the market and over the price which shall be paid for that which the people produce and for that which the people are compelled to buy; vital if the cost of living is ever to be lowered to a reasonable point. It took the people years to get that law on the statute books. They struggled for that statute for 20 years before they got it. Finally they got it in 1890—33 years ago. Now it is void, practically worthless, because nobody knows what a "reasonable" restraint of trade is.

After taking years to get that law on the statute book, it finally, by the slow, dragging, wearisome process of the court, came before the Supreme Court in the trans-Missouri and joint-traffic cases, and there in three different decisions that court declared that Congress meant what it said and that it was the law, and any act in restraint of trade was criminal.

Then the trusts came to Congress and tried to get a remedy. I want Senators to listen to the report of the Committee on the Judiciary on this very remarkable case. The proposed relief bill was introduced by Senator Warner, of Missouri, January 26, 1908. Here is the report of the Senate committee refusing to write the word "reasonable" into this act. Congress had said it is not reasonable to deny liberty to another man, no matter how small; it is not reasonable for men to meet and act in restraint of trade, restraining some other man from his rights. Listen to what the Senate committee said:

> The antitrust act makes it a criminal offense to violate the law and provides a punishment applied by fine and imprisonment. To inject into the act the question of whether an agreement or combination is reasonable or unreasonable would render the act, as a criminal or penal statute, indefinite and uncertain, and hence to that extent utterly nugatory and void, and would practically amount to a repeal of that part of the act. * * * And while the same technical objections do not apply to civil prosecutions, the injection of the rule of reasonableness or unreasonableness would lead to the greatest variableness and uncertainty in the enforcement of the law. The defense of reasonable restraint would be made in every case, and there would be as many different rules of reasonableness as cases, courts, and juries. * * * To amend the antitrust act as suggested by this bill would be to entirely emasculate it, and for all practical purposes render it nugatory as a remedial statute.

President Taft in a special message to Congress January 7, 1910, condemned the proposal of so amending the law, and said that such an amendment would—> put into the hands of the court a power impossible to exercise on any consistent principle which will insure the uniformity of decision essential to good government. It is to thrust upon the court a burden that they have no precedents to enable them to carry and to give them a power approaching the arbitrary, the abuse of which might involve our whole judicial system in disaster.

The Supreme Court, in the Standard Oil cases and American Tobacco case (1911), thereupon proceeded to emasculate it and render it nugatory by writing an opinion which in effect held that a reasonable restraint of trade was not unlawful after Congress had deliberately and expressly refused to so amend it.

I am going to read just one opinion from Judge Harlan on this case. Justice Harlan was an honored member of that court for 25 years or more—one of its leading lights. Listen to what he says:

> * * * By every conceivable form of expression the majority of the trans-Missouri and Joint Traffic cases adjudged that the act of Congress did not allow restraint of interstate trade to any extent or in any form, and three times it expressly rejected the theory, which had been persistently advanced, that the act should be construed as if it had in it the word "unreasonable" or "undue," but now the court, in accordance with what it denominates "the rule of reason," in effect inserts in the act the word "undue," which means the same as "unreasonable," and thereby makes Congress say what it did not say—what, as I think, it plainly did not intend to say, and what, since the passage of the act, it has explicitly refused to say. It has steadily refused to amend the act so as to tolerate a restraint of interstate commerce, even where such restraint could be said to be "reasonable" or "due." In short, the court, by judicial legislation, in effect, amends an act of Congress relating to a subject over which that department of the Government has exclusive cognizance.
>
> I beg to say that, in my judgment, the majority in the former cases were guided by the "rule of reason," for, it may be assumed, they knew quite as well as others what the rule of reason required when the court seeks to ascertain the will of Congress as expressed in a statute. It is obvious, from the opinions in the former cases, that the majority did not grope about in darkness, but in discharging the solemn duty put on them they stood out in the full glare of the "light of reason" and felt and said time and again that the court could not, consistently with the Constitution, and would not, usurp the functions of Congress by indulging in judicial legislation. They said in express words in the former cases, in response to the earnest contentions of counsel, that to insert by construction the word "unreasonable" or "undue" in the act of Congress would be judicial legislation. Let me say also that as we all agree that the combination in question was illegal under any construction of the antitrust act, there was not the slightest necessity to enter upon an extended argument to show that the act of Congress was to be read as if it contained the word "unreasonable" or "undue." All that is said in the court's opinion in support of that view is, I say with respect, obiter dicta, pure and simple.

In respect to the decision on the income tax, Mr. Justice White, afterwards Chief Justice, in dissenting, said:

> I consider that the result of the opinion of the court just announced is to overthrow a long and consistent line of decisions and to deny to the legislative department of the Government the possession of a power conceded to it by the universal consensus for 100 years, and which has been recognized by repeated adjudications of this court. (157 U. S. 429.)

Mr. Justice Jackson, of the Supreme Court, in his dissenting opinion on the income tax decision, said:

> Considered in all its bearings, this decision is, in my judgment, the most disastrous blow ever struck at the constitutional power of Congress. (158 U. S. 705.)

Mr. Justice Brown, in his dissenting opinion, said:

> I can not escape the conviction that the decision of the court in this great case is fraught with immeasureable danger to the future of the country and that it approaches the proportions of a national calamity. * * * I hope it may not prove the first step toward the despotism of wealth. (158 U. S. 695.)

Mr. President, I do not concur in the attitude of Justice Brown in regarding it as a national calamity, or of Justice Jackson, who said it was the most disastrous blow ever struck at the constitutional power of Congress, because Congress has all the power it needs. It requires no change of the Constitution. It needs but to instruct the judges as to the extent of their power, and the remedy is abundant. Congress need but say that it shall not lie within the power of any judge on the bench to question the constitutionality of an act of Congress, and that it shall not lie within the power of any judge upon the bench to change the policy of an act by reading into the act anything which Congress has not written into it.

The judges on the bench have no desire to deal with arrogance or with usurpation with the powers of Congress. This practice has grown up through many, many years, but the time has come to correct it. I am calling the attention of the Senate and of the country to it, and I am determined that while I remain in this body no such provision as that found on the seventy-second page of this bill, in section 711, shall ever be passed again without my protest.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the section of the bill which the Senator from Oklahoma is opposing is a section that provides that in case any portion of the bill, if it shall become an act, shall be held unconstitutional by the courts, that shall not affect the constitutionality of the remainder of it. It is put in there as a precautionary provision by the framers of the bill and by Congress, if Congress shall approve it, to protect an act of Congress from being held to be invalid by the Supreme Court or any other court of the United States, in so far as Congress has that power. I understand that the Senator from Oklahoma is taking a position, which is quite unusual nowadays, that Congress has power by appropriate legislation to deprive the courts of jurisdiction to hold an act, or any part of an act, unconstitutional.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I fail to see the consistency of the Senator's opposition to this section, which is intended to accomplish the very purpose which the Senator from Oklahoma is advocating, in so far as it can do so.

Mr. OWEN. No; Mr. President, it is very far from accomplishing the purpose which the Senator from Oklahoma has in view. It is, in effect, a concession on the part of Congress that the court has the right to declare unconstitutional an act of Congress, and that I do not assent to. On the contrary, there should be put into this bill a provision that the court shall not have any right to appellate powers over the question of the constitutionality of this or any other act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand, then, from the Senator's position, that he, by his opposition to this section, is of the opinion that if any part of this act should be held to be unconstitutional, the whole act should fall as unconstitutional.

Mr. OWEN. No, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The provision which the Senator is moving to strike out is intended to prevent that very result.

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; the Senator fails to perceive that I object to the Congress consenting to have any part of the act being declared unconstitutional. I am not willing to have the court declare any part of the act unconstitutional.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the Senator does not accomplish that purpose by striking out this provision of the act.

Mr. OWEN. I will accomplish that purpose, if the Senator pleases, by an amendment that I will offer in lieu of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would be quite a different proposition; but the Senator has not offered anything in lieu of it, and, as I understand, he is opposing this provision.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; the Senator is quite right. I am opposing that provision, and at the proper time I will offer the amendment, which I have justified by the matter that I have submitted to the Senate to-day. Unfortunately, few Members of the Senate hear what is being said. Few Members pay any attention whatever to the quotations which are put in here from the Supreme Court itself. Both sides have vacated the Senate Chamber. They do not hear it. The argument may be vital to the Nation, but nobody pays any attention to it. Our rules of unlimited debate have killed debate and driven Senators from the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That shows a weakness on the part of Congress—on the part of one branch of Congress, at least.

Mr. OWEN. No; I think it is really due to a weakness in our own rules. We have adopted the rule of unlimited debate here, and it has killed real debate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senate makes its own rules, and in so far as the rules are defective the Senate is responsible for them. The Senator from Oklahoma now castigates the Senate——

Mr. OWEN. No; I am not castigating the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, he criticizes it——

Mr. OWEN. No; I am not even criticizing it. I am merely commenting upon an obvious fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He comments upon an obvious fact unfavorably to the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. That depends on the point of view. I wish the majority of the Senate thought so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And yet the entire burden and purport of the argument of the Senator is to give to these branches of Congress that he says pay no attention to the vital needs of the Nation absolute and autocratic power over the people of the country, without any constitutional limitations whatever.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Washington would like to have the Supreme Court exercise this power over Congress; and if the Senator will take the trouble to read in the RECORD what I have said, he will find that there is an abundant justification for what I have said. The Senator, however, comes in at the last moment and hears only a few words of what I say and makes an observation which occurs to him, and which is perfectly natural and reasonable, and with which I find no fault. I am not criticizing the Senate particularly. I am merely calling attention to what is an obvious fact. I have tried time and time again, in the most earnest and serious way, to get direct cloture in this body. I would vote for it to-day, notwithstanding my objection to this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senate is subject to the comments that the Senator from Oklahoma makes we may presume that the other branch of the Congress is subject to the same characterization, that it makes rules under which it is more or less incapacitated from doing business efficiently. How does the Senator base upon that proposition the doctrine which he now announces, that it should have supreme power, unaffected by any constitutional limitations?

Mr. OWEN. I do not want to repeat the speech I have just made. I have been speaking for an hour or more, and laying the ground to justify what I have said, and I must ask the Senator to be good enough to read it, because I do not want to repeat it. The House of Representatives has cloture, the Senate has not, and my observations are quite justified.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if there is any other court in the world that has power to set aside legislative statutes except the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. All the courts of Great Britain have such power and constantly exercise it.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no. They do not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is entirely mistaken about that. It may be an unusual exercise of power, but there is a constitution in Great Britain, although it has not the advantage that I believe results from having a constitution in writing. They have, however, an unwritten constitution.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; and the courts do not set aside acts of Parliament, either.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator is familiar with the judicial history of Great Britain, he will find many occasions upon which acts of Parliament of Great Britain have been held to be unconstitutional and in violation of the rights of the people and of the British constitution.

Mr. BROOKHART. Recently the procedure was amended so that the power of the House of Lords, even, was taken away and subordinated to that of the lower House of Parliament.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to say to the Senator from Iowa that I have heard the House of Lords within the last 10 years pronounce opinions declaring laws of the Provinces of Canada in violation of the British North American act, which is the written constitution of Canada.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, that does not reach the point I raised.

Mr. OWEN. That does not reach the point at all.

Mr. BROOKHART. The legislation of the Dominion, of course, is subject to the House of Lords and to the English courts. I was speaking of the acts of Parliament itself.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have done it as to the laws of Parliament, too.

Mr. OWEN. I challenge the Senator to put the cases in the RECORD.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall be very glad to accommodate the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator to put them in the RECORD. He will find difficulty in finding them.

Mr. President, Mr. Justice Harlan said, in regard to this income-tax decision:

It so interprets constitutional provisions * * * as to give privileges and immunities never contemplated by the founders of the Government. * * * The serious aspect of the present decision is that by a new interpretation of the Constitution it so ties the hands of the legislative branch of the Government that without an amendment of that instrument or unless this court at some future time should return to the old theory of the Constitution, Congress can not subject to taxation, however great the needs or pressing the necessities of the Government, either the invested personal property of the country, bonds, stocks, and investments of all kinds, etc. * * * I can not assent to an interpretation of the Constitution that impairs and cripples the just powers of the National Government in the essential matter of taxation and at the same time discriminates against the greater part of the people of our country. (158 U. S. 695.)

Mr. Justice Harlan said on another occasion:

When the American people come to the conclusion that the judiciary of this land is usurping to itself the functions of the legislative department of the Government, and by judicial construction is declaring what is the public policy of the United States, we will find trouble. Ninety millions of people—all sorts of people with all sorts of beliefs—are not going to submit to the usurpation by the judiciary of the functions of other departments of the Government and the power on its part to declare what is the public policy of the United States. (221 U. S. 1, 106.)

That is the language of a justice of the Supreme Court I am quoting. Senators should listen to it and remember the rights of the people.

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, before the Colorado Legislature, pointed out the grave danger in recent court decisions in defeating humane laws, and stated:

If such decisions as these two indicated the court's permanent attitude there would be really grave cause for alarm, for such decisions, if consistently followed up, would upset the whole system of popular government.

And he referred to such decisions as "flagrant and direct contradictions to the spirit and needs of the times."

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, in his introduction to Gilbert E. Roe's work, "Our Judicial Oligarchy," said:

Precedent and procedure have combined to make one law for the rich and another for the poor. The regard of the courts for fossilized precedent, their absorption in technicalities, their detachment from the vital, living facts of the present day, their constant thinking on the side of the rich and powerful and privileged classes have brought our courts into conflict with the democratic spirit and purposes of this generation. Moreover, by usurping the power to declare laws unconstitutional, and by presuming to read their own views into statutes without regard to the plain intention of the legislature, they have become in reality the supreme lawmaking and lawgiving institution of our Government. They have taken to themselves a power it was never intended they should exercise; a power greater than that intrusted to the courts of any other enlightened nation. And because this tremendous power has been so generally exercised on the side of the wealthy and powerful few, the courts have become, at last, the strongest bulwark of special privilege. They have come to constitute what may indeed be termed a "judicial oligarchy."

Thomas Jefferson, in his letter to Mr. Jarvis, in 1820, rebuked him for assuming that judges should have power over the legislature, the judges being themselves beyond control except by the impossible remedy of impeachment, and said:

You seem to consider * * * the judges as the ultimate arbiters of all constitutional questions; a very dangerous doctrine, indeed, and one that would place us under the despotism of an oligarchy.

A number of books have recently been written upon this matter, as Our Judicial Oligarchy, by Gilbert E. Roe; The Judicial Veto, by Davis; The Majority Rule and the Judiciary, by William N. Ransom, with an introduction by Theodore Roosevelt; The Spirit of the American Constitution, by Prof. J. Allen Smith; all of which emphasize the need to correct the practice I have referred to.

When the Standard Oil Co. was dissolved their stock was worth about $600,000,000. Six years afterwards it was worth twenty-four hundred million. At the present time I do not know what it is worth, but very, very much more than that.

Our yielding to this sort of thing will account for the growth of monopolies in this country, for the manner in which prices for the necessaries of life have gone to a point which is distressing the people of this Nation from one end to the other, which is ruining the farmers and stock raisers, the little producers, and the small consumers.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject, will he yield?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to get the Senator's viewpoint. Suppose Congress should pass a law respecting an establishment of religion. Does the Senator think that should be the law of the land?

Mr. OWEN. I will suppose nothing of the kind.

Mr. LENROOT. But I say, if Congress did.

Mr. OWEN. I refuse to agree that it might. No such presumption is possible.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, I see the predicament the Senator would be in——

Mr. OWEN. I see the Senator's predicament when he makes an impossible suggestion.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Suppose the Congress should pass a law providing for the seizure of papers, an unreasonable search and seizure, in violation of the Constitution, on which papers a man could be convicted of a crime, would the Senator say then——

Mr. OWEN. The supposition of the Senator is well-nigh impossible, and if made can be corrected by Congress.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator that Congress did pass such a law, and in the Baird case the Supreme Court held it to be unconstitutional.

Mr. OWEN. If Congress does make a mistake, when it is brought to the attention of Congress properly it will always be corrected.

Mr. KELLOGG. I can show the Senator dozens of acts in which Congress has sought to take away the rights of citizens guaranteed to them under the Bill of Rights, which took centuries to establish, which the courts have declared unconstitutional.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator can find, if he will take the trouble, unnumbered cases—they are of daily occurrence in this body—where the Congress of the United States is giving relief to one citizen after another whenever he comes here and shows he has a case.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. In line with the suggestions made by the Senators who have just taken their seats, when Congress passed a law invading the reserved powers of the States, and providing for an equality of the races, in fact, putting the negroes, who were formerly slaves, over their former masters throughout 11 States in the Union, did not the Supreme Court do right in holding it unconstitutional and void, and did it not have the power to do it?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; I think it did right, and I think Congress did wrong at the end of the war in passing such an act, I will answer the Senator. He need not think he has made a conclusive argument by his question.

Mr. SHIELDS. I expected the Senator to give an answer.

Mr. OWEN. I will answer the question. It is true that at the end of the Civil War, when men's passions had risen to a point where reason became blind, such legislation was passed. It was an error on the part of Congress.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, if it had not been for the power of the Supreme Court, what would have happened?

Mr. OWEN. Wait until I finish. It was a mistake by Congress; but I will say to the Senator, and also to the Senator from Minnesota, and to others who have raised this point, that while Congress may make a mistake, if Congress makes a mistake, the people of this country can correct it at the ballot box; but they can not correct a mistake made by the Supreme Court appointed for life, upon which there is no review. I will say more to the Senator, that while Congress may make a mistake, the probability of 500 men, on their oaths of office, making a mistake is less likely than a smaller number making a mistake, and as between the two I prefer to have the power exercised by the representatives chosen by the people of this country at the ballot box, responsible to the people, and not put that power in the hands of those who are not responsible to the people.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, Mr. President, while Congress is thinking over its mistake, and repealing it, in the meantime the man would be hung.

Mr. OWEN. That remark is more witty than wise.

Mr. President, I have finished what I had to say, and it goes into the RECORD. If those Senators who are not here are interested in it, they will find the quotations from the Supreme Court of the United States itself justifying what I have said. It is for them to determine upon the wisdom of the policy which I have suggested.

REPORTS OF DISTRICT PUBLIC UTILITY COMPANIES (S. DOC. NO. 303).

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the reports for the year ending December 31, 1922, of all public utility companies in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Appropriations the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 282) to amend the resolution of December 29, 1920, entitled "Joint resolution to create a joint committee on reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government." I will simply say to the Senate that it provides for the extension of time until July 1, 1924. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is a member of the commission, and I think he will join me in asking unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the joint resolution should be passed. The time has expired, and only yesterday, I believe it was, was the preliminary report which had been prepared by Mr. Brown, at the instance of the executive department, submitted to the joint commission. The joint commission has not had time to consider any of the problems involved. It is quite an ambitious scheme, and it would seem to me that the time should be extended and that there should be no opposition at all to the extension.

Mr. JONES of Washington. With the understanding that it will involve no discussion, I have no objection.

Mr. OWEN. I would like to ask whether or not the report has been printed as a document? I noticed it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but in such fine print it was difficult to read.

Mr. SMOOT. We are going to have a larger print of it.

Mr. OWEN. Will it be printed in larger type?

Mr. SMOOT. It will be.

Mr. OWEN. I think it ought to be printed so as to be easily legible.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that we have that in mind, and it will be done. It will be printed on sheets about the size of those I presented to the Senate on yesterday, so that any person even without glasses will be able to read it.

Mr. OWEN. Will there be some memorandum explaining the reasons for the adjustments which have been suggested?

Mr. SMOOT. Not until the joint commission meets to discuss the matter. Then we shall make a report upon it.

Mr. OWEN. I read it with great interest in the RECORD, but, as I said, it was in such small type it was difficult to read.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 3 of the resolution of December 29, 1920, entitled "Joint resolution to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government," is amended by striking out the the words "the second Monday in December, 1922," and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1924."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 33 to the bill (H. R. 13481) "making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 33: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same.

CHAS. L. MCNARY,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
E. D. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
EDWARD H. WASON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
GORDON LEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wish to inquire, in reference to the conference report, what items it covers?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the amendment covered by the report relates to the construction of roads in national forests. The Senate refused to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate and sent it back to the committee of conference with instructions that the Senate conferees should insist upon the Senate amendment. The bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, carried an item of $6,500,000 for that purpose, $3,000,000 only being made immediately available. Upon the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] the whole amount, namely, $6,500,000, was made immediately available. The conferees met, but the House conferees refused to yield to the demand of the Senate conferees, and so the Senate conferees finally yielded to the House, there being simply some modification and some improvement of the language of the item. I now ask that the Senate adopt the House provision as to the one particular item.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand, then, there is just one matter that is in disagreement. I see that the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] is in the Chamber. The senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is not now present. He has temporarily gone into the cloakroom; but it would seem to me that perhaps he ought to be here before this report is adopted.

Mr. MCNARY. If the senior Senator from Arizona desires to be present, upon the request of the Senator from Mississippi I shall withhold the request that action be taken on the report at this time. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that I shall call up the report again, if I may have an opportunity of securing the floor, when the Senator returns to the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will lie over for the present.

Mr. MCNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, I call up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1924.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report has been submitted and read. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I feel that the agreement between the conferees on the part of the Senate and the House has so modified amendment numbered 33 that while it does not quite meet with my approval and does not give us the $6,500,000 to which we are justly entitled, yet on account of the lateness in the session I do not feel that I should object to the adoption of the report at this time. I believe that a proviso has been put in by the House which will safeguard our interests and give the Forest Service the necessary leeway whereby they can expend the full amount—$6,500,000. Therefore I shall not object to the adoption of the report, but I wish to read the proviso so that it will appear in the RECORD at this point:

Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may incur obligations, approve projects, or enter into contracts under his apportionment and prorating of this authorization, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof: Provided further, That the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 8 of the act of July 11, 1916, and of section 23 of the Federal highway act of November 9, 1921, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging the obligations created hereunder in any State or Territory: Provided further, That the total expenditures on account of any State or Territory shall at no time exceed its authorized apportionment.

I think that will cover the question and give the Forest Service the necessary authority in order to utilize the appropriation of $6,500,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT AND THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, there is a bill upon the calendar of the Senate—No. 927, S. 3247—entitled "A bill to transfer to the classified service agents and inspectors in the field service, including prohibition agents and field inspectors appointed and employed pursuant to the national prohibition act, and for other purposes," which I believe concerns legislation of great importance and ought to be enacted into law as soon as possible. The present session will soon be at an end, and this matter should be attended to next Monday when the calendar for bills unobjected to will be called. Under the five-minute rule I will not then have time to present the merits of the bill, and I am availing myself of this opportunity to do so that I may challenge the attention of the Senate to the importance of the immediate consideration and favorable action upon the measure. The public interest and the proper and efficient enforcement of the Federal prohibition laws require that the agents and employees engaged in this service should be placed under the civil service law and subject to its provisions and regulations. These employees were by section 38 of the Volstead law expressly excepted from the civil service law because that was claimed to be a war or emergency act, but with the understanding and expectation, as I am informed, that after the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, known as the prohibition amendment, should become effective, they would be covered into the classified service as other employees of the Federal Government, but in the supplemental Volstead law thereafter passed it was not done and they yet remain open to political influences under the demoralizing spoils system.

The propriety, if not necessity, of placing these employees under the civil service law is recognized by the public, and especially by the good men and women throughout the country who favored prohibition as a great moral and economic reform and wish to see the laws for its enforcement executed justly and efficiently and in a manner to obtain and maintain the respect of the people. These men and women favored and worked for prohibition because they believed that it would advance the material interest and promote the prosperity of the people and remove a great cause of distress, suffering, depravity, and crime, without pay or compensation for their time and services. The necessity of placing these employees under the civil service law has been called to my attention by a number of these faithful workers, and I have been asked to urge upon Congress proper legislation for that purpose. Some time since I received a letter upon the subject from the president of the Tennessee Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Minnie Alison Welch, of Sparta, Tenn., one of the ablest and most devoted women of my State, which so well states the merits and the public interest for this legislation that I can not do better than read it:

Hon. JOHN K. SHIELDS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: We notice that Senator STERLING'S civil service bill (S. 3247) has been reported favorably to the Senate. We believe that this is the best remedy we can procure for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and Volstead law. While it may not eliminate all the bad elements that have gotten in, time will eliminate them, and this bill will afford us a better opportunity for getting more efficient prohibition agents.

We are hoping that you will see fit to use your influence and vote for this bill. The public welfare demands it and white-ribboned women of our State and many other good women are hoping that you will stand for the measure.

Thanking you for your interest in the same for prohibition, I beg to remain,

Cordially yours, MINNIE ALISON WELCH,
State President.

I wrote Mrs. Welch that I would examine the Sterling bill and if I believed that its provisions would secure better officers and more efficient enforcement of the laws enacted by Congress for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, prohibiting the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating beverages, I would support it, as I favored the enforcement of those laws in good faith and efficiently, like all other laws, as I had always been for order and law enforcement.

I conferred with Senator STERLING in regard to his bill and urged him to bring it forward as soon as practicable. I found him deeply interested in the matter and ready to procure action at as early a date as possible. Senator STERLING introduced a bill on April 25, 1921, to place these employees under the civil service law. It was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Reform. Afterwards, on March 7, 1922, he introduced another bill, which was also referred to the same committee and favorably reported to the Senate December 13, 1922, and is the one now upon the calendar. I will refer to the provisions of these bills later. I understand a bill having the same object was introduced more than a year ago in the House of Representatives, but that so far the committee to which it was referred has made no report upon it. I have no personal knowledge of why this great delay in consideration of these bills has occurred.

I understand that there are 1,800 Federal agents and employees engaged in the prohibition service, a greater number than in any other branch of the service not covered under the civil service law. A few days ago I read in a Washington paper a statement which speaks for itself, and as I know nothing in regard to the matter I will read it:

RAPS DRY APPOINTEES—ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE BLOCKS CIVIL SERVICE FOR AGENTS, CHARGE.

The Anti-Saloon League bought the Volstead Act with congressional patronage, and therefore is opposing application of the civil-service rules to prohibition-enforcement service, W. D. Foulke, National Civic Advice League vice president, charges in a letter he is sending to S. E. Nicholson, Anti-Saloon League secretary.

The Federal prohibition service now is corrupted by officials appointed under the spoils system, he said.

I have seen no denial of this serious charge. I have also been informed that charges of a similar character as those contained in this news item have been made to Members of Congress by Mr. Foulke, but of these I have no personal knowledge.

The large number of these employees and the great delay in placing them under the civil-service regulations compels everyone interested in the subject to believe that there is some improper reason for the delay of this legislation. The Republican Party, now in power, and the Democratic Party are both pledged to the maintenance and enforcement of civil service and the application of the civil service laws to all employees of the Government, and this delay is in direct violation of those pledges.

Mr. President, there is no class of Federal employees which the public interest demands should be under the classified service than those whose duty it is to enforce the prohibition laws. They come closer to the people, their persons, their effects, and their homes than any other class of employees. They perform duties which bear directly upon a great change in the habits, usages, and customs of the people in their private life resulting from the enactment of the Volstead law and which closely and intimately affect the great and sacred rights of personal liberty, private property, and the sanctity of home. None but the best, most intelligent, and law-abiding men should be intrusted with such duties. Every precaution for the protection of the people from oppression and maltreatment should be taken and go hand in hand with proper measures for the efficient and just enforcement of these laws. We know by common report that when the Volstead law was passed that there was appointed some prohibition officers in perhaps every State who misconstrued their power and duties and enforced the law in an oppressive, rude, and offensive way, without search warrants or evidence that would justify the issuance of a search warrant, searching the persons of men and even of women and of the effects and houses of the people, and assaulting them on the highways in a most outrageous manner. Some of them have been charged with accepting bribes from bootleggers, brutal assault and murder, and some of them indicted for these offenses, but I know nothing of the facts and will not attempt to state them. Generally speaking, these practices have been abandoned and forbidden, but occasionally we still hear of cases of this kind. There is no question but what the conduct of these officers aroused opposition to the enforcement of the law and generated disrespect for it which otherwise would not have existed. Proper examination by the Civil Service Commission of applicants for this service and an ascertainment of their character, their intelligence and prudence, as well as of their efficiency and courage, will be of inestimable benefit and protection to the people in their dearest rights as well as contribute to the thorough and efficient enforcement of the law.

Mr. President, the bill introduced by Senator STERLING April 28, 1921, which is entitled "A bill providing for the placing of Government employees engaged in the enforcement of national prohibition under the civil service," I think better than the one subsequently introduced by him and now on the calendar. This bill (S. 1376) provides that the agents and employees for the enforcement of Federal prohibition shall be appointed under the civil service law and that within three months from the passage of the act the then incumbents of all those positions shall be subject to the competitive requirements of the law and required to successfully pass open competitive examinations in order to retain their positions. The bill reported to the Senate places the positions of these agents and employees under the civil service law and bodily covers all the present incumbents into the civil service without examinations of any kind; and under it the present employees and agents, whether good or bad, or efficient, will remain in office for years, certainly until there is another administration in power. The provisions of this bill, I must say, gives color to the charge that the delay in placing the prohibition employees in the classified service is due to political machinations; and bodily transferring of those now in office is clearly intended to protect political appointees, without regard to good and efficient service and the rights of the public. When we reach this bill upon the calendar I shall offer the one first introduced by Senator STERLING as a substitute and urge its passage, because it will provide for better service both in the interest of the people and the Government.

Mr. President, I ask, without reading, that the two bills referred to be printed in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, that the Federal Government is meeting with considerable difficulty in enforcing the laws enacted by Congress for the execution of the prohibition amendment can not be denied. The President of the United States recently called together the governors of the States and asked their aid and cooperation in suppressing the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. When the Chief Executive hangs out a signal of distress of this kind we must know the situation is real and serious. The Congress has made a special appropriation of the enormous sum of $9,000,000 to defray the expenses of this special law, in addition to the general appropriation for the Department of Justice having charge of enforcing the criminal laws of the Federal Government. I know of no other law which has called for such special treatment and the expenditure of so great a sum of money in its enforcement. The press of the country teems with accounts of bootleggers and the activities of the officers of the law in pursuing and arresting them, and in some States the dockets of the United States district courts are congested with prosecutions against them. These facts can not be denied and they must be dealt with practically and honestly. The cause or causes creating these conditions must be ascertained and examined and removed, which I think can be done. While it may take some time, yet I have confidence in the supremacy of the Government, the ability and integrity of the courts, and the efficiency of law officers. If we find that a law made to enforce the Constitution of our country is not effective, it should be amended, but we should never run up the white flag or surrender to lawlessness. Every provision of our Constitution must and shall be enforced reasonably and justly and consistent with every other provision of that great instrument.

I wish to discuss briefly some of the causes which, I think, have brought about and encouraged this lawlessness and the disrespect which it must be conceded exists for the Federal laws for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and many of the officers and employees engaged in that service.

Mr. President, the eighteenth amendment to our Constitution, ratified by the States January 28, 1919, ordained that after one year from the ratification of that article the manufacture, importation, transportation, or sale of intoxicating liquors within the United States and all territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, be prohibited.

The amendment confers the only power Congress has to legislate upon this subject and was and is confined to the time and purposes in the amendment specially stated and set forth. It is not, like many other constitutional provisions, self-executing, and it was the duty of the Congress to pass laws for the proper enforcement of it.

When the amendment was proposed it seemed to meet with the approbation of a majority of the people of the United States, and it was promptly ratified by the States. Public sentiment favored it. It was the result of long and patient labor and education of the churches of all denominations and such philanthropic and beneficent organizations as the Anti-Saloon League, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Women's Christian Temperance Union and others, and of the Federal and State Governments, the great railway and other corporations employing thousands of men and women and the manufacturers and other business men, demanding for the protection of the public and their own interest that their employees be sober and free from the vice of drunkenness. All these influences, religious, moral, and business, combined in demanding sobriety, temperance, industry, and efficiency, and their united efforts were irresistible and resulted in the eighteenth amendment.

I do not controvert the fact that there was a respectable minority of the people opposed to the amendment and that there are some who are still opposed to it and would have it abrogated, but abrogation is a vain hope and their efforts will not succeed. The amendment is in the Constitution, a part of our supreme law, supported by the expressed will of a majority of the people of the United States, and it is there to remain permanently. I voted for the amendment, and I can conceive of no conditions under which I would vote for its abrogation.

The trouble the Federal Government has in enforcing prohibition, in my opinion, is not opposition of the people to the amendment, but to the laws enacted by Congress for its enforcement, known as the Volstead law—original and supplemental—and the influences and circumstances under which they were enacted and which attend their execution.

Although the amendment, which for the first time conferred upon Congress the power of controlling the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, provided on its face that it should not be effective for one year from its ratification by the States, within that year overzealous persons, not willing to abide by the provisions of the constitutional amendment they had aided to make a part of the fundamental law of the land, before the expiration of that year pressed through Congress the original Volstead law, precipitating prohibition suddenly and prematurely upon the country. The time when the amendment should take effect was deferred to allow the people to prepare themselves to conform to the great change made in their habits, and to permit those who had been theretofore engaged in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes legitimately and under the protection of Federal laws to arrange their business so that as little loss as possible might fall upon them and those to whom they were indebted, a practice that had been pursued in the prohibition laws in practically all the States and which was deemed reasonable and just.

This provision was disregarded, a law was passed before the expiration of the year allowed, and before the amendment became effective, under the pretense that it was a war measure and came within the extraordinary war powers of Congress, although the armistice had been signed nearly a year before and our Army, with the exception of a few thousand men, had been demobilized and peace reigned throughout the land. What troops we did have were in cantonments, protected from the use of intoxicating liquors by the State laws and an act of Congress prohibiting the sale of such liquors within 10 miles of any cantonment, shipyard, or other Government agency. The people realized that the law was passed upon a fraudulent pretense, discrediting the great moral cause it proposed to aid, and resented the action of Congress. These were my views, and I voted against that law for these reasons and as well as on account of some of its drastic and confusing provisions, in part not authorized by the prohibition amendment. President Wilson vetoed it, and I again voted to sustain his veto, but the Congress passed it over the President's objections.

After the constitutional amendment became effective what is known as the Volstead supplemental law was enacted. I voted against this also, because what was known as the Stanley amendment, to protect the persons, their effects, papers, and houses, as provided by the fourth amendment of the Constitution, against unreasonable searches, was not allowed as offered and the modified form in which it was passed is insufficient to give such protection. I regret the notes of my speech in the Senate in favor of that amendment were mislaid and the speech failed to reach the RECORD.

The original Volstead Act covers some 20 pages of closely printed matter and the regulations made for its enforcement by the Federal prohibition commissioner, and having the effect of law, some 55 pages; the supplemental law, I think, covers about 4 pages; thus what is known as the Volstead law is a voluminous document containing some 80 printed pages of innumerable provisions and exceptions, so involved and confusing that the courts and the lawyers have difficulty in interpreting its meaning and making it impossible of understanding by the people upon whom it is intended to operate.

Mr. President, it was human nature for the people of this country, many of whom had always favored prohibition laws, and even teetotalers, to revolt against such sudden and drastic legislation, interfering with things that they had previously exercised the right to determine for themselves, and their habits, appetites, usages, and customs. The enforcement of the amendment was not handled diplomatically and judiciously and in such manner as to commend it to the people, afford it the cordial reception that a reform measure should have, and to win and retain public respect.

Mr. President, it is impossible arbitrarily to legislate morality or religion into men and women, especially those of a free and independent people like Americans. You can not change the habits, the passions, of men overnight by man-made law. It has been tried in all ages, and while in some instances outward conformance has been achieved, yet inwardly there was no change in those sought to be controlled. God alone can effect such changes in man. It must be done by patient labor, education, example, and appeals to the higher and nobler impulses of men and women, their love of humanity and justice, their patriotism, and, finally, by their love and fear of their God. Bishop Woodstock, in a splendid address delivered some weeks ago, spoke upon this subject as follows:

> The consciousness of the need of God carries with it the craving for moral and spiritual freedom; for the world is becoming weary of reform and irritated by regulation, while it longs for choice, self-expression, and self-determination. We can not regulate a world spiritually nor reform it morally by law and compulsion. What the world now most sorely needs is not reformers but spiritual leaders, not regulation but moral and spiritual redemption. This redemption never has been promoted on a political basis only. It must be supported on a higher basis to give it motive and inspiration. Men may restrict the liberty of others by regulation and reform, but it always falls short. Unrestricted regulation and reform may go so far as to say that the State makes the conscience, and therefore the State can do no wrong. It took a harrowing war to explode this political heresy. We hold that God gave and guides the conscience, and that the conscience makes the nation. The one would make the sword the defense of civilization; the other would make the cross its redemption and the conscience its guide. The first is the "last struggle of a belated feudalism," the second is the conscious need of God in the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

I also have an editorial from the Journal and Tribune, a daily paper published in my State, written by its able and venerable editor, who has for 50 years fought the cause of prohibition in Tennessee and aided much to crown that struggle with splendid success both in the law enacted by the general assembly of the State and its enforcement by the constituted authorities entrusted with its administration, suggested by a statement in the inaugural address of Gov. Austin Peay, the present distinguished executive of my State, which I will read:

THE PURPOSE OF MAN-MADE LAWS.

In his inaugural address delivered Tuesday, Governor Peay, addressing the membership of the State general assembly, gave utterance to these sentences:

"I beg its membership to studiously refrain from the consideration of moral, social, temperance, or other legislation of distracting character until the ways and means have been found and effected to restore sound and orderly government in this State. The statute books are now filled with laws on those subjects which are not being enforced, and merely to impose penalties in acts which juries will not impose in practice is to waste time and lower the lawmaking authority in public estimation."

Whether or not the lack of law enforcement is due to the lack of will or efficiency of the courts and those who serve on juries, it is not our purpose here and now in this connection to stop and inquire; that is left to the intelligent reader to settle for himself or for herself.

But there is one thing that has been said in these columns time and again, and is here repeated. It is an impossibility to make a bad man good by statute; the man-made law may make one appear good on the outside, while in fact he is a fair imitation of the "whited sepulcher."

It never was intended that in the matter of individual morality the State should take the place of the church. If the church stands in need of any protection in the performance of its duties, that it must have, it is provided for in a statute that makes it a misdemeanor for anyone to disturb public worship. We fail in recalling a single case in which that statute has been violated the offender escaping the penalties fixed.

Looking at the situation from that viewpoint, Governor Peay is not open to adverse criticism in asking the legislature to refrain from the making of new laws, making people righteous by statute, and turning its attention to the making of fewer offices, taxing the people for the payment of salaries that are of benefit only to those who are the occupants of offices created for their special benefit and as rewards for political services rendered, to be continued in the next political campaign.

The principles, so well stated in these utterances, fully support the views I have advanced about man-made laws, concerning moral conduct and religious beliefs of men, and, to my mind, are incontrovertible. They illustrate and account for the troubles the Federal Government is now having in enforcing the Volstead law. The discontent and resentment from these causes will disappear with the lapse of time and are already much abated.

Mr. President, it was unfortunate, in view of the manner in which the Volstead law was precipitated upon the country with such unseemly haste, that the agents and employees appointed to execute it were excepted from the civil service, and their offices became the prey of political patronage. It was unfortunate that too many of these appointees could not grasp the delicate duties intrusted to them and proceeded to enforce the law in many cases rudely, oppressively, and unlawfully, thus increasing the discontent and resentment of the people. How much better it would have been had these employees been subjected to a civil-service examination and none but proper men appointed. There would have been less antagonism to the law and a more efficient execution of it. This can all now be remedied by placing these agents and employees under the civil service law.

Mr. President, another cause of the difficulty in the successful enforcement of the Volstead law is the resentment of the people growing out of the arrogant and insolent assumption of certain parties, and especially some here in Washington, implied from utterances and actions, that they placed in the Constitution the eighteenth amendment and enacted the laws for its execution and that they are now enforcing it. They assume a personal proprietorship of all these measures and their execution to the exclusion of the Government and the people. These men got into the limelight as the officers, agents, and lobbyists of the Anti-Saloon League; and, although the prohibition amendment has become an accomplished fact and the laws to enforce it have been enacted, they are unwilling to forego the pleasures of prominence on the front pages of papers, the exercise of the power of that organization, and, above all things, to relinquish the salaries upon which they have fattened for so long a time. They assume that they are prohibition, and attempt to usurp the functions of the constituted authorities, duly elected and responsible to the people, in enacting laws and appointing officers to execute them; and they are in this way doing the organization, composed of good men and women, which they are misrepresenting, a great injury.

Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, who, I understand, has been on a salary paid by the Anti-Saloon League since his early manhood, now poses as its general counsel and legislative agent, his duties and activities being chiefly that of a lobbyist here in Washington, is perhaps the most arrogant of these men. His pretentions to the control of the Congress of the United States are unprecedented, so far as I am informed, in the history of the Government. Mr. Wheeler and others with him have not hesitated to interfere in the election of Senators and Representatives in Congress and denounce them and attempt to defeat their election when they fail to be governed by their dictation.

They denounce judges, district attorneys, and other officers whose duty it is to administer and enforce the laws of the country, and they interfere constantly in the appointment of all Federal officers, attempting to establish and enforce as the first qualification of such officers that they support such legislation and measures as to them, in their limited and narrow vision, may seem proper. Give them their way and prohibition framed and administered according to their dictation would become the sole provision of our Constitution and the sole object of the Federal Government and its administration, a condition inconceivable, disastrous to the people, and intolerable.

Some time ago my attention was called to a circular, broadcasted by the field superintendent of the league in Tennessee, a man who had recently been imported from a distant State, soliciting contributions for the support—that is, payment of salaries of local and national agents, containing brazen statements of the activities of Mr. Wheeler in these words:

A number of Congressmen who hold the balance of power and pile up majorities in Congress come from the Southern and Western States, where money for organization and educational purposes is scarce. They have always had to have help from the national league. * * *

In addition to the above, the amount from Tennessee for the national league helps to provide for the maintenance of the entire national organization. It also helps to provide for the maintenance of our national office at Washington, D. C., under the very successful management of Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, one of the greatest diplomats and attorneys in America.

And again:

From this office—that of Mr. Wheeler—needed legislation is initiated, a constant watch is kept on the actions of Congress, and when opposition appears danger signals are flashed to every State in the Union.

The success or failure of national enforcement depends upon the power of our national organization and its Washington headquarters, backed by the States, to defeat the nomination and appointment of enforcement officials, such as United States district attorneys, Federal enforcement officers, and agents, United States district judges, and many other applicants for office who are out of sympathy with the enforcement of prohibition. Every State logically must carry its proportionate burden of this expense.

There was a meeting recently connected with prohibition enforcement in the city of New Orleans, at which were present Mr. Roy Haynes, Federal prohibition commissioner, Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, and Dr. Purley A. Baker, who also holds a position with the Anti-Saloon League, in which the two latter made assaults upon the courts of the country and the Congress. Whether this meeting was called by Mr. Haynes and attended by the other gentlemen, or whether it was the meeting of Mr. Wheeler and Doctor Baker and Mr. Haynes attended it, I do not know, but certain it is that Mr. Haynes was present, and listened to these assaults upon the judicial and the legislative branches of the Government, he being a part of the executive branch, without objection and without dissent. What I shall read appeared in the New Orleans papers and has heretofore been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, December 12, 1922, by Senator BROUSSARD, of Louisiana. I read from the RECORD:

I want to reiterate what I said Sunday, said Dr. Purley A. Baker, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, at the opening of the second day of the law-enforcement conference at the Grunewald Hotel, Monday. Twenty per cent of the Nation's Federal judges ought to be in the penitentiary at hard labor or impeached. * * *

"These scoundrels who sit on the bench, and I use the term advisedly," said Doctor Baker, referring to the 20 per cent of the Federal judges who he said were obstructing enforcement of the prohibition law, "are drunkards themselves. I hold them responsible for the shooting down of 300 splendid law-enforcement officers during the last year."

Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler is reported as making at the same meeting these misleading and outrageous statements:

The average prohibition agent is patriotic and loyal, and the percentage of prohibition agents slain on duty is higher than the percentage of soldiers of the American Army slain during the World War. It is a shame that when these honored and hard-working men are shot down Federal judges often condone with the bootleggers instead of going after them.

* * * * * * *

We have no fear of Congress nullifying the dry legislation. The Anti-Saloon League controls Congress.

A folder, purporting to have been prepared by a man who styles himself "general secretary board of temperance, prohibition, and public morals, Methodist Episcopal Church," and a citizen of the State of Oregon, contains the statements I now read:

PUT ONLY DRYS ON GUARD.

There is another forward step which should be taken. One of the greatest hindrances under which prohibition now operates is that our enforcement officers in given States receive their appointments through the recommendation of United States Senators, and some of them without conscience or care have succeeded in filling the enforcement staff with men who are wet in their views, proliquor in their sympathies, and actually antagonistic to the eighteenth amendment. There must be a sentiment created that will stamp out this treason and will make a United States Senator who deliberately secures the appointment of a United States judge, United States district attorney, or a Federal enforcement officer who is against the law he is sworn to enforce feel the wrath of the whole people for his betrayal of a sacred trust in thus thwarting the will of the Nation and making easy the violation of its law.

There is another leaf to turn in this volume of enforcement experience. The records will show that 135 Government representatives—officers of the enforcement service—have lost their lives as our representatives trying to have our laws respected. They have been shot down in cold blood, have been run over with high-powered cars, have been burned to death by high-voltage wires set as traps for them, have been poisoned, and every method of devilish ingenuity has been devised to destroy the representatives of this Government who enforce prohibition.

When we have sent our men up against this combination we have handicapped them with advices that they shall not shoot or do bodily injury except as a very last resort, and when as a last resort they have in a few instances fired on men resisting arrest and seeking to do them injury, these Federal officers have actually been put on trial for murder in the first degree, and the prosecuting attorneys—perjured scoundrels—who were sworn to give aid to the Government's agents but were champions of the bootleggers, have tried their best to railroad Federal officers to the gallows or to the State prisons for merely enforcing the prohibition law exactly as other officers are enforcing other laws.

Out in my State, Oregon, the prosecuting attorney who made himself infamous by thus prosecuting a Federal prohibition officer was rewarded by the pusillanimous governor with a position on the circuit bench of his State. I should, for the honor of my State, say that the people of the State attended to the governor's case on the 7th of November last.

Think of the character of the man who would impugn the motives and malign the officers of his State without justification of any kind, as I am credibly informed, and thus misrepresent the great church he claims to speak for.

The Anti-Saloon League in New York is a corporation, and its officers are subject to the laws regulating corporations in that State. A man by the name of W. H. Anderson was imported from another State and made superintendent of the league, with a salary of $7,500. His conduct has been marked by violent and vicious assaults upon the governor and members of the general assembly, the United States Senators, judges, and other officers of that State, charging them with all sorts of offenses, calculated, if not intended, to shock confidence in them and destroy their efficiency as the duly elected representatives of the people. This self-constituted guardian of morals and of law and order in that great State has recently been investigated by the district attorney of New York, and, among other things, facts have been developed which tend to show that he obtained from the corporation $24,700 for his own use, claimed by him to have been expended for the benefit of the league, but for which he produced no vouchers and made no statement of how the money was expended or to whom it was paid, or even where he obtained the money for such purposes. When called upon by the district attorney for a statement, he first offered to make full disclosure, and afterwards employed counsel, under whose advice he refused to give any information and claimed immunity under the statute of limitations.

Mr. President, these arrogant and intolerant men do not hesitate to assault and criticize the highest and the lowest Government officials of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government when in the discharge of their duties they do not conform to their individual views of constitutional or statutory law. They attack judges for exercising their judicial powers and discretion without knowing the facts upon which their judgments are pronounced. They hold over these officers implied threats of political defeat if they do not yield to their dictation or criticize them for unwarranted interference in governmental matters. When the Senate was considering what is known as the judges' bill, providing for the creation of some 24 Federal judges last year, if I can be allowed to refer to a personal matter, I had occasion to criticize Mr. Wheeler for officious and pestiferous interference in that legislation, and the field secretary to whom I have referred as a recent importation into Tennessee I am informed in a published statement unscrupulously and untruthfully charged that I was opposed to all law enforcement, notwithstanding that as a lawyer and as a judge I had always advocated and aided law and order and the enforcement of all the laws of the land in a just and reasonable manner, a record known to all the people of the State and of which he must have been informed—evidently because of my proper criticism of Mr. Wheeler.

When the time comes when I must abdicate the functions of the high office of United States Senator to any man, associations of men, or corporate interests and be governed by their dictation, I will no longer deserve to hold that high office. I have always conformed my views to the caucus determinations and platform pronouncements of my party, not involving constitutional questions, and have kept faith with my campaign pledges, but in all other things I have been, and will continue so long as I am here to be, governed by my best and conscientious judgment of my duty as God has given me the light to see the right, without considering what effect such action will have upon my political fortunes. I certainly will not submit to the dictation of those who claim to control the Congress, and their misrepresentations and forecasted opposition have no terrors for me.

Mr. President, it is currently reported that all applicants for the office of prohibition director and other agents of that service must be approved by these men, and that the indorsement of the Senators and Representatives of the States where they are to be appointed and in accord with the administration are worthless without such approval. The limit was reached, I think, when recently the President had under consideration the promotion of a United States district judge of my State, a man above reproach in his private and official conduct, to be a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Wheeler, who was supporting another applicant for the place, insinuated things against him in a conversation with the President which he afterwards withdrew as unfounded, doubtless because he knew the President did not believe what he said, as well as because there was no truth in what he had said, and proceeded to compliment the distinguished jurist.

And yet these gentlemen talk about law enforcement when they are assaulting and making statements, without evidence and without facts to support them, against the courts of the country and the officers of the law, which will shock the confidence of the people in the judiciary of the country, the very citadels of good government and law enforcement and bring them into disrepute. I have never believed that a good citizen would be guilty of such conduct and have always considered it lawlessness of the worst character. The courts of the country are the sanctuaries of the law and the bulwark of the personal, civil, and property rights of the people, and no good and patriotic citizen will be guilty of conduct which tends to weaken and destroy them.

When judges and other officers are corrupt and fail to discharge their duties they can and should be proceeded against and removed from office by methods provided by law, and all good citizens who have just grounds of complaint will proceed in that manner.

Mr. President, the prohibition amendment and the Volstead law are laws of the Government of the United States and of the people of the United States. They are not the laws of any faction or of any organization. They must be recognized as the laws of the land, duly enacted, and must be enforced by the duly elected and constituted representatives of the people. When the people fully understand this they will submit to those laws and the violation of them will cease, but the people will not submit to be governed by self-constituted lawmakers, and will always resent efforts to control them coming in such questionable and un-American shape from such men or any private source. When these men cease their officious activities a great step will be taken toward acquiescence in the prohibition laws, for the American people are a law-abiding people and are willing to submit to the laws made by the majority.

Mr. President, the prohibition amendment is a part of the Constitution, and the statutes to enforce it have been passed and are in full force now. Where is the necessity of the activities of the gentlemen I have referred to? Can not the President, the Congress, and the courts of the United States, duly elected, appointed, and sworn, be trusted to execute the laws? Are they less trustworthy and competent than those gentlemen, self-constituted lawmakers and enforcement officers, unsworn and without the color of authority from the people?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Does not the Senator think also that when he proposes to get rid of those to whom he refers and when he is working in the interest of bringing about better enforcement, that he would also do something toward the accomplishment of that end if he got rid of the organizations and individuals who have helped to defeat law enforcement and tried to bring law enforcement into disrepute? Should not they also be gotten rid of in the interest of law enforcement?

Mr. SHIELDS. Unquestionably. If the Senator had listened to my argument, he would know that I am in favor of law enforcement. I am opposed to the bootlegger and his vicious business. The bootlegger is not against prohibition. There was no aristocracy of bootleggers until the Volstead law was passed. Under State laws they were mere pikers. While liquor was sold legitimately the bootlegger had no occupation nor did he dare to openly follow his nefarious trade under the State laws, for they were supported by the people and enforced as a rule vigorously and effectively, but now bootlegging has come to be a business, creating millionaires everywhere. I know of no organization of the kind the Senator has referred to. I have no acquaintenances who are law violators.

Mr. President, placing the enforcement of the prohibition laws in the Treasury Department and under the direction of the prohibition commissioner was a great mistake. It is always a mistake to single out a penal law for special treatment. Law enforcement has nothing in common with the Treasury of the United States. The enforcement of all other laws is intrusted to the Department of Justice, presided over by the Attorney General of the United States and a staff of able assistant attorneys, men learned in the law and in the administration of the penal laws of our country. The law should be changed and the jurisdiction of this law along with all others be given to the Attorney General, where it can be enforced intelligently and efficiently, and without the interference of outsiders. The enormous appropriations now made for the enforcement of prohibition would not be necessary as the expenses would be much less and the people would recognize this law as that of their Government and obey it.

Mr. President, I have no sympathy or patience with some men in this country who are advising the violation of the Volstead law because, as they assert, it is not supported by public sentiment. These men are not good citizens, and their conduct is little short of criminal sedition. My attention has been called to an address delivered by President Butler, of Columbia University, upon the subject of the prohibition laws, but I have not had time to read it. I do find in looking over it here on my desk that he said in that address:

It is lawlessness openly to affront the law. It is not lawlessness to agitate for its modification or repeal.

If this is President Butler's position, he is entirely right. While no man has a right to violate law, and should not be an accomplice to its violation by advising it, the people have a right to peacefully agitate changes in the fundamental and other laws of the country and to petition Congress for that purpose, and no man can be condemned for exercising that right.

Mr. President, I recently read an address by a great man whose birthday the whole country has recently celebrated, and I was so impressed with a statement therein concerning obedience to the laws of our country that I desire to read it here. It will do every citizen good to read it and ponder and follow it:

LINCOLN'S APPEAL FOR LOYALTY TO LAW.

Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well wisher to his posterity swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in the legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice.

Mr. President, the prohibition amendment is a part of the fundamental law of our country, and the Volstead law was enacted by the Congress for its enforcement. This statute is the law of the land, and it must be obeyed so long as it remains unamended and unrepealed. The constitutional amendment, as I have said, will, in my opinion, never be abrogated. Those who are opposed to it might as well accept it and be resigned to the will of the majority of the people. The Volstead law may be amended to relieve it of some of its drastic provisions, but I know of no movement in the Congress for that purpose. The amendment chiefly agitated is to legalize the manufacture and sale of "light wines and beer." What these terms mean I do not know, as they have never been defined by those favoring them. If light wines and beer mean intoxicating liquors to be sold for beverage purposes, legislation for that purpose would be in violation of the Constitution and should not be passed. If this agitation has anything to do with the return of the saloon, the hotbed of moral and political corruption, it will fail. I would never support an amendment that would provide for these things, nor do I believe that any Congress will favor such an amendment to the present laws. I believe the Federal prohibition laws when relieved of the present hurtful influences surrounding their administration will be accepted by the people, and they can and must be enforced. We can not tolerate lawlessness of any character. The General Assembly of Tennessee some years ago passed laws for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages, and, although there was some opposition in the beginning, in a few years they were accepted by the people and were reasonably enforced as all other penal laws of the State, and the people of Tennessee are a law-loving and law-abiding people. I regret to say that this condition has been somewhat changed since the Federal prohibition laws were passed and under the circumstances attending their administration, but I hope that soon again we will have a reign of the law.

Mr. President, while the Federal Government is having some difficulty in enforcing the Volstead law, prohibition is not a failure, as claimed by some. Abolishing the saloon and otherwise removing the facility for obtaining intoxicating liquors, and the accompanying temptation to the young men of the country and those addicted to the drinking habit, has greatly reduced the consumption of such beverages and removed widespread dissipation, poverty, distress, and criminal conduct immeasurably; and any law which has accomplished this for humanity can not be said to be a failure.

Mr. President, I have given my reasons for the difficulties the Federal Government has encountered in the enforcement of the Federal prohibition laws, not with a view of criticizing anyone but with the hope by calling attention to these causes to aid somewhat in the removal of them and bring about such condition of affairs that the people will recognize those laws as the laws of their Government and as good citizens and cooperate in the enforcement of them. I believe that covering of the prohibition officers and employees under the civil service and making every effort to procure the very best men to fill those places and execute these laws will contribute much to remove the prejudice against them and to their just, reasonable and efficient enforcement; and if I have said anything that will contribute to that result, I think I will have done a service to my country.

APPENDIX A.

A bill (S. 1376) providing for the placing of Government employees engaged in the enforcement of national prohibition under the civil service.

Be it enacted etc., That the executive officers authorized to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Attorney General of the United States to have immediate direction of the enforcement of the provisions of the national prohibition act of October 28, 1919, and persons authorized to issue permits, and agents and inspectors in the field service of the prohibition enforcement force of the Internal Revenue Bureau, and other special employees of the Attorney General, appointed pursuant to said national prohibition act, shall be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883, known as "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States." Within three months from the passage of this act the incumbents of positions hereby made subject to the competitive requirements of said civil service act shall be subjected to and must successfully pass open competitive examinations in order to retain their respective positions, unless already appointed in the manner prescribed in the civil service act.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

APPENDIX B.

A bill (S. 3247) to transfer to the classified service agents and inspectors in the field service, including general prohibition agents and field supervisors appointed and employed pursuant to the national prohibition act, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the positions now held by agents and inspectors in the field service, including general prohibition agents and field supervisors acting under the direction of the Federal Prohibition Commissioner and prohibition agents acting under the direction of prohibition directors, which positions have been created and the incumbents thereof appointed under the provisions of section 38, Title II, of the national prohibition act, are hereby transferred to the classified service.

SEC. 2. That the incumbents of the aforesaid positions who have been heretofore appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the provisions of the said section of the national prohibition act, and who are now employed in such positions, are hereby transferred to the classified service as of their present grades or rates of compensation, respectively, and shall be continued in such positions without any or further examination, subject, however, to transfer, promotion, or removal the same as other employees in the classified service.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall be deemed or held to restrict in any way the provisions of section 38 of Title II of the national prohibition act authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to appoint without regard to the provisions of the civil service act of January 16, 1883, and the supplements to and the amendments thereof and the rules and regulations issued pursuant thereto, executive officers to have immediate direction of the enforcement of the provisions of the said national prohibition act and the persons authorized to issue permits thereunder, including the executive officers employed under the direction of the Federal Prohibition Commissioner and of the Federal prohibition directors: Provided, however, That the number of persons so appointed and employed in the bureau at Washington shall not exceed 12, and the number of persons so appointed and employed in the several directors' offices in the field shall not exceed an average of five in each director's office.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. KELLOGG. For what purpose?

Mr. WILLIS. I simply want to ask unanimous consent to insert certain documents in the RECORD. It will take but a moment.

Mr. KELLOGG. If that is what the Senator desires, I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. In connection with the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] relative to law enforcement and the statement made by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler on that subject, it seemed to me it would be useful to have in the RECORD just at this point certain newspaper comments relative to the statement made by Doctor Butler. I therefore ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point, in 8-point type, a brief editorial from the New York Evening Mail, another from the Washington Star, another from the Philadelphia North American, and a statement from Evangeline Booth, who is perhaps as well qualified to judge of the enforcement of the law as anyone in the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorial from the Evening Mail, New York City, Monday, January 29, 1923.]

PRESIDENT BUTLER'S BAD EXAMPLE.

Speaking of the fifteenth and eighteenth amendments to the Constitution, President Nicholas Murray Butler said before the Ohio Bar Association last Friday:

"In form and in fact, and judged by all the usual tests and standards, these two amendments to the Constitution of the United States are part of the organic law, with all the rights and authority which attach thereto. Nevertheless, they are not obeyed by large numbers of highly intelligent and morally sensitive people, and there is no likelihood that they can ever be enforced, no matter at what expenditure of money or effort, or at what cost of infringement or neglect of other equally valid provisions of the same Constitution."

When the president of a great university says that a certain law is unenforceable, buttressing his argument with implied praise of the "intelligence" and "moral sensitiveness" of persons who disobey it, is it any wonder that undergraduates of his university should have no scruple about breaking the law?

There is not, and there never has been, a law in existence which was "enforced" in the sense that it was 100 per cent efficient in abolishing crime. If the law forbidding the consumption and sale of liquor is unenforceable at Columbia University, so is the law against stealing unenforceable in a thieves' den.

As a matter of fact, the prohibition laws are not only enforceable but they are enforced over the greater part of this country. It is only in the larger cities that their enforcement is still baffling the authorities. But even in those larger cities, officials like United States Attorney Hayward and Commissioner Yellowley have shown what can be done, and it is only a matter of time until they achieve still more considerable success.

Doctor Butler's Ohio address was a long wail bemoaning the increase of lawlessness, which he put down to the passage of unpopular laws. He said the frequency with which persons in high places broke the prohibition law was leading others to have a contempt for all laws. He is quite right. But he will not mend matters by making apologies for these people, their "intelligence" and their "moral sensitiveness."

We have seen few spectacles less edifying than that of a college president upholding the "intelligence" and "moral sensitiveness" of people who, because they will not deny themselves liquor, are responsible for encouraging all the other crime that goes with bootlegging.

—

[Editorial on President Butler, of Columbia University, in the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., January 28, 1923.]

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler now joins the ranks of the "defeatists" with respect to enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. In an address before the Ohio Bar Association he declared belief that the amendment never can be enforced, "no matter at what expenditure of money or of effort," and as he does not expect the amendment to be repealed within measurable time he sees no hope but that America will continue to be a Nation of lawbreakers, with full approval of "men and women of intelligence and moral sensitiveness."

The eminent educator's belief that the eighteenth amendment and laws enacted under it for suppression of the liquor traffic are unenforceable perhaps would carry greater weight if he were a little less reckless in laying the groundwork of his argument. But when he tells us that "the methods of czarist Russia and the Spanish inquisition" have been resorted to in futile efforts to enforce the law he tells us what we know is not true, and therefore we feel justified in harboring a reasonable doubt as to the infallibility of his judgment of the ultimate outcome. When so learned a man as Doctor Butler indulges in such extravagance of statement, it is to be feared his protest is more inspired by passion than by zeal for the well-being of the Nation.

Doctor Butler succeeds only in making himself look foolish when he declares at this stage of the contest that the liquor traffic can not be suppressed. As a matter of fact, American sentiment day by day grows more determined that it must and shall be suppressed. There was a time when ordinarily good citizens thought it was "smart" and something of a joke to buy bootleg whisky, but their number is rapidly diminishing. Doctor Butler asserts that revolt against prohibition enforcement among "men and women of intelligence and moral sensitiveness" is nation-wide. That statement carries its own refutation. No intelligent man or woman could view with equanimity the moral debauchery resulting from the business of the bootleggers, and to give countenance to their carnival of crime is complete proof that "moral sensitiveness" is lacking. It may be that some day the eighteenth amendment will be repealed, or that the laws for its enforcement will be modified, but repeal or amendment will not be the result of such attacks as that launched by Doctor Butler at Columbus.

—

[From the North American, Philadelphia, Wednesday, February 14, 1923.]

MORALLY SENSITIVE BOOTLEGGERS.

Many Americans who believe in and practice law observance were surpised a few days ago when President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, in a public speech assailed the eighteenth constitutional amendment and the Volstead act and offered a casuistical defense of violators of those enactments. Doctor Butler has been known as a political supporter of the liquor traffic; when he was a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination one of his principal assets was his strength with the wet forces in the party. But it was not generally expected that he, the head of a great university the majority of whose students are of foreign extraction, would make a calculated effort to justify and incite defiance of the laws of the United States.

Doubtless it was in part because the doctor has become habituated to the use of textbooks prepared by others that he merely transmitted in his address arguments that have been worn threadbare by the bootleggers and their lawless patrons. In fact, his utterance embodied so little that was new or weighty that if it had been delivered by a citizen of less prominence it would have attracted no attention. Incidentally, one must marvel at his hardihood in selecting a session of the Ohio Bar Association as the scene of his oratorical exploit. It was the judicial section of the American Bar Association that declared that "those who scoff at this law are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting mob violence." And it was Ohio which last fall voted by a great majority for strict enforcement.

Naturally, Doctor Butler affirmed with unction that he and other advocates of nullification are "opposed to the saloon" and thoroughly approve its banishment. Here he makes two interesting admissions—first, that there is a dry sentiment throughout the Nation so strong that it has outlawed the saloon, and, second, that he is now against that agency of "personal liberty." But in adopting the canned arguments of the liquor advocates he loaned his name and influence to the most dishonest proposition in the whole wretched propaganda of booze. While professing to abhor the saloon, he knows, as one familiar with law and legislation, that if the demanded modifications of the Volstead act were to be made, so as to legalize the sale of "light" intoxicants, restoration of the saloon would be a matter of course and necessity. The places where the intoxicants were sold would have to be licensed, regulated, and taxed.

But if his condemnation of the saloon lacks candor, his implication that the sale of "light" intoxicants would eliminate lawlessness lacks logic. He might as well argue that the way to stop wholesale thefts would be to legalize petty larceny. The "light" intoxicants are obtainable now, in unlimited quantities, by anyone who has the price and is willing to participate in a criminal traffic; yet that does not diminish the demand for hard liquor but rather stimulates it.

Like every glib-tongued apologist for the bootlegger and his patrons, Doctor Butler seeks justification for defiance of the eighteenth amendment in the fact that several of the Southern States disregard the fifteenth amendment. These, he says, are "two important influences which are now making for lawlessness in American life." Coming from an obscure or uneducated person this absurd argument might be ignored. But it is worth examination, we think, when offered by a scholar who holds the degrees of A. B., A. M., and Ph. D. from Columbia, is a doctor of letters by grant from Oxford, and has been dubbed doctor of laws by Syracuse, Tulane, Johns Hopkins, Princeton, Pennsylvania, Yale, Chicago, St. Andrews, Manchester, Cambridge, Wesleyan, Williams, Harvard, Dartmouth, Breslau, Brown, Toronto, Strasburg, Prague, Nancy, Paris, and Louvain Universities.

Doubtless it will appear a kind of heresy to question the authority of a legal expert so formidably endowed with the trappings of scholarship, yet we venture to do so. The fourteenth amendment, guaranteeing equal civil rights to negro freedmen, and the fifteenth amendment, extending the suffrage to negroes, were promulgated in 1868 and 1870, respectively. They were framed during a period of intense partisanship following the Civil War, and their ratification was procured by congressional coercion, military force, and exploitation of the negro vote. Back of these measures were radicals who had fought Lincoln to the day of his death, and the amendments embodied policies which he firmly opposed. Most of the Southern States ratified them while under "carpetbag" government supported by troops of occupation.

This aspect of reconstruction, indeed, furnished one of the darkest chapters in American history, for whatever justification there was for the amendments in theory, the main purpose behind them was partisan, to use the negro vote to take political control away from the whites of the South. The methods employed were so atrocious that multitudes of people in the North denounced them. The result was simply to solidify the South against an attempt to override its views, and to this day the sentiment is so nearly unanimous that Congress has never dared to attempt enforcement of the obnoxious measures.

Now, consider the history of the eighteenth amendment, which Doctor Butler pretends is in the same category. Its adoption followed an educational campaign extending over 75 years. No issue, except that of slavery, was ever so long and so thoroughly discussed; from platform and pulpit and in the press every aspect of it was analyzed before three generations. It was finally submitted to the States by a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress. At that time more than half the States in the Union had adopted prohibition within their own borders, but in every remaining State a desperate fight was made by the liquor interests, the most powerful bipartisan combination of business and politics the country had ever seen. Yet, within 13 months, so overwhelming was the sentiment, the prohibition amendment had been ratified by the required 36 States, and eventually 45 gave their approval. Out of 96 State legislative chambers, there were just three that failed to vote for ratification.

We do not cite these facts in any attempt to justify the nonenforcement of the fifteenth amendment but merely to show how uncandid and how defiant of history is Doctor Butler's pretense that the two can be linked as twin causes of lawlessness. The one was an instrument of partisanship and imposed by force, the other an expression of overwhelming public sentiment, regardless of party, made effective through orderly democratic processes.

It would be unjust to the abilities of an expert with 22 LL. D. degrees to ignore the fact that Doctor Butler enriched his excuses for law defiance with some striking epigrammatic phrases. Thus he held it an "illusion" that "enactments duly made by the legislature and upheld by a competent court are part of the law." They are such, he explained, "only if general public opinion supports and upholds them," if they are ratified by "a silent referendum in the hearts and minds of men." We hope the law schools and the courts will take due note of what should be known in American jurisprudence as the Butler referendum, as distinguished from the species provided by our imperfect Constitution.

But even more characteristic is his definition of those for whom he particularly pleads. We have read affecting arguments for the right of the worker, of the alien-born citizen, and of the "poor man" to "personal liberty" as embodied in booze, but Doctor Butler is concerned for a very different class. The law, he says, is "not obeyed by large numbers of highly intelligent and morally sensitive people"; he perceives "nation-wide revolt" among "men and women of intelligence and moral sensitiveness"; he grows emotional over "lawlessness which arises from the resistance of intelligent and high-minded people."

In this plea the surpassingly literate doctor is true to his traditions. He has frequently shown that he deplores legislative interference with the business interests and personal desires of the "highly intelligent and morally sensitive" among the population; he would remove from them hampering statutory prohibitions and trust to the common law. This is a familiar doctrine; it has been invoked by the Butlers every time an exploited public has undertaken to curb rapacity, stamp out crimes of cunning against society, and promote social and industrial justice. When laws were passed against secret railroad rebates, food adulteration, the exploitation of women and children in industry, the plundering of natural resources, the wasting of life through refusal to safeguard workers, always the cry was raised that these enactments were needless restrictions upon business and that the common law provided all needed remedies.

As we have frequently shown in these columns, the reactionary of the Butler type is the complement of the reddest of radicals. Their essential doctrines are alike. Both are antidemocratic; both are for the rule of a minority—the Bolshevist for government by manual workers, the Butlers for government by the "highly intelligent and morally sensitive."

Nor must any one assume that the eminent educator's solicitude for the class he champions is a mere ebullition of platform sentiment; a harrowing scene in a New York court room last Friday showed how precious is his reasoning to "highly intelligent and morally sensitive" violators of the law. Four brothers, prominent members of New York clubs and society, pleaded guilty to bootlegging, an official stating that their operations amounted to $2,000,000 a year. All four had been indicted for selling liquor without prescribed permits, three for illegally possessing liquor withdrawn on forged permits. Lawyers as distinguished as Doctor Butler himself pleaded for them, and actually quoted in their behalf his ingenious argument that defiance of an unpopular law is an act justifiable and even virtuous. In spite, however, of their high intelligence, moral sensitiveness, and Butlerian immunization they were sentenced to jail. The court must have preferred to the Butler philosophy that of Edmund Burke:

"Men are qualified for civil liberty in exact proportion to their disposition to put moral chains upon their appetites; in proportion as their love of justice is above their rapacity; in proportion as the soundness and sobriety of their undertaking is above their vanity and presumption; in proportion as they are more disposed to listen to the counsels of the wise and the good in preference to the flattery of knaves."

It might even have called as a witness an exponent of many of Doctor Butler's reactionary views, but one who draws the line at countenancing criminality by the cultured. Thus says Justice Taft, of the United States Supreme Court:

"This is a democratic Government, and the voice of the people, expressed through the machinery provided by the Constitution, is supreme. Every loyal citizen must obey. This is the fundamental principle of free government. * * * It is dangerous doctrine for any citizen to attempt to excuse lawlessness. It is doubly dangerous when done by men in prominent positions."

While we would not deprive Doctor Butler of a single one of the degrees that give luster to his name, we must pronounce the opinion that for a highly intelligent and morally sensitive LL. D. he makes deplorable use of his honorary distinctions.

[From the War Cry, January 20, 1923.]

SHALL AMERICA GO BACK?

(By Commander Evangeline Booth.)

* * * * * * *

OVERWHELMING DRY MAJORITY.

"Who adopted prohibition? The people themselves through their Representatives in Congress and State legislatures. In Congress 347 votes were cast for submitting the eighteenth amendment to the State legislatures for ratification and 148 against. In the 46 States out of the 48 which ratified the amendment 5,084 votes were cast in the State legislatures for ratification and 1,263 against it. The total vote was 79 per cent for ratification and 21 per cent against.

"You can impress the whole situation on your mind by remembering that prohibition was 'put over' by only 46 of the 48 States in the Union, with only 98 per cent of the population and only 99¾ per cent of the area of the United States. To sum up, only two small States—Connecticut and Rhode Island—refused to ratify. Prohibition could have been no surprise to the country, for 33 States were dry by State enactment and 87.8 per cent of the area and 60.7 per cent of the population were under license law before the eighteenth amendment went into effect. How ridiculous to say that this was secured by surreptitious means!

DRINK ALWAYS LAWBREAKER.

"The second count in this indictment is:

"'Prohibition does not prohibit.'

"It is rather strange that our enemies blow both hot and cold. We hear much about the drastic nature of the Volstead Act. It seems to prohibit overmuch, and our friends say: 'We would be satisfied if they would allow light wines and beers.' Then with almost the same breath they say: 'Prohibition does not prohibit.' If it doesn't, then the 'wets' are well served. But they know it does and that every time they slake their thirst with the forbidden beverage they are breaking the law. This, in the drinker's realm, may not be looked upon as particularly bad; but then drink is always true to form, and in the days when it was legalized its devotees were the most flagrant breakers of the law in the land. Drink will not be regulated. Its lawbreaking proclivities are not new but are as old as history; be they laws of nature or laws of nations, laws of health or laws of home, laws of mind or laws of morals, the drink stands condemned—the red-handed criminal, the greatest lawbreaker in the land. So it is no new rôle for it to assume when its apologists cry, 'Prohibition does not prohibit!'

